The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] charges the Senator from Texas with ignorance about cotton. The Senator from Texas makes no pretentions about his knowledge of cotton. All the Senator from Texas knows is that he was raised on a cotton farm, and that when he was a small boy he had to get up early in the morning—much earlier than the Senator from South Carolina ever gets up [laughter]—and go into the cotton fields. Then, before we had planters, he had to drop the seed out of a bucket into a plowed row, and then help to cover it with a plow. A little later in the spring he had to go out and chop the cotton with a hoe. Then a little later, in the burning July and August sun, when the dirt was hot and his knees were sore, he had to go out with a sack dragging behind him from a strap around his shoulder, and pick the cotton out of the bolls, which made hangnails on his fingers.

Then he had to take the cotton to the gin, pull it up under an old-fashioned gin, and dig out the cotton so that the sucker could draw it into the gin. Then he had to go to town with his father to market a little bale of cotton on a wagon.

I do not know anything about cotton from the standpoint of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I never dealt with it as the owner of countless thousands of acres tilled by minions and understudies, looking at it with the vision of a great proprietor and planter. What the Senator from Texas knows about cotton is only what the humble farmer who raises it knows, and that is that when he toils at it and spends his lifetime at it he wants to sell it to those who want to use it and get something out of it, and not pile it up in planters' warehouses and accumulate a great stock of it that can be neither eaten, worn, nor used, and then say, "Oh, we do not want to sell it to foreigners."

Where have we been selling cotton all our lives except to foreigners when we could sell it to them? What is now the complaint of Senators? They say, "We have lost the foreign market," and they want to keep on losing it. They do not want to regain it. They want to kiss it good-bye. They say they will not sell cotton abroad at a price a little less than that to some of our domestic producers. Does not the foreigner have to pay freight on the cotton across 3,000 miles of ocean? After it arrives abroad, if the foreigner should ship a little dribble of it back to the United States, would he not have to pay more freight when he brings it back? And when it gets to the customhouse, does he not have to pay a tremendous tariff on the finished products?

Senators are not fair. Does not the amendment provide that the Secretary of Agriculture shall pay a bounty on exported manufactured cotton goods? That provision is for the purpose of protecting our domestic manufacturers and helping them export in competition with the rest of the world. And yet Senators hold up their hands. What alternative do they propose? Shall we repeal the loan? If we had no loan we would not have the proposed amendment before us. If we had no loan, cotton would perhaps be selling abroad at a lower price. What is keeping cotton from selling abroad? It is the loan and the fact that we have a surplus piled up. If we are to sell any of it abroad we shall have to sell it at the price the foreigner will pay for it. If he will not pay more than 4 cents, we must either sell it at that price or not sell it at all.

What is the sensible thing to do? Sit in our seats and whine and growl about it? Shall we merely sit here and complain about what we have done to the farmer and refuse to try to pull him out of the boghole? Granted that we have got him into the mire, granted that we have got him into a mess, whose business is it to pull him out? It is our job, is it not? He cannot do it himself.

I am willing to try the proposed plan. Oh, yes; I have received many telegrams against it. Senators know where such telegrams come from. We receive a dozen telegrams the same morning from a dozen places and they all read alike. We know what that means. I have received many telegrams against the proposal.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] may know more than I about the tensile strength of cotton, and the spinning of it; he may know more than I about the mercantile end of the cotton industry. He knows better than does the Senator from Texas approximately how much cotton he can obtain out of an acre with a Negro and a mule; but he does not know any more than does the Senator from Texas about how many pounds he can pick out of the bolls with his own hands. He does not know any more than does the Senator from Texas about how much sweat he can shed in a day picking cotton out in the field.

Mr. SMITH. I have picked as much cotton as has the Senator from Texas, or more than he has ever picked.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, yes; but the trouble is that the Senator has not been picking cotton. He has picked many things, but he has not picked as much cotton as has the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SMITH. I have picked more cotton out of the bolls than has the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from South Carolina has been in the Senate ever since he was legally qualified to sit in this body, and he has not had any time to pick cotton. I was picking cotton while the Senator was in the Senate and was being elected again and again on his knowledge of cotton.

I would not say these things if the Senator had not assaulted the most treasured tradition of the Senator from Texas, that he was brought up raising cotton.

Mr. President, let us approach the question in a sensible, common-sense way. What are we to do? If we do not do what is proposed, we shall do nothing. We have a surplus of 12,000,000 bales. Can we sell it at home? No; we cannot sell it at home. Nobody wants it. Can we sell it abroad? No; the price is too high. The law prohibits us from selling it abroad because we cannot sell it under 9.10 cents a pound, and the price abroad is 8.90 cents a pound. It might as well be eight anything else, because, until the price reaches 9.10, it cannot move. We are not going to sell it.

We have 12,000,000 bales more coming on. What shall we do with it? Can we eat it? No. Can we devote it to relief? No. Can we sell it abroad? No; we must not do that. Foreign buyers want it, do they not? Yes; they want it. We want to get rid of it, do we not? Yes. Why not sell it to them? No; we cannot do that. What are we to do with it? Put it in the warehouse. Put it in the warehouse for what? For our great great grandchildren to use? We have only 12,000,000 bales now in the warehouse. Put 12,000,000 more in the warehouse. Then we shall have 24,000,000 bales. Are we becoming any richer by that process? Every time we add another bale to the amount in the warehouse we drive down the price to the farmer for 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, and every following year until the surplus is wiped out. The only way to wipe out the surplus is to wipe it out; and we shall not wipe it out simply by sitting here and grouching and complaining about what has been done in the past.

Let us move some of this cotton. The only way I see at the present time to move it is to move it now by the proposed program.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] said that the proposed amendment was merely a stop-gap. If we are at sea and have a great accident to our ship, we must put out the lifeboats immediately. We cannot sit down and figure out a long-term plan of navigation and maritime policy. We cannot call the Committee on Merchant Marine into session and outline a long-term maritime policy while our ship is sinking. We must say, "Man the lifeboats and let us get to shore, and then after we get to shore we will talk about a long-term program of agricultural or shipping policy."

Senators, so far as cotton is concerned we are at sea. We are in a pretty bad mess, and the amendment is the best hope I can see for temporary relief. Then when the next session of Congress convenes we shall be glad to call in the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and hear him again and again and again and again and again, and perhaps get somewhere.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Texas said he was looking for a means by which the surplus of cotton might be moved. I should like to point out to the Senator from Texas that the head of the American Textile Institute came before the committee and suggested a means whereby it might be moved. He suggested that the price of cotton, which is now around 8½ cents, is entirely too high, and that if we could only reduce the price of cotton by 2 cents a pound or more, to make it much cheaper, the cotton might move. Despite the fact that parity for cotton is around 16 cents a pound and cotton is bringing only slightly more than 8½ cents, his suggestion was to make the market freer and more competitive, and put cotton down 2 cents a pound or more, in order that the cotton farmer might be benefited.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator; but the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] would not favor that course. He would not favor cutting the price 2 cents a pound and making the market competitive.

Let me read what one cotton leader says. Evidently there is something wrong with him:

COTTON LEADER URGES FIXED EXPORT SUBSIDY

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 6.—Adoption of a fixed cotton export subsidy to recapture the South's lost foreign markets, as opposed to a flexible subsidy, was urged in a telegram to President Roosevelt sent Saturday by Ben J. Williams, former president of the Southern Cotton Shippers' Association and of the New Orleans Association of Commerce.

This man knows that, if an inducement is given to export, export will take place.

"The United States tariff is a major obstacle to the sale of southern cotton," Williams said in his telegram. "We must offer an increased quantity of cotton in exchange for the goods of foreign nations. A subsidy on cotton exports is an obvious means for preserving foreign markets for the South's basic income crop.

"The amount of the subsidy must be fixed by Congress and not be subject to discretionary powers."

I will not read the remainder of the article, but will say that this man recognizes that in order to get back a portion of the foreign market we have got to offer them American cotton at prices that will attract them. If there is any other way of selling it abroad, I shall be thankful to have a method proposed by Senators who oppose the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I had not intended to have anything more to say, but it is necessary to call the attention of Senators to the fact that the opposition I represent is to offering American cotton below the competitive price that the markets of the world afford. This amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, in order to get American cotton on the market, shall have the right to offer it on the world market cheaper than the world price.

I wish every Senator who has heard what the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has said would bear in mind the difference between this amendment and what he has been talking about. The Senator from Texas says the way to get rid of the cotton is to sell it. That is exactly what all of us have agreed to; not to sell it in such quantities as to destroy the market, but feed it to the market as the market will take it at the competitive price, and not, under authority of law, attempt to undersell the world, no matter what the price may be. That is not necessary.

All this stuff, all this vaudeville performance, is beside the mark. This is a serious proposition; it is whether we will enter into a trade war by offering our cotton below the world price or whether we will use common sense in offering it at the world price.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator says we must not engage in a trade war. Let us suppose we have a European market, a free market—do away with all loans and everything of the kind—we are selling cotton, and here is the foreign producer selling cotton—is not that a trade war as to which one will sell it for less?

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is it if it is not competition of the sharpest kind? The buyer is going to buy the cotton he likes best at the least price.

Mr. SMITH. That is exactly it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not that a competitive, economic war?

Mr. SMITH. That is not saying to our Secretary of Agriculture, "You are to go out and offer American cotton below the market." We do not need to do that. Everyone who has any knowledge of cotton knows that the American cotton will sell at a premium in any of the world markets. It is superior in quality. All I am contending for is that we feed the surplus—substitute it for production in 1940, and also sell it for what it will bring in competition with the world market. Do not start out by saying we are going to furnish money to undersell the world. By doing so we immediately enter into a trade war.

We now have a law against dumping. We say that no other nation shall sell us any goods cheaper than they sell the same goods to their own nationals. It is now proposed that we turn around and say we will sell our cotton in America at one price and will furnish the money to undersell the world abroad. That is what we would be doing if we should adopt the amendment.

I have not said and nobody else has said that we ought to pile up surpluses and keep the cotton in the warehouses for an indefinite time. No; such a suggestion may do very well amongst the ignorant, but I do not think it can get anywhere in an intelligent body such as the United States Senate.

We have a great surplus of cotton, due, in part, to an unprecedentedly large crop; we have laws that prohibit us from a free sale; but, Mr. Hull has managed to negotiate some reciprocal- trade agreements, and the future looks brighter. I state here and now that if we will assure the cotton trade of the world that we have a fixed policy, and that we are going to stick to that policy in selling our cotton at what it will bring to the extent the trade will take it, within 30 days cotton will be a cent or a cent and a half higher a pound than it now is, but if we start out by instructing the Secretary of Agriculture to undersell the world in order to recapture our foreign market we are taking a wrong step. It is not necessary to do that. We can recapture it if we will let the world understand that we are going to put an average amount of American cotton on the market for what it will bring. If we start out, however, by saying that we propose to undersell the world, the world will meet our action, as the gentleman from Peru has said, and whenever we start such a policy, where will it end? The foreign trade will meet us, whereas now there is, as my friend from Alabama knows, a fixed relation between American cotton in the market and the foreign-produced cotton. The world market will take American hard cotton even at a premium in preference to the soft cotton produced elsewhere.

I am no more in favor of piling up cotton than is any other Senator. An emergency existed when the loan-and-storage process was inaugurated. We made a crop of 19,000,000 bales in 1 year. If we had turned it loose on the market the price would have gone very low, but now that we have the situation in hand, let us feed the cotton to the world on a free competitive scale. Let American cotton, with its fine qualities, meet the cotton of the world in the open market.

The impression has been sought to be made here that we have got to get rid of it. Of course, we have, but not tomorrow, and not by trying to undersell the world. We can sell every bale of it to the profit of the grower and the profit of the Government if we will just use common sense in disposing of it.

I cannot help but refer to the statement of the Senator from Texas that he was picking cotton when I came to the Senate. I do not think his age would justify that statement. Anyway, I have qualified as a cotton picker, but I have not qualified yet as being one who could use inconsequential things to drive a point home. The argument that I use here is, I hope, along sound economic lines, and not an attempt to use a certain form of attempted ridicule; that is a weapon that can be used by more than one, but I refuse to attempt to use it.

Mr. President, I state here now that if the pending amendment should be adopted, and we should give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to do the exporting at whatever price he should see fit, it would be the end of the cotton industry in America.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI so that he may offer a certain amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement with regard to the action of the Committee on Appropriations on this proposal.

Under the rules of the Senate, the committee could not incorporate this measure in the appropriation bill, because it is a legislative proposal. To have done so would have made the entire bill subject to a point of order, which would have resulted in the bill being recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations. For that reason, at first blush, I did not think the committee should conduct any hearings on the merits of the matter. However, at the instance of the representatives of the cotton-spinning industry and of the American Cotton Exporters' Association, the committee, after it had closed the hearings, reopened them to give those gentlemen an opportunity to present their views. They were represented by the presidents of the organizations.

The committee discussed this matter in marking up the bill. As is the custom in the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] presented the matter to the committee in order that the committee might, if it saw fit, waive the point of order that the committee itself is supposed to make against legislative proposals.

After consideration, the Committee on Appropriations voted almost unanimously—I may say overwhelmingly—to waive the point of order against this amendment in order that it might be considered on its merits on the floor. Of course, now the rule has been invoked which requires a two-thirds vote in order to consider this matter. Some members of the committee who are opposed to the proposition on its merits voted to favor suspension of the rule in order that the amendment might be considered on its merits on the floor.

As a general proposition, the rule is doubtless wise that legislative matters should not be considered on appropriation bills; but this amendment is so intimately related to the amendment which provided the appropriation of $113,000,000 for section 32 that the committee decided that in fairness to the Senator from Alabama and his proposal the Senate should vote this amendment up or down on its merits rather than defeat it on the technicality which requires a two-thirds vote to suspend the rule. The position of the committee was that the Senate should suspend the rule on this amendment in order that it might be considered on its merits, just as it would be considered if it arose on any other bill.

In the economy of time I may point out that if the rule is not suspended now, doubtless this proposal will be suggested as an amendment on some other legislative bill, and the Senate will be required to rehash the entire matter and consume a great deal of time in debate in again going over the same proposition.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia one or two questions.

Will the adoption of the Bankhead amendment increase in any way the appropriation carried in this bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, Mr. President.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall have to call attention to the fact that the Bankhead amendment makes available every dollar which has been appropriated to the Commodity Credit Corporation, and authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to pay subsidies in kind on every bale of cotton he may sell.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think my colleague is correct in that statement though it is not contemplated that power will be widely used. However, the Senator from South Carolina asked whether the proposal would increase any appropriation carried in the pending bill.

Mr. BYRNES. That is exactly my question.

Mr. RUSSELL. The proposition submitted by the Senator from Alabama does not involve an increase of one dime in the amount appropriated by the bill. A number of Senators apparently have been laboring under the misapprehension that the Bankhead proposal is in itself an appropriation item, and increases the sum total of appropriations provided in the bill. That is incorrect. It does not involve an increase of a cent in the total amount of the appropriations provided in the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

In case no appropriation should be made to carry out the provisions of section 32, has the Administration at this time power to spend money for a subsidy for exporting cotton, and has it funds available for that purpose under section 32?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, without any increase in appropriations, 25 percent of the $90,000,000 which is a permanent appropriation or allocation to the Department of Agriculture would be available for that purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. So 25 percent of $90,000,000 would be available?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would. Section 32 provides that not more than one-fourth of the total sum available under it shall be used with respect to any one commodity.

Mr. BYRNES. One more question: Is it, or not, true that the President and the Secretary of Agriculture have publicly announced that they would spend funds for that purpose?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that such a statement has been made. It certainly was my impression that the Secretary and the President both had favored this program, and doubtless would use some of the funds that are already available under section 32.

Mr. BYRNES. Assuming that that is true, is it accurate, then, to say that the Bankhead proposal is a restriction upon the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to spend funds under section 32?

Mr. RUSSELL. It was so represented when the matter was presented to the committee, and I so understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama. It is a limitation on the powers delegated by section 32.

While I am on my feet, I desire to make a very brief statement of my views on this question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, following the question asked by the Senator from South Carolina, I desire to ask another question, so that the matter may be cleared up in my own mind.

There is now available $90,000,000 to be expended under section 32, only 25 percent of which may be expended for any one crop.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Kentucky is in error. The bill as it now stands has a total of $203,000,000 available for expenditure under section 32.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am speaking about the funds available under the tariff.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct as to the permanent appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; the permanent appropriation of $90,000,000. So that they may spend 25 percent of the ninety million, if ninety million is the correct amount, for this purpose; but once the Bankhead amendment shall be agreed to, and, following that, the Committee on Appropriations shall bring in an additional appropriation and the Senate adopt it, will the Secretary of Agriculture be authorized to spend anything additional over and above the 25 percent of the ninety million?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is my understanding that, as the bill now stands, the Secretary of Agriculture could spend 25 percent of $203,000,000, with respect to any one commodity, within the limitations set forth and defined by section 32, and that authority will extend to any appropriation made in addition to the permanent allocation.

Mr. BARKLEY. That amount is not made available under the terms of section 32, but it is an additional appropriation provided for since then?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And carried in the pending bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. Under the provisions of the Bankhead amendment—and I am speaking now of the last amendment the Senator from Alabama offered—would the Secretary be authorized to take any part of any fund for export purposes, other than the $203,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. If I correctly understand the amendment, as was just stated by my distinguished colleague, the Secretary of Agriculture would be permitted to use payments of cotton in kind, out of cotton which is now in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation under the Government loan program.

Mr. BILBO. Is it not a fact that he would be permitted to use a part of the $500,000,000 provided for soil-conservation payments?

Mr. RUSSELL. As I understand the amendment, not any of the soil-conservation funds would be available for this purpose. Whether they were available or not, the Secretary of Agriculture, of course, would not use the soil-conservation funds for any such purpose, because all of those funds have already been obligated under the farm program with respect to the five basic commodities for this year.

Mr. BILBO. One other question. In the event the Secretary does not use the $203,000,000 provided for under section 32 for export purposes, can he use the $203,000,000 for any other purpose?

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not entirely understand the Senator's question.

Mr. BILBO. The Secretary has the power, as I understand, to use the $203,000,000 under section 32, the $90,000,000 already provided for and the $113,000,000 provided for in the bill, and if he does not use that for export purposes, can he use that fund for any other purpose?

Mr. RUSSELL. Most assuredly. He may use it for the purchase and distribution of any surplus commodity, if he confines the activity to the authority found in section 32, and does not exceed 25 percent of the total in dealing with any one commodity.

Mr. BILBO. He cannot use it for any other purpose except through the Surplus Commodity Corporation?

Mr. RUSSELL. He may use it for the export of wheat; he may use it for the export of lard. It is contemplated that some of these funds will be used for the export of lard and for the export of wheat, just as wheat has been exported during the current fiscal year.

Mr. BILBO. The most needy elements of our agricultural life are the vegetable growers throughout the United States. I am wondering whether the Secretary would be permitted to use a part of the $203,000,000 for the relief of the vegetable growers of the United States in the way of parity payments, or payments on an acreage basis.

Mr. RUSSELL. I might state to the Senator from Mississippi that a large part of the money will be used in purchasing surplus vegetables and fruits. The figures are set forth in the hearings, and I do not recall them now, but a large sum of money was used during the current fiscal year in the purchase of potatoes, and grapefruit, and practically all of the long list of vegetables and fruits which are produced within the United States.

Mr. BILBO. I am glad to hear that. What I want to know, however, is whether the Secretary could use any part of that fund for payments in the nature of benefit payments to the vegetable growers of the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. No part of the section 32 funds, as I understand, can be paid as benefit payments for conservation practices.

For the benefit of the Senate, I shall refresh the memories of Senators as to the provisions of section 32, which specifically enumerated the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture under this provision. The section reads:

Such sums shall be maintained in a separate fund and shall be used by the Secretary of Agriculture only to (1) encourage the exportation of agricultural commodities and products thereof by the payment of benefits in connection with the exportation thereof or of indemnities for losses incurred in connection with such exportation or by payments to producers in connection with the production of that part of any agricultural commodity required for domestic consumption; (2) encourage the domestic consumption of such commodities or products by diverting them, by the payment of benefits or indemnities or by other means, from the normal channels of trade and commerce; and (3) finance adjustments in the quantity planted or produced for market of agricultural commodities. The amounts appropriated under this section shall be expended for such of the above-specified purposes, and at such times, in such manner, and in such amounts as the Secretary of Agriculture finds will tend to increase the exportation of agricultural commodities and products thereof, and increase the domestic consumption of agricultural commodities and products thereof: Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated by this section shall be expended pursuant to clause (3) hereof unless the Secretary of Agriculture determines that the expenditure of such part pursuant to clauses (1) and (2) is not necessary to effectuate the purposes of this section.

The Senator from Mississippi will observe that the powers of the Secretary under that provision are very broad.

Mr. BILBO. The point I wish to make is that he will have power to use part of that fund to make benefit payments to vegetable growers if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. RUSSELL. On reflection, after reading the section, I am of the opinion that he would have authority to do that.

Mr. BILBO. Very well.

Mr. RUSSELL. When this cotton export proposal was first presented I did not get very particularly excited about it. It was my opinion, and I still hold to those views, in part, that no harm as great as predicted by the opponents of the program could possibly result if it is adopted. I had very slight hope that the benefits to be gained from such a program would be as comprehensive and as far-reaching as the proponents of the export proposal claimed and hoped. I did feel that the proposition might be very beneficial in some respects.

We all know that cotton is our great export crop. Undoubtedly our restriction of production program and our loan program have encouraged the production of cotton in foreign countries. Bear in mind that in 1937, the year in which we made the enormous crop of over 19,000,000 bales, the crop which contributed to the surplus which bedevils us and plagues us today, the year of our largest American crop, in that year, for the first time, foreign production exceeded American production, and the foreign countries made more cotton than the United States made. If we had had a crop failure in 1937, instead of making a bumper crop, and had pursued the policy we have pursued, there would still be a large world surplus of cotton.

Mr. President, it has been freely stated, and I have never heard it denied, that American capital, displeased with some phases of our farm program, was financing the foreign production of cotton, particularly in some of the South American countries. I believe that an export subsidy program seeking to recapture the foreign markets, which have meant so much to the entire financial progress and economy of the United States, would discourage this investment in foreign production, and would enable us to regain some of our foreign trade, which has shrunk from an average of seven and a half million bales to three and a half million bales. Believing that we might recapture this foreign market, I was favorable to the export subsidy plan. We must remove this huge surplus, which is depressing prices, before cotton can go up.

There has been very bitter opposition to this plan from the time it was first announced. Many of those who are as sincerely interested in the cotton industry as anyone on earth can possibly be see in it disaster and ruin for the cotton industry in the United States in all of its ramifications.

The textile industry has been particularly opposed to the program. The textile industry in my own State is the largest single industry there. It is the most important industry to my State, not only to the economy of the State and employment in the State, but it figures large in all of the various activities of the life of my people. Naturally I do not want to see anything done which would injure the cotton textile industry in the United States. I would be the last to do anything to hurt the cotton spinner. But, Mr. President, I cannot share the fears and apprehensions of this industry as to the effect of this export program trying to recapture foreign markets. In my opinion, the fears expressed by the cotton mills and other parts of the industry, other than the farmer, about this plan are unfounded. The fears I entertain are that cotton will be much lower this fall if some such export program is not tried.

I have considered this matter, Mr. President. The bill provides a subsidy to the cotton mills on the export of cotton goods which have been manufactured and processed equal to the amount of the subsidy on the raw cotton. Further than that, it provides a limitation of imports of cotton cloth. It has not been many months since the cotton textile industry was here clamoring to Congress for protection against the importation of foreign processed material and of textiles from Japan and from other lands. I favored that protection. True it is that the cotton textile industry has almost lost its foreign markets. I believe that its foreign market is less than 1 percent of the total amount of cotton that is spun in the United States. I believe less than that amount finds its way into foreign markets. This bill does not affect that. If something is not done the cotton farmer will find himself in the same position. The cotton exports of raw cotton are shrinking at a tremendous rate. If they had remained at the normal figure of 7,500,000 bales, the surplus would not be a problem.

Mr. President, I have heard two arguments which have been advanced against the program that is provided for in the amendment of the Senator from Alabama. One argument is that the program should be voted down and defeated because it will bring about in this country a two-price system as regards cotton. I am one of those who believe that the future of all American agriculture, not only cotton, but wheat and corn and dairy products, cattle and hogs, depend upon a two-price system. We have in this country artificial devices to protect other lines of industry. With respect to industry, artificial devices are in existence to assure a higher domestic price than the same commodity or product brings in the world markets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the difference between a two-price cotton market for raw cotton, if that is what it is, and what we have for many years in this country known as a two-price steel market, under which the manufacturers of American steel products shipped their goods abroad and sold them at prices that would be competitive with the foreign market, and in many cases cheaper than they sold it to the American consumer? For instance, take harvesting machinery. Take steel rails. In every tariff bill that has been before Congress in the last quarter of a century we have run into the situation of American producers being protected by a tariff, a matter to which the Senator referred, and who shipped their goods abroad and sold them to foreigners cheaper than they sold them to the American consumer. What is the difference between that sort of a situation and the situation envisaged by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] in regard to a so-called two-price market with respect to cotton?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am unable to see any difference, and that is one of the reasons why I am supporting this proposal. I believe in the two-price system for cotton and all other agricultural commodities. The farmer has to buy the high-priced, protected article. He is entitled to the same privileges in selling his product.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senator tell me whether the American producers of textile goods made out of the very cotton that we are talking about now likewise sell their product in foreign markets on a competitive basis and in some instances cheaper than they sell it on the American market?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not familiar with the prices in foreign markets of textiles produced in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not making that as a statement. I am wondering if that is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not familiar with the facts in that case. I do know that there is a very small exportation of the finished textile products from the United States today. But undoubtedly in selling farm machinery and most all lines of manufactured goods——

Mr. BARKLEY. And Singer sewing machines.

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly in selling those goods they are operating on a two-price system today that is protected by what we call a tariff. This unfair situation whereby the farmer buys in a protected market and sells in competition with the world has brought chaos in our agricultural economy. It makes a mockery of our boasted equality and equal rights.

Mr. BARKLEY. One of the arguments which has been made before committees of Congress, in Congress, and in public generally for reduction in the tariff on certain goods was that identical articles with those sold here were sent abroad, the freight was paid on them, as well as all the expenses of distribution, yet the producers were able to compete with foreign producers in the sale of those things at prices much cheaper than they required the American purchaser to pay.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the reason why, in justice to the farmer, not only the cotton farmer but any other agricultural producer, we either should not have any tariff system at all or we should afford to the farmer protection, or such other artificial devices to advance the price of his commodity or his income that would enable him to live and buy in a protected market on the same footing with the protected manufacturer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] if he makes no distinction between an individual selling his merchandise abroad cheaper to foreign purchasers, and the Government of the United States, which is all of the taxpayers of the United States, selling cotton merchandise cheaper to foreign purchasers than to its own citizens in the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I would make a distinction, but I do not understand that the amendment applies particularly to cotton held by the Government. Preference is given, as I understand, to free cotton in existence.

Mr. GEORGE. But the money is going to be paid out of the money of the people of the United States, every dime of it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that, but that does not seem to bear importantly on the actual question of a two-price market in the world. We have been used to that in many other commodities. The fact that the Government might contribute to it may be an unfortunate circumstance, but still it does not change the situation as to the two-market situation that we have had to deal with heretofore.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if my colleague will indulge me, it seems to me there is all the difference in the world between what individuals do, whoever enables them to do it, and what the Government of the United States does, and I am delighted and charmed that my distinguished friend, the leader, is taking a lesson out of the book of the high protectionists.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I say I was delighted that the leader was taking a leaf out of the book of the high protectionists.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not taking a leaf out of it. I have called attention on many former occasions to the injustice of the foreign consumer being able to buy the same product from an American producer at prices cheaper than the prices at which the articles were sold to the American consumer. My interjection was in order to say that if this does create what is called a two-price market for cotton it is not different from the situation which has confronted us in regard to other products for half a century.

Mr. GEORGE. I thoroughly agree with what the Senator has said, and I am going just a little further and insisting that at least the Government do not follow that practice.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I may say that the Government of the United States is today engaged in the export subsidy business. This year we have exported 100,000,000 bushels of wheat through a subsidy device. So this proposal of the Senator from Alabama will not be a new thing, because for the past 12 months the Government of the United States, out of tax funds from the common Treasury of the United States, has already engaged in exporting wheat under a plan that is similar to that which is embraced in the amendment suggested by the Senator from Alabama. We are seeking the same thing for cotton.

The Department of Agriculture, I understand, is also formulating plans for the exportation of an anticipated surplus in lard under a similar program. True it is that there is a difference between a two-price system as provided by tariffs when an individual exports at a lower price, and when the Government exports, but the Government is already exporting, so this proposition, as it affects cotton, will not set any precedent. It only places cotton on a parity with wheat and lard and is a step—a very short step—toward giving the cotton farmer a taste of the special privileges the manufacturing and industrial interests have reveled in for years.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that when the Government gives the manufacturer a tariff which enables him to sell abroad at a less price than the foreigner, the Government itself is doing it?

Mr. RUSSELL. Why of course it is an artificial device, just as this proposal provides for an artificial device to protect the cotton farmer and better his condition. Both plans spring out of governmental action. The farmer is 70 years late. He is not organized. Not until his plight is affecting all business can he be heard. Of course, the tariff is a special privilege, causing a two-price system to the detriment of the American consumer, for the benefit of a chosen group.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Georgia spoke a moment ago about the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Credit Commodity Corporation, spending some $25,000,000 as a subsidy in exporting wheat. I want to make an observation, as one who is vitally interested in the wheat problem in my section of the country, that in my humble opinion, and what I say can be corroborated by some of the best agricultural thought in my section—persons who deal in wheat—that without that export subsidy last year wheat at the present time would be selling in my section of the country at anywhere from 20 to 25 cents a bushel less than it is at the present time.

Mr. RUSSELL. The statement made by the Senator from Illinois was in substance made by witnesses before the committee, who stated that this expenditure of approximately $23,000,000 to export 100,000,000 bushels of wheat had multiplied many times the income of the wheat farmers of the Nation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Was there a single witness who appeared before the Senator's committee against the export subsidy on wheat?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not a single word was said against the export subsidy on wheat now in effect or the proposed export subsidy on lard. It was only when we came to the proposition of exporting cotton that opposition developed and witnesses appeared before the committee.

Mr. President, as I have said, in the committee it developed that the attitude of the witnesses opposing this program was largely influenced by the fact that it set up in the country what is known as a two-price system for cotton, causing cotton to sell for more in the United States than abroad. I have already briefly touched upon that point, and at this late hour I shall not tire the Senate by elaborating the reasons which I have advanced as to why there should be a two-price system for cotton. However, I should like to point out that if there is any group in the Nation, other than the cotton farmers, which is expected to sell in a free and competitive market, in competition with the coolie labor of China, the peon labor of Mexico, and the low standard of living of the peon cotton producers in South America, and buy in a protected market, I have yet to hear of it.

We have a tariff on wheat of 42 cents a bushel. Today wheat is selling in this country at 20 or 25 cents more per bushel than the price on the Liverpool exchange. We have a two-price system for wheat in this country, and so far as I know, no complaint has been made. There is a tariff on corn. There is a tariff on beef. There is a tariff on pork. There is a tariff, or some artificial protection or stimulation, for every single, solitary product of mill, mine, and field in the country of which I know anything, except cotton. The cotton farmer has been cut adrift to shift for himself, alone and unprotected, in an economic sea wherein all with whom he does business are protected and subsidized.

Mr. President, there is one other thing: The only suggestion that was made before the committee for relief to the cotton producer was to cut the price of cotton. Today cotton is selling for 8½ cents a pound. The representatives of the textile industry opposed to the proposal to subsidize exports have the suggestion to make that we must make cotton cheaper in order to move the surplus. I could read several references from the hearings in which that view was reflected. I shall refer to only two of them. On page 26 of the supplemental hearings, Dr. Murchison, the head of the textile institute, said:

> We have got to keep cotton cheap.

Cotton is now selling for less than half of parity, for less than the cost of production, with the cotton farmers living in abject misery and poverty. They would be actually in privation and starvation but for the pitiful benefit payments which they receive from the hands of their Government.

On page 29, Dr. Murchison made this suggestion, which will be found by reference to the hearings:

> Cotton would be helped very materially by a decline of 2 cents a pound.

There we have the suggestion that the price of cotton in the United States, where the cotton farmer buys in a protected market everything that he needs, ought to be put down to 6½ cents a pound. This could only accentuate the distress of the lowest income group in the United States, the cotton farmers.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Dr. Murchison said that cotton would be helped. He did not say that the cotton farmer would be helped.

Mr. RUSSELL. He said that cotton would be helped. However, it appears from Dr. Murchison's testimony that he was not considering the interest of the cotton farmer alone. In fairness to him, it should be said that his testimony before the committee was to the effect that the cotton exchange would be wiped out if we adopted any subsidy program, in addition to the fears he entertained for the cotton spinners.

Mr. BYRNES. Does not the Senator think that the cotton farmer will be wiped out if we do not do something?

Mr. RUSSELL. The cotton farmer is already practically wiped out.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask my colleague if Dr. Murchison did not say that the subsidy should be paid directly to the farmer, so as to bring his price up to what he would receive under the program as it now stands?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. Dr. Murchison did testify that he would like to see an increase in the subsidy payments made directly to the farmer; but when asked if he would be willing to approve a processing tax to obtain the money to make the payments, the doctor threw up his hands in holy horror and said, "No; the money must be obtained somewhere else." So the committee, not having any power to levy taxes, and knowing of no means of obtaining the revenue other than through a processing tax, was compelled to consider that Dr. Murchison's plan did not have any substantial chance of enactment by the Congress. I am for a proposal to subsidize the cotton farmer such as is contemplated by the Smith bill, but no one has much hope of passing it due to the cost.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask my colleague if the committee did not succeed in finding some money to give to the foreign purchaser of the cotton?

Mr. RUSSELL. We have funds which can be used to subsidize exports, if my colleague calls that subsidizing the foreign purchaser.

Mr. GEORGE. That is subsidizing the foreign purchasers, of course.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is, in a measure. It is an effort to recapture our foreign markets. We found the funds in the same place from which the money came to subsidize the exports of wheat, and thereby keep the price of wheat in the American market at 20 to 25 cents above the price of wheat in Liverpool. We want to do the same thing for the cotton farmer. If we lose our foreign markets the acreage planted to cotton will be cut in half.

Mr. President, as I stated at the outset, I did not become very much concerned about this proposal when it was first advanced, because I did not think it was as material as both its advocates and its opponents claimed. But when we have a proposal to break down the domestic price of cotton to the American farmer to the low price of 6½ cents a pound, with no tangible means to subsidize him to make up for that loss of income, I do become concerned, and gravely concerned. I become concerned because I know that every set of statistics that can be found will disclose that the cotton farmers are the lowest-income group in the United States. It is a tribute to their tenacity, to their endurance, to their ability to exist on branch water and maypops that they have been able to survive through all the years in a free and competitive market when selling their products, while paying tribute to a two-price system in all their purchases.

The cotton farmers are the only producers in the United States who have no protection. They are forced to compete with rayon and other new textile fibers. They are forced to compete with jute in an ever-rising tide, with no protection afforded them, because the Congress listens to the pleas of the jute lobby and the jute trust when that question is brought forward and we try to protect them. The cotton farmer cannot stand any further reduction in the market price of cotton or in his acreage and production without much larger subsidies; and the only hope I can see to assist him is through the proposal before us. This seems to be the only proposal that the Congress of the United States is willing to consider.

Mr. President, something has been said about the effort which is required by a cotton farmer to produce a bale of cotton. I sometimes think that those of us who live in the cotton country and who are dulled by familiarity with living standards of the cotton farmer to his real status in life—and when I say cotton farmer I mean the man who actually produces it with his own hands—when we see him and his wife and children toiling in the field day after day, do not realize how hopeless his situation is, and how discriminated against he has been for so many years. We have legislation to abolish the sweat shop and to stop child labor. When we go down to the cotton fields of the South we find every child who is large enough to carry a hoe out in the cotton fields chopping cotton from the break of day until it is too dark to see whether or not he is chopping up the stalks. We see mere babies dragging cotton sacks down the rows, picking cotton under the hottest sun in this country. Then, when the year's work is done, many a cotton farmer does not have more than $100 or $150 in cash to pay him and his entire family for a year of unremitting toil.

Mr. President, the pending proposal may not work any wonders. It may not have all the virtues we would like for it to have; but it is one which the President of the United States has said he would approve. It is one which the Secretary of Agriculture today advocates, without regard to what his position may have been in some speech he made last fall. As I see it, it is the one last chance to do something for the most underprivilged people in the United States today, the one last chance to attempt to provide a decent price for this great commodity, which has built the wealth of the United States, because it has been our one great export through all the years. It is the one last chance to avoid cheap cotton this fall and give the cotton farmer a small measure of the privileges others have enjoyed for years.

For my part, though I realize the result may be in some doubt, and knowing that the proposal has powerful opposition, I am willing to embrace that chance, and I hope the Senate will suspend the rule and give all of its Members a chance to vote either for or against the amendment on its merits. I appeal to the sense of fairness of those who are opposed to the merits of the proposition to vote to suspend the rule in order that the Senate may pass judgment on the proposal on its merits, just as it passes judgment on any other proposal which comes up on a legislative bill.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I had intended to make the closing argument on this subject; but the question has been so well presented on both sides and so thoroughly discussed that, recognizing the present temper of the Senate, I am not going to take any further time.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES AND PROPAGANDA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 16), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2, current Congress, entitled "Investigation of Un-American Activities and Propaganda," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 22,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the concurrent resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot conclude today the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill without holding the Senate in session later than usual. Therefore, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, May 11, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 10, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of this troubled world, with its disturbing and subversive forces, as we lift our praying eyes to Thee, show us the power that makes men free. The throb of its surging life needs anew the pressure of Thy pierced hands. Let Thy pleading spirit that flows from Thine infinite heart work its way in bringing vital forms of faith, hope, and courage to all the elements of Christian civilization. Notwithstanding the darkness of the earthly atmosphere, the fogs and the vapors which rise from its valleys, we humbly entreat Thee to extend our horizon that we may see a glorious future gleaming through gates ajar. O Thou who didst feed the loveless, whose gentle hand led the blind, redress the human hearts which are in anguish on the breast of Mother Earth. In the name of the Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The address referred to follows:

ADDRESS BY R. M. EVANS, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT, BEFORE THE MILLERS' NATIONAL FEDERATION AT CHICAGO, ILL., MAY 10, 1939

You have asked me to speak today on the commercial aspects of the wheat loan program. However, the loan is only one part in the Government's comprehensive program for wheat farmers, and without consideration of the essentials of the entire program, we cannot grasp the significance of the loan itself. We have to remind ourselves why we have such a program. Before doing that, however, I wish to emphasize that growing wheat and milling flour are all part of the continuous process of providing food for our people. Farmers and millers are part of the same industry. The fact that you have asked me to come here and the fact that I am here are an expression of agriculture's good-neighbor policy.

Things happen so fast in the modern world that even those, like you, who have yourselves been part of the great changes affecting the wheat industry, are in constant danger of forgetting how serious was the crisis, how real was the need, which caused the wheat farmers of America to realize that they must unite in a program and call on all elements in the wheat industry, and upon the Government, for help in carrying it out.

In other words, no man is going to understand the program unless he first understands the problem. The problem produced the program as surely as wheat flour comes from wheat.

Briefly, when the wheat-adjustment program was first launched in 1933, wheat farmers had found themselves producing more wheat and using more machinery and fewer men to do it. They had found that domestic consumption was not keeping pace with increased production. They had found more and more countries abroad determined not to buy American wheat. Stated concisely, this didn't sound like a problem; it sounded like a calamity—a catastrophe; and that's exactly what it was and what it will be, if the wheat industry doesn't stick together to solve it.

You can amuse your imagination any way you like. You can look back at all the good old days when expanding markets took care of an expanding agriculture. You can lull yourself with the false hopes of farm-relief panaceas. But in the end—and I want to emphasize this—you come right back up against the stubborn fact that the American farmer has to adjust his farm plant to the actual situation which he faces today.

As millers, your business is to buy wheat and to sell flour and to do this at a profit. The farmer's business is to grow wheat and to sell it to the men who mill it. He, too, hopes to do this at a profit.

First, as to the problem, the United States wheat farmer in the 1930's has been face to face with conditions he has never before known. Forces over which the United States farmer has had little or no control have assailed him from all sides. World political and trade factors have reached into the Wheat Belt. Without mercy, they have determined his return for providing a hungry world with food. He has been caught in a world-wide economic storm.

Nationalism, with its trade barriers; the change of the United States from a debtor to a creditor nation; and the growing competition from foreign producers have cut the American export wheat market. As an individual, the farmer cannot match such forces.

Some of these new conditions have resulted from changes in agriculture itself. Farming today is no more like it was half a century ago than a modern flour mill is like the old-fashioned grist mill. But even though agriculture of today has made mechanical advances as great as those of industry, many farmers and, I regret to say, many business and industrial leaders of our country still continue to think of agriculture in terms of past situations and not in terms of things as they are. The good old days we hark back to are gone. Our hope lies in looking ahead to good new days.

Business was simple in the old grist-mill days. There wasn't much dealing through the middleman. But as time went on the mill on the little stream became too small. Our economy developed into the specialized forms we have today and the milling industry grew to its present proportions.

The same period and conditions which brought this great development in milling had much the same effect on the farmer. His business has changed nearly as much. Look, for example, at wheat production half a century ago and compare it with what we have today.

Back in 1888 United States farmers harvested 35,000,000 acres of wheat. In 1938 they had doubled this acreage. Half a century ago the wheat production in this country was 424,000,000 bushels and last year this had been more than doubled with a 931,000,000-bushel crop. In 1888 wheat farmers sold their crop for an average of about 93 cents a bushel. In 1938 they got 55 cents.

The milling industry has changed, too, but always you have carefully guided your production by your outlets. Inspired by that energetic enterprise which has characterized the growth of America, you have developed your industry and expanded your profitable markets. But you know better than anyone else that the per capita bread consumption in the United States probably fluctuates less than that of any other single commodity. You know that if you mill more flour than you can sell your warehouses soon will clog with flour that you will have to sell at a loss. You wisely keep your hand on the expansion brake. The same is true of the bakers of bread.

Not so with the farmer. For decades it has been the farmer's philosophy to produce all that he could because he has always had a market for his products. Even after times changed and his markets stopped expanding, he didn't have the brake to stop his production machine. As a matter of fact, his fixed charges have often forced him into a vicious circle that found him vainly trying to jack up his volume fast enough to offset falling prices. So far it hasn't worked.

As long as he was producing for an expanding market, his prices were comparatively good. During the war days he got more than 80 cents out of every dollar's worth of flour wholesaled. Through the twenties he continued to get better than 70 cents out of that dollar. But by the early thirties he found himself facing tremendous surpluses. His price went down so that by 1932 he was getting only 44 cents out of the flour wholesale dollar.

In the cycles of the last 20 years he has seen his share of the dollar spent by the consumer for bread vary from 35 cents to 9 cents.

The farmer discovered that while he was working to feed the world more abundantly, he had been doing it at the cost of the fertility of his soil and a lower standard of living for himself and his family.

Such are some of the changing conditions. What are the causes? Two of the major factors which make the farm problem are:

First, our production has gone up.

Second, our markets have shrunk. Our big farm plant has been geared to a large foreign trade in wheat. World forces beyond our control have slashed this market. Our domestic market has remained fairly constant.

The problem which these two factors have to such a large extent created, can be summed up in one word—surplus.

This surplus is concrete evidence that new conditions have thrown our agriculture out of balance. It is a clear danger signal and a warning that we must make fundamental adjustments.

I have reviewed the problem, and I want to repeat: Once the problem is really considered, you come right back up against the stubborn fact that the American farmer has to adjust his farm plant to the actual situation which he faces today. That is why we have a farm program.

Underneath the visible evidence of the surpluses lie the roots of the farm problem and the suggestions for solving it. These roots may be summed up in the words "income and soil fertility." Farmers must have an income which will hold up their standard of living. They must be permitted a system of farming that will not force them to rob their soil of its fertility.

Surpluses of agricultural products mean less net farm income and low income forces a ruthless waste of soil fertility.

There comes a time in the life of nations when important decisions are made profoundly affecting the welfare of groups of their citizens. England made such a decision when she repealed the corn laws in the nineteenth century. At that time she legislated against her relatively uneconomic agricultural class and encouraged imports of foodstuffs in order to concentrate upon industrial exports.

America has made no such decision. America recognizes that agriculture is the bedrock of our democracy and has resolved that the farmer shall not be sacrificed in our industrial civilization. Let me quote from Prof. Charles A. Beard:

"There was a time, not many years ago, when writers on economics and public policies seemed to imagine that the United States was destined to follow the lines of British development—that manufacturing industry would continue to expand, while agriculture would be reduced to a smaller and smaller role in the affairs of the country. Books on industrial economy multiplied, outstripping in number and weight of thought treatises on land economy. For a brief time after the World War experience seemed to confirm the prophecy. An upward swing in American loans abroad was followed by an increased export of manufactured goods. The proportion of agricultural produce in the total export kept on its downward trend. Thus decided countenance was given to the old idea that agriculture was destined to drop in pecuniary and cultural importance and that urban industry was bound to rise indefinitely, if not forever.

"Now the outlook for ever-expanding outlets abroad to absorb the ever-expanding potentials of manufacturing industry is clouded and the idea of endless urbanization fades. The very course of events has forced a reconsideration of the place of agriculture in the United States—as a way of life, as a source of enlarged buying power, and as a cornerstone of democratic liberties. With growing insistence the thought of industrialists and statesmen is directed to the new turn in American affairs. The Federal Government, which for generations has favored manufacturing and shipping by tariffs, subsidies, bounties, and technical assistance, now grapples with the problem of an economic balance, seriously and tenaciously. And as foreign economies are being transformed, it is likely that the landward trend in American thought and practice will take on increasingly the character of an unavoidable necessity."

That is the end of the quotation from Professor Beard.

The Triple A and related agricultural programs are the symbols of this American policy. This policy, as expressed by the Triple A program, is based upon soil conservation and a better income for the farmer.

But just as there are many factors in the problem facing the farmer, so the program has many parts, all of them working in combination.

With this well-founded program the farmer is prepared to meet the changed conditions I have outlined. With this program he has the tools for a modern business approach to the complex problems of modern agriculture.

For the surplus problem, the farmer has the tools of acreage allotments, marketing quotas, the export sales program, surplus purchases for relief, and a program for finding new uses.

For the problem of protecting the food supply for both the consumer and himself, the farmer has the tools of crop insurance, loans, marketing quotas, and the ever-normal granary.

For the problem of farm income, the farmer has acreage allotments, parity payments, conservation payments, loans, and a program which calls for a study of freight rates in farming areas.

For the problem of soil conservation, the farmer has payments for soil-building practices, as well as acreage allotments, which help him to lessen wastes of soil and labor in useless overproduction.

In general, this program gives the farmer the power to adjust agriculture so as to protect the soil and the people who live upon it, and thereby the welfare of the Nation.

Woven into every part of the Triple A program is the ever-normal-granary principle, which aims at continuance and permanent abundance. The ever-normal granary protects the wheat farmer against surpluses and low income and protects the consumer against scarcity. It has its advantages for millers, too. You are not speculators, but processors. Assurance of a stable and ample supply from year to year at fair prices is good for millers, consumers, farmers.

The wheat loan program is an essential part of the ever-normal granary. The loan is intended to help the farmer store his wheat when supplies are large and prices low. It is both a stop-loss measure and a measure to give the farmer greater freedom in marketing his crop.

In the past farmers have been one of the few groups which have had to market an entire year's output at one time. On many occasions they have been forced to sell their wheat at harvest time regardless of price. The wheat loan program gives the farmer any benefit there may be in storing the wheat at harvest time for better prices later.

We are approaching the end of the first year of operation of the wheat loan program. About 85,000,000 bushels were placed under loan by some 77,000 wheat farmers last fall. Of this total about 75 percent was in commercial storage and about 25 percent was in farm storage. To build up the ever-normal granary of hard wheats, we are offering farmers in the major hard wheat areas an opportunity to extend their loans for a 10-month period. For wheat of which there is normally a considerable surplus, we are now in the process of liquidating the loans which were made last fall. By April 19, nearly 10,000,000 bushels had been released upon payment of nearly $5,000,000. The farm storage loans do not fall due until May 31, while the commercial storage loans become payable at various dates up to July 31, depending upon the date the loan was made.

Several options are open to the borrower in settling his loan.

First, he may pay up his note and get his wheat, and, in the case of farm storage, he can collect the 7 cents a bushel for storing the wheat on his farm.

Second, he may extend the loan. As I have pointed out, this is open only on farm storage wheat in some areas.

Third, he may buy back his wheat from the Commodity Credit Corporation at the market price. This option enables him to get the benefit of any protein premium his wheat may bring upon resale. The 7-cents-a-bushel storage fee is paid on farm storage, and, in the case of a commercial storage loan, allowance is made in the borrower's favor to cover the storage charges.

Fourth, he may merely turn the wheat over to the Commodity Credit Corporation. Here again the borrower can collect his fee for storing on the farm. If the wheat is in commercial storage the producer may turn it over without further charge.

Under a plan announced last month, the Commodity Credit Corporation will dispose of all wheat it takes over to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. This wheat, except for a small amount to be used for domestic relief purposes, will then become part of the stocks available for future exports.

In special cases, if the wheat received by the F. S. C. C. is of types needed for domestic milling or is of low quality, it will be exchanged for other wheat which is suitable for export.

The wheat loan will continue to be a part of the A. A. A. farm program whenever the crop is large or the price low. The act provides that loans are to be offered whenever the farm price of wheat falls below 52 percent of parity or the July crop estimate of wheat is in excess of a normal year's domestic consumption and exports. Only in years when marketing quotas are proclaimed and not approved by growers does the law specifically prohibit the operation of a loan program for that year.

I have thus far reviewed the main points of the A. A. A. program. The present season is the first that the program as a whole has been in full operation. Acreage adjustment measures are now being applied to some crops, notably wheat, for the first time since 1935. These measures were added to the agricultural conservation program with the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 in February of last year. The act was not passed until after some crops, especially wheat, had been seeded.

The 1939 program goes into operation in the face of surpluses piled up during the years when farmers had no effective machinery for adjusting the acreage of individual crops. In this period our national wheat acreage reached an all-time high of 81,000,000 acres. What the farmers will do when they have the chance and how effective the allotment provisions can be is shown by the record that wheat farmers are making this year.

This year wheat acerage is less than 66,000,000 acres. This is 14,000,000 acress less than was seeded in 1938, and represents the greatest adjustment in wheat acreage ever made in any two consecutive years in our history.

Wheat farmers have shown that they will adjust their acreage when the situation demands it if they have effective machinery for doing it.

In the meantime surplus wheat has harassed farmer and trade alike. We have seen total world exports drop from 950,000,000 bushels 10 years ago to 550,000,000 bushels last year. Our own exports, due in large part to manipulations of other countries, dwindled to almost nothing. We have met this situation. We regained our share of the export market last year. We used the powers given by the A. A. A. Act to bring exports up to 100,000,000 bushels and more through aid of subsidies.

We fitted our action to the situation. It is the rule of business to do this. The business world is strewn with the wrecks of businesses whose managers could not adapt themselves to changing conditions.

Last December, at Winnipeg, I outlined our wheat export program. This policy was undertaken to meet the world wheat-trade conditions throughout the world. As such this policy remains the same today as it was in December. I will quote from my remarks at that time:

"Faced with the extreme situation of 1938, it has been necessary for the United States Government to embark upon a much broader export program than was necessary during previous years. The United States is financing the operation of exporters who find it necessary to sell to buyers in other countries at prices lower than the current market prices paid to domestic producers. This program, however, aims to export 100,000,000 bushels, which represents a little less than 20 percent of the estimated net exports of all countries for the 12 months ending June 30, 1939. In view of the fact that the United States exported an average of 31 percent for the 5 years 1920–24 and 20 percent for the 5 years 1925–29, this objective for the current year appears entirely reasonable.

"The program is designed to maintain for the United States a fair share of the reduced world wheat trade in the face of direct intervention by the governments of all other wheat-exporting countries. In this export operation we are looking toward the maintenance of returns to wheat producers in the United States while at the same time facilitating wheat exports. It is the sincere hope of our people that governmental financing of exports is only a temporary measure and that some way will be found to bring about sufficient improvement in the world wheat situation so that such action will not be necessary on the part of our Government and the governments of other wheat-exporting countries."

That is the end of the quotation from my Winnipeg talk.

Since I made this statement last December, the United States has continued to make its wheat competitive in the world markets. With this program we have up to the present sold for export during the 1938–39 crop year more than 100,000,000 bushels of wheat or wheat in the form of flour, and about three-fourths of this amount has moved under our export subsidy.

Our export policy has served notice to other wheat-producing countries of the world that we are not going to give up our export markets. I repeat that the export subsidy is not a measure the Government or the farmer wants or should use permanently. We hope international action may help the situation. At the present time in London, representatives from the world wheat-producing countries, including the United States, are studying proposals for cooperative action. They hope to end this necessity of buying export markets. What definite program will come of the conference remains to be seen, but it is the first step toward an agreement which must come if the wheat-producing countries of the world are going to be able to continue in the export business on a profitable basis.

The London conference shows a growing recognition that a wheat surplus is an international as well as a domestic problem. It is international recognition of governmental responsibility in the problem.

Governments are not alone in recognizing the need for stabilizing the incomes of farmers. Industry both in this country and abroad is rapidly becoming aware of the interdependence of agriculture and industry. For example, the Chamber of Commerce of Birmingham, England, early this year issued a memorandum which I believe presents a clear understanding of the fundamental problems affecting the agricultural and industrial welfare.

"Is there any reason," asks this group of Birmingham businessmen, "why the agriculturalist should not be on an equality with the manufacturer in the matter of maintaining a command on the selling price of his products?"

They go on to the heart of the problem by saying: "Today there is no assurance of any balance in exchange values of * * * agricultural for * * * manufactured goods, for the reason that prices of the latter remain fairly constant due to the automatic control of supply to demand, whereas prices of the former fluctuate violently due to the absence of control of supply."

In suggesting an answer to that problem, they declare: "The point now arises as to whether agricultural production can be controlled. It is submitted that it can be, and, if for no other reason, that it must be. The present position is illogical and its indefinite continuance cannot be contemplated in view of the recurring want and misery that accompanies it."

This statement of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce is significant because it comes from a group which represents one of the most important industrial communities in the world.

A recent statement of policy made by the National Association of Manufacturers is an indication that thinking business leaders in the United States also have a growing understanding of the close kinship between agriculture and industry.

The association's committee on agricultural cooperation declared that:

"It is essential to the welfare of manufacturing industry that the farmers receive fair prices for what they produce." They added:

"It seems to us there are but two ways to achieve an equitable price relationship—bring manufacturing prices down or farm prices up."

This report shows a considerable advance in thinking among our industrial leaders. This understanding attitude toward the farmer speaks well for the future of the farm program.

Likewise, agriculture has a friendly attitude toward business. The Triple A farm program is built upon business lines. As I have shown, it benefits business and all classes of people. It is fixed in our policy that we shall assist the normal processes of business. Our program has been developed in the light of accepted American business practice.

A businesslike farm program requires businesslike financing. Processing taxes can be used to help get the fair prices and buying power advocated by these British and American industrial groups. The processing tax under the old A. A. A. program did the job. There has been some discussion about adding the processing tax feature to the present program. It has been one of many plans considered among farm leaders and in Congress.

As I summarize I wish to point out that the agricultural policy on which the United States has embarked is receiving widespread endorsement. Participation in the 1939 Triple A program is breaking all previous records. Nearly 6,000,000 farmers have indicated their intention to cooperate with each other and with the Government in this broad program this year. This endorsement of agricultural policy extends to other groups as well. A recent poll conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicated that a cross section of American opinion places agricultural benefits with social security and national defense as proper Federal expenditures. The poll indicated that 62 percent of our people do not favor reducing farm benefit payments.

Let me repeat six of the points I have made in my talk to you.

First. The wheat program is the American response to a real wheat problem.

Second. Conservation of our soil resources and the protection of our farm income are the foundation of our farm program.

Third. The ever-normal granary protects the farmer, the consumer, and the trade.

Fourth. The wheat loan extends to farmers the benefits of the common business practices of orderly marketing.

Fifth. The export sales policy is an emergency measure to be used only as long as necessary to insure the United States its fair share of world markets.

Sixth. The Triple A program will continue to be administered so as to assist the normal processes of private business.

In conclusion, I state my opinion that this is the best piece of farm legislation ever enacted in this country. It is not a political accident but an economic development of years in the making. It is a loan of Federal power to farmers to use for the welfare of the Nation as well as in their own interests. It is a workable program, and it is working.

THE JOHN MARSHALL STATUE

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, removing the statue of John Marshall from the Capitol Grounds to the immediate vicinity of the Municipal Court Building of the District of Columbia would seem a Hollywood fantasy if it were not now seriously proposed in the Congress of the United States.

A proposal is now pending to erect the Ward statue of Washington in the Capitol Grounds apparently on the site now occupied by the statue of John Marshall on the west front or back side of the Capitol. I refer to H. R. 6158. With this proposal I am not here concerned except as the same bill proposes to demote John Marshall to the municipal court.

Since the recent court episode it would seem time that John Marshall was given the permanent place in the Capitol that properly belongs to him as one of the makers of our Nation and as the one who above all others symbolizes the place of the judiciary in the Government of the United States.

H. R. 6158 was introduced in the House 1 month after the introduction by myself of House Joint Resolution 260, proposing to place the statue of John Marshall in the vicinity of the Supreme Court Building.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], chairman of the Labor Committee, notified the House that she expects to bring to the House floor for consideration her bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. She also advised that the bill would be brought up under a suspension of the rules. It is to this situation that I want to direct my criticism this morning.

I do not believe it is fair to the membership of the House that such an important piece of legislation, in which we are all interested and in which the country is vitally interested, should be brought to the floor in this manner. In bringing this bill up under a suspension of the rules, there will be little chance for debate and no chance whatever on the part of the membership of the House to offer amendments.

I can hardly understand why legislation affecting a question of such great importance to the people of this country should be brought to the floor under a rule which prevents the Members of Congress from offering any amendments thereto and from giving them a fair chance to discuss the merits of the bill.

It is not altogether the measure to which I direct my criticism this morning, but it is the manner in which legislation of such great importance is being submitted to Congress. I am quite sure the membership of the House will not want to turn down all of the legislation that is offered under this bill. In all probability it contains some legislation that ought to be passed. But it comes to the floor of the House without having been submitted to public hearings. The farm organizations, the National Grange, the Farm Bureau, and other organizations have not, as I understand it, had a chance to be heard on amendments that they have proposed to the present wage-hour law. Certainly these organizations, as well as the farmers and other groups throughout the country, are entitled to be heard on the merits of legislation of such great importance. Certainly the Members of Congress ought to have a right to submit amendments to this proposed legislation if they want to do so. If the amendments submitted are not what the House wants, they can be rejected. But it is only fair to all parties interested and concerned, and especially to the people whom the Members represent, that they be given a chance to speak on this bill and offer amendments if they desire to do so. We do it in other cases. Why impose the "gag" rule in the consideration of such an important piece of legislation in which the country is so much interested? We have spent hours debating matters of much less importance, but on next Monday we are going to pass this bill with debate of less than an hour and without permission to offer any amendments, and we will be required to vote the bill up or down, with no choice in the matter. I submit to you, Members of the House, that it is not the proper method of legislation. It is not fair, and you know it.

ARKANSAS-MISSISSIPPI BRIDGE COMMISSION

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 964) creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. CHAPMAN. This is a unanimous report from the conference committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the change?

Mr. CHAPMAN. The principal difference between the two bills as passed by the respective Houses of Congress is as to the amortization period for the bonds. The bill as passed by the Senate provided 30 years, then authorized a refunding for an additional 20 years. The House provided that maturity of the original bonds should be 20 years and any refunding bonds 30 years from the date of the approval of the act. The result of the conference, as reported back, is that the bill would provide the original bonds would mature in not less than 25 years from the date of the approval of the act, and any refunding bonds, if issued, shall mature within 40 years from the date of the approval of the act. That is the principal difference.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 964) creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing said commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 4.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "thirty", insert the word "forty"; and the House agree to the same.

VIRGIL CHAPMAN,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.
HATTIE W. CARAWAY,
JOHN H. OVERTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 964) creating the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission; defining the authority, power, and duties of said Commission; and authorizing said Commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Friar Point, Miss., and Helena, Ark.; and for other purposes, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments. The bill, as agreed to in conference, provides that the bonds issued for the cost of the bridge shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 25 years from their respective dates as the Arkansas-Mississippi Bridge Commission shall determine and authorize the issuance of refunding bonds to repurchase and redeem any outstanding bonds before the maturity thereof, with the provision that the refunding bonds shall mature at such time or times, not exceeding 40 years from the date of the approval of this act, as the commission may determine. The bill as it originally passed the Senate provided that the maturity date of the bonds originally issued should not exceed 25 years. The House amendment changed that period from 25 to 20 years. The Senate bill provided that the life of the refunding bonds, if any, should not exceed 50 years from the date of approval of this act. The House changed that period from 50 to 30 years. The conference recommends that the life of the original bonds shall not exceed 25 years and that the final maturity of any refunding bonds that may be issued shall not exceed 40 years from the date of approval of this act.

The conference agreed to the House amendments striking out a provision of the Senate bill providing for the exemption from tolls of officials or employees of the commission, officials of the Government of the United States, members of fire departments or peace officers on official business, and armed forces of the United States.

The conference agreed to the language of the bill as it originally passed the Senate, which provides for the adjustment of rates of tolls to provide a fund to not exceed the amount necessary for the maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and approaches under economical management until such time as the bridge may be accepted by the States of Arkansas and Mississippi, or some municipality or agency of such States duly authorized by law to accept such bridge, the bridge thereafter to be maintained, operated, and repaired as a free bridge.

VIRGIL CHAPMAN,
PEHR G. HOLMES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1515. An act for the relief of the Louisiana National Bank of Baton Rouge and the Hibernia Bank & Trust Co. of New Orleans.

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House may stand in recess for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess for 30 minutes.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 12:50 p. m.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, on the 20th of January I addressed the House on the responsibility of Congress, and in review I quote this paragraph:

> The people should now take the law into their own hands by insisting that all departments in the Federal Government adhere to the Constitution; that all laws enacted in conflict with the Constitution be repealed, one by one, so that the people's rights may be restored. That will start the wheels of industry going, furnish employment, increase consumption, build prosperity, and return the American smile to our people.

In the following issues of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 20, 23, 30; February 7, 14, 16, 22, 23, and 27; March 6, 7, 9, 16, 21, 22, and 29; April 4, 13, 17, 20, 21, and 25; May 1 and 8, 1939, appear certain articles dealing with problems which are responsible for the deplorable condition in which we find our Nation and industrial structure today. In writing these articles I have attempted to set forth not only my own opinion but the opinions of others, which I believe are pertinent and applicable to problems which we will be called upon to solve in the near future. To those who seem to be apprehensive of exposure because of the opinions expressed by myself, I want to say that I hold no malice toward anyone; yet if a choice is to be made, I shall not be diverted by special pressure groups, but I shall, instead, adhere to my obligation as I understand it in the defense of the fundamental principles of the Republic.

In further clarification of my position, and so that there will be no misunderstanding in regard to my attitude or principles, I can only say that I stand without fear, evasion, or reservation for the sovereign rights of the States and the rights of the people as expressed in the tenth amendment, in which they, after having delegated certain restricted powers to the Federal Government, reserve all remaining power and rights to the States and to themselves. This is only logical because it is the type of government promulgated in the Constitution and the only form of popular government that will stand stress and survive. The founders were aware of this so they provided in article IV:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government, shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the legislature or of the Executive (when the legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

This does not say "the United States Government," which seems to be the prevailing popular interpretation, but it says instead, the United States shall guarantee each other protection. This is very important, because it carries with it the very life of our Government, namely, the supreme sovereign powers of all these United States. This power is now destroyed and if the Republic of the United States is to be saved, this power must be restored to the States.

My only interest in making these statements is to warn the people to save the Republic before it is too late.

The Constitution carries a provision which will take care of individual offenders. This provision, in article III, section 3, should be used to paint a sign reading "Treason" for those who do not adhere to the fundamental basic principles as set forth in the Constitution. This power is impeachment. It is a harsh word, but we have sworn "to preserve, to protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States," and it is a solemn obligation. The safety of the Republic comes first and last.

The Socialist and his ilk wave the flag. The true patriot should nail the Stars and Stripes to the masthead as a symbol of freedom of all the United States forever and forever.

President Washington, in his Farewell Address to Congress, gave much sound advice, and in comparing the greater soundness of the Constitution with the Articles of Confederation he said:

> Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. * * * Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. * * * The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. * * *

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position.

This should set right any doubt as to intent, but if there is any question of uncertainty in the understanding of the Constitution, amendment IX prevails:

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

This amendment was incorporated in the Constitution to assure greater protection for the people and to inform the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary departments that they must hew to the line when tempted by the Socialist to widen the meaning of the document itself.

Upon further reading of the Constitution, it will be found that article I, section 1, to and including section 8, enumerates specific powers delegated to Congress, and for which no provision of transfer is made in the document itself. This is important, for we find in section 1:

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

In the wording of this section, the word "shall" is a definite command to Congress, to which, unfortunately, it has not adhered. Upon further reading, we find in section 8, "The Congress shall have power—" which again expresses a definite command that Congress "shall" carry out those provisions found in article I, section 8, of the Constitution. As we read this section, we find that there is no provision made for the transfer of this regulatory power to anyone or to any department. This should be significant to every Member of Congress, for it is a command given by the people to Congress and to which this body has not adhered.

In article I, section 9, we find expressed a limitation of the power given to Congress, to which it has not adhered. Article I, section 10, expresses limits or restrictions upon the States, to which the States have adhered until Congress made it impossible for the States to comply with section 10.

It is not my intention at this time to confine myself to a discussion dealing with congressional dereliction of duty, but in having referred to congressional abuses of the Constitution, I can only say that I shall be glad to prove every assertion made in this statement. Before passing to article II, I cannot help making this observation: Congress cannot erase the blotch upon its escutcheon until it resumes its constitutional duty to the States and to the people, which Congress actually should represent and has sworn to protect.

Article II in clear language delineates the powers of the President, and—

Before he enter on the execution of his office, he shall take the following oath or affirmation:

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

This is the obligation that the President takes as President of the United States, and each and every one of us takes the same obligation according to our position in the Government. Let us now honor this obligation, for upon its strict observance hangs the life of this Republic. This is of vital importance to preserve the Nation. If Congress fails in this duty, it becomes responsible for the consequence of such dereliction.

Article II, section 2, prescribes this power to the President:

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States; he may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment.

Allow me to call your attention to this provision:

He shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States.

This is just about all the power delegated to the President in article II of the Constitution without the aid and approval of the Senate. We find, however, this expression:

He shall take care that the laws are faithfully executed.

No one can deny that the Constitution is the most vital and fundamental law of the land, and when it is violated it is the President's duty to stop such violation.

I mention this so that my colleagues may clearly understand the mess Congress has made of the Government by delegating unwarrantable, unreasonable, and unconstitutional power to the President. He cannot execute even the smallest part of the duties delegated to him by Congress, but must, as he has said, hire his help. Are we now to assume that this hired help possesses greater ability than the Members of Congress? Personally, I reply "No," for there is no evidence of remarkable ability of anyone in this "White House Congress." Yet the majority in Congress admits that the President's hired help is more capable to direct the destiny of the Nation than they are themselves.

In this action Congress has put the stamp of incompetence on themselves each and every time legislation has been enacted giving the President and his hired help greater and greater power. If anyone questions this statement, I can only refer him to special acts of Congress which have created federally owned corporations; the Gold Reserve Act; the Reorganization Act of 1939; the Mutual Taxing Act between State and Federal Governments; and last, but not least, crazy plans and planning. If this evidence is not satisfactory or sufficient, I shall be glad to mention many more unconstitutional measures which have been enacted wherein Congress has shifted its power to the President, to bureaus and departments in the Federal Government where they do not belong, and for which there is no provision of transfer to be found any place in the Constitution.

If Congress will now investigate the President's hired help, his social pests, his embryonic statesmen, his statistical experts, his economists, who have never been able to earn 1 cent in competitive industry, owned and operated by themselves, greater information may be had as to their ability. In such investigation it will be found that these employees, in their unsound attempts to regulate industry and business which they do not understand, are the real causes which are sending a great people and the richest nation in the world on greased skids into oblivion. These experts are our sorrow, so look them over, for they are a liability upon the responsibility of Congress which the people are going to ask you about when you return home.

Let us rebuild the Republic by repeal of the seventeenth amendment and stop using the socialistic term "democracy," for that is not our form of government. The history of democracies is written in red, in retrogression, misery, poverty, and suffering, and, finally in the red monster despotism.

I have always had the most profound respect for the Supreme Court, and I believe such feeling has been universal. I, with many others, have felt secure in the Supreme Court, until it became a political football. I, for one, sallied forth in the Court's defense when the President accused the judges of senile degeneration because at times they understood the Constitution. I live and hope that light may strike again within this magnificent white marble sanctuary of justice on Capitol Hill. It is so strange to us old timers since the Constitution has been quietly folded away.

Now, what is the duty of the Supreme Court? Let us determine facts according to the Constitution instead of by abstract opinions. We find in article III, section 2—

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

These are the judicial powers of the Supreme Court, and it is also the Court's limitation of power. The judges of the Supreme Court, and other judges, must adhere to the Constitution as it is written, without interpolation or stretching the meaning of it. Decisions must be rendered as set forth in the document without evasion or mental reservation.

For these services the judges on the Supreme Court are paid $20,000 per year. When they retire a pension of $20,000 per year is paid to them as long as they live. The duty for which they receive such compensation is to administer impartial justice, and, in case of legislation where constitutionality is a question, base their decision on the Constitution instead of upon unconstitutional legislation, even though it is an act passed in good faith by Congress.

When the Supreme Court adheres to the Constitution in its decisions, the Nation respects and protects the Court, but when the Supreme Court departs from the Constitution it stands in public contempt and alone. The Court is standing alone today.

It is, of course, the duty of the Court to render decisions involving constitutionality on matters before the Court, not upon legislation enacted by Congress, but instead upon the Constitution. Congress, of course, should not enact legislation which is unconstitutional, but no one is infallible, so if it should happen that questionable legislation is enacted by Congress, the Supreme Court is duty bound to hold it unconstitutional. This is as it should be, because if all decisions are based upon the Constitution itself there will be few if any dissenters.

The general public opinion prevails that nearly all legislation enacted by Congress is unconstitutional, and in this the people are right. The Supreme Court, however, should have declared such legislation unconstitutional instead of upholding it, as it has done. It is not my intention to go into detail, but if any member of the Supreme Court should question my statements, I shall be glad to reply to such interrogator.

In the meantime I challenge anyone to prove constitutionality and designate where in the Constitution authority is found for the creation of Federal corporations, created by special acts of Congress. I refer to the corporations operated by the Federal Government, which have been created by special acts of Congress as a result of emergency legislation. In addition to these Federal corporate activities, Congress has set up by special legislation the Gold Reserve Act, the stabilization fund, the Labor Relations Act, the Wage and Hour Act, the Social Security Act, Unemployment Compensation Act, the Reorganization Act, the Mutual Taxing Act, and other emergency measures. I now ask, Where is the sense or soundness in using the taxpayer' money to destroy business?

These are a few of the problems that are a thorn in the side of United States industry and business. When they have been solved in a sound and sensible manner we will be back on the road to recovery, but not until then.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of Mother's Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of the legislative business of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 1 hour to make an analysis of reorganization plan No. II.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6260) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 604), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWERS reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of H. R. 6260, the War Department civil functions appropriation bill, 1940; and pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to what, may I ask the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. POWERS. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the general debate be limited to 2 hours, and may I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much time he will require out of the 2 hours?

Mr. SNYDER. Suppose we make it 50–50. Perhaps we will not use our full time.

Mr. POWERS. I will agree to that, Mr. Speaker, an hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by himself and the gentleman from New Jersey. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the subcommittee knows there is a question of very great interest to a lot of Members involved in this bill. Nobody has yet seen the bill. I believe we ought to have more than 2 hours for debate on such an important matter as is involved in this legislation.

Mr. SNYDER. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado that I believe the Members who will speak in general debate are probably those who may have amendments to offer. I will give the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to have 10 minutes, anyway.

Mr. SNYDER. I will agree to give the gentleman that time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if copies of this bill are available for the use of Members?

Mr. SNYDER. They are.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I have tried to get a copy but have been unable to locate one so far.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have been trying to get a copy all morning but have not been able to do so.

Mr. SNYDER. They will be here in a moment.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. They will be here when we begin consideration of the bill?

Mr. SNYDER. They will.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, due to the fact I have not seen the bill but have heard some rumors with regard to certain of its provisions, I should like to ask my colleague from Pennsylvania if there is anything in the bill that in any way relates to utilizing present funds of the W. P. A. in connection with some of these appropriations?

Mr. SNYDER. There is no such provision in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6260, with Mr. DELANEY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that big things ofttimes come in small packages. That aptly describes the War Department civil functions appropriation bill, the consideration of which we are about to begin.

The items in this measure are few, but in the aggregate they call for the appropriation of a tidy sum; the total is $255,188,514.

That amount compares with current appropriations aggregating $239,147,867, in which reappropriations are included amounting to $24,005,000.

The increase is $16,040,647.

We have effected reductions amounting to $445,940.

The increase falls principally under three heads—namely, river and harbor and flood-control projects and the Panama Canal.

The first two I shall address myself to in a moment. The latter, almost wholly, is responsive to a confidential project, the nature of which I am not at liberty publicly to divulge.

For other objects embraced by the bill we propose a net increase of $54,060. A reduction of $500,000 in the confidential Canal project occasions the net reduction I stated previously of $445,940. By other objects I refer to cemeterial expenses, the Alaska Communication System, our High Commissioner to the Philippines, and the local Soldiers' Home. There are no consequential changes involved as to any of such activities, except as to cemeteries. Under that head you will be interested to know that we have added $50,000 to the Budget estimate of $334,020 for the purchase of headstones, in order that applications may be promptly filled. There should be no protracted delay in placing these modest monuments at the graves of our one-time boys who bore arms in the Nation's defense.

Without this increase many months would go by during which these boys would not have markers at their graves, so this will enable the markers to be provided promptly.

Mr. Chairman, interest in this bill centers mainly in two propositions—rivers and harbors and flood control. For the former we have a regular Budget estimate of $30,000,000 for new work, and for the latter the regular Budget includes $110,000,000.

The first amount, applying to rivers and harbors, is $44,520,000 less than the amount made available for the current fiscal year.

The flood-control amount, that is, general flood control, is stepped up $28,000,000 above the current appropriation.

The proposed application of both amounts is set out in the hearings—rivers and harbors, commencing on page 58, and flood control commencing on page 92.

For rivers and harbors the $30,000,000 in the Budget would be applied toward authorized projects requiring an additional appropriation for their completion of $227,048,150.

For flood control, general, the amount of $110,000,000 would be applied toward projects under way or which are now ready or shortly will be ready to be undertaken, requiring a total additional appropriation for their completion of $473,540,000.

For rivers and harbors the Budget estimate would be at a rate of progress which would spread completion over a period extending somewhat over 7 years. For flood control the Budget estimate would be at a rate of progress which would spread completion over a period somewhat in excess of 4 years.

Mr. Chairman, it is no revelation to state that widespread dissatisfaction prevails with the amounts included in the regular Budget on account of rivers and harbors and flood control. No question is involved as to the relative importance of the two propositions. There is no question as to the component projects embraced by the regular Budget estimate under each proposition. The question that has arisen is whether or not the rate of progress permissible under the original Budget estimates should be stepped up. Your committe heard many delegations, it heard many Members of Congress, and all strongly advocated that we should disregard the Budget estimates.

Personally, I am in sympathy with both of these classes of improvements.

Very frankly, Mr. Chairman, it is my view that new work in connection with river and harbor and that flood-control projects under way and ready to be undertaken should be prosecuted more vigorously than would be possible with appropriations of proportions submitted in the Budget; but, at the same time, I am one of those who believe that it is a violation of the spirit of the Budget and Acounting Act for the Committee on Appropriations to waive aside budgetary principles and bring to the House measures exceeding Budget estimates without knowledge of the effect such course may have upon the financial program which the administration has laid out.

It has been my privilege to present to the House since the beginning of the Seventy-fifth Congress six annual appropriation measures, all prepared under my direction. No one of those measures has exceeded Budget recommendations; and of the five that already have been enacted into law, not one of them has occasioned Treasury demands in excess of Budget approved sums. I point to that record with some measure of pride.

I had hoped, I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the President could be persuaded to supplement his original recommendations for rivers and harbors and flood control. He has submitted a supplemental estimate of $6,000,000 on account of the Mississippi River flood-control project, but is averse, I understand, to any further submissions. As an alternative, however, I understand he is willing and ready at the proper time to make an allotment of not less than $50,000,000 of the appropriation later to be provided for work relief for the fiscal year 1940 to the Chief of Engineers for augmenting the amounts included in the Budget for river and harbor and flood-control projects.

If that is done, it seems to me it would take care of the situation very nicely, and from conferences and conversations I have had I understand would be quite agreeable to those of my colleagues representing districts where river and harbor projects and flood-control projects are matters of considerable concern. Of course, they would prefer something in black and white, but the President's assurances, I feel confident, will be quite satisfactory to all.

As to rivers and harbors, you will find a table showing the proposed application of the original $30,000,000 commencing on page 58 of the hearings. On page 520 begins a table showing how an additional $20,000,000 would be employed, and on page 114 there begins another table showing how an additional appropriation of $30,000,000 would be applied.

The break-down of the original flood-control estimate of $110,000,000 begins on page 92 of the hearings. There is another table commencing on page 116 allocating an additional $20,000,000, and on page 519 another table commences giving the proposed employment of an additional allowance of $30,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I need to take any more time of the Committee. We have worked faithfully to discharge our duty as the agent of the House in a creditable and generally acceptable manner, and I hope the recommendations we present may have undivided support.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I appeared before the gentleman's subcommittee with regard to an item of $54,000 for the completion of the survey of the Yellowstone River. The Army engineers have already made a partial survey at a cost of $84,000, and they have advised me that with an additional $54,000 they can complete this survey. I should like to inquire if that amount is contemplated to be used for this purpose under the present bill?

Mr. SNYDER. I cannot answer the gentleman definitely. The gentleman understands that the Army engineers make up the estimates and the allocations and the set-up for the expenditure of these funds and send them to the committee. As to survey money, however, no allocation is submitted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. How much money appropriated in this bill is to be allotted to the Army engineers for the purpose of making surveys of such rivers as the Yellowstone River?

Mr. SNYDER. Three million dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. And that is to be used in the discretion of the Army engineers?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I find on page 8 of the bill $91,000,000 stricken out and $71,000,000 substituted in regard to the disbursements for rivers and harbors.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Does that include maintenance and new construction?

Mr. SNYDER. Seventy-one million dollars?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. That amount applies to both maintenance and improvements.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman break that down?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will find the break-down in the hearings.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman does not have it in mind. Can the gentleman tell me what is the total allocation for new work for rivers and harbors?

Mr. SNYDER. Thirty million dollars and one hundred and ten million dollars for flood control.

Mr. CULKIN. When was the original figure of $96,000,000 changed, if I may ask?

Mr. SNYDER. The original figure was $71,000,000. The subcommittee increased the amount to $96,000,000. That was changed after the Committee on Appropriations as a whole acted on reporting out the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Mississippi 5 additional minutes.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of any bill that is brought before the House by the Appropriations Committee which concerns Members generally as much as does the pending measure.

It involves all of our ocean- and gulf-bound areas; it involves all of our navigable rivers, and more recently it has encompassed all of the headwaters and drainage areas of such streams. There is scarcely an area, I should say, that is not touched in some measure by the projects which the engineers are charged with prosecuting under the appropriations embraced by this bill.

One line of such work is in the interest of producing wealth through the provision of better and more extensive means of water transportation. The other line is in the interest of the preservation of wealth, and, more important, making secure human lives in areas which in the past have been ravaged by devastating floods.

We can and should lend our whole-hearted support to undertakings of this character. It is a class of public works which has a general and popular appeal.

When I occupied the position of chairman of the subcommittee on War Department appropriations, the nonmilitary appropriations were included in the bill with the military appropriations. They were carried in the latter part of the bill, and it was always a sort of relief to me, after spending weeks delving into money requests for objects of destruction—means and methods of killing human beings, to meet with propositions which had the dual objective of preserving both life and property.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that this bill was reported only a few minutes ago, and the further fact that the hearings on the bill and the report have not been available to the membership of the House, I feel it is my duty to give to the Members of the House certain facts, particularly about three items in the bill about which I am sure they would wish to be informed in order that they make up their minds particularly about the sufficiency of these items.

This bill, as it is written at the present time, carries $110,000,000 for flood control. The Engineer Corps of the Army has indicated that $195,000,000 could be well and economically expended.

The bill carries $30,000,000 for rivers and harbors. The Engineer Corps of the Army has indicated that $102,000,000 could be economically expended.

For the lower Mississippi, $37,000,000 is carried in this bill, $6,000,000 of which is set aside, almost in toto, for work on the Morganza floodway and Atchafalaya Basin. The fact is that the $6,000,000 supplemental estimate was submitted primarily for work on these two floodways. With this amount eliminated, there would be only $31,000,000 available for expenditure on the lower Mississippi. The Engineer Corps of the Army has indicated that $50,000,000 could be economically expended for work on the lower Mississippi.

This gives you, in brief, a picture as to the situation with respect to those three propositions as they are provided for in this bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In stating that the bill carries $30,000,000 for rivers and harbors, I am wondering if my colleague did not overlook the fact that the bill carries an additional $41,000,000 for maintenance of rivers and harbors.

Mr. COLLINS. I am just going into that at the present time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Just for the present let me go along and I will yield in a moment.

If you will turn to page 75 of the hearings, you will find for maintenance of river and harbor work, $41,135,000. In reality there is $41,000,000 carried in this bill for maintenance of river and harbor work. The $135,000 is merely a carry-over.

On general flood-control projects $3,000,000 is carried for maintenance.

If you will further examine page 75, you will find there itemized the yearly appropriations or the yearly amounts available for expenditure by the Engineer Corps for river and harbor work and a similar itemization for general flood-control work; and on page 103 of the hearings you will find a similar statement with regard to work on the lower Mississippi.

So much for the bill. The subcommittee having in charge this bill heard about 100 Members testify, all advocating increases either for river and harbor work or for flood-control work generally, while there were others who asked for additional appropriations for flood control on the lower Mississippi.

There was such strong sentiment among the membership of the House for additional appropriations that the subcommittee thought it wise to recommend an appropriation of $50,000,000 additional for these three projects, that amount to be deducted at a later date from the appropriations later to be recommended for work relief, the idea being that if the amounts proposed in the Budget for river and harbor work and flood-control work were augmented by $50,000,000, that many persons who would be on relief would be given employment by the Engineer Corps of the Army upon these types of work. That would conform with the present practice of the Engineer Corps of the Army. So we members of the subcommittee made that addition to the bill, dividing the money, first, $30,000,000 for rivers and harbors, and, secondly, $20,000,000 for general flood control. Later, after conferences with members of the Flood Control Committee and the Rivers and Harbors Committee, we changed that allocation and recommended to the Committee on Appropriations a division as follows: $25,000,000 to rivers and harbors, $23,000,000 to general flood control, and $2,000,000 to flood control on the lower Mississippi. The Committee on Appropriations did not approve our action and eliminated the additions we had made. Had our recommendations been approved, the bill before you on its face would carry $50,000,000, or nearly $50,000,000, over Budget estimates. We did not, as members of this subcommittee, however, feel that we were actually appropriating $50,000,000 over the Budget, because we expected to vote and to recommend to the Congress that $50,000,000 be deducted from the work-relief appropriation for 1940, later to be provided, in order to carry on this very worthy work, upon which relief labor very largely would be used.

Actually, if our recommendations had been supported, no more money, in my opinion, would have been appropriated in toto in the end than would have been appropriated if this bill had been presented and passed as was recommended by the subcommittee, with $50,000,000 later eliminated from the 1940 relief appropriation. However, the recommendations of the subcommittee were not carried out, and we find this bill written and presented to you today under the Budget by about $500,000.

That, Mr. Chairman, gives a general picture of what has gone on, what has been presented, what the subcommittee had in mind, what we felt should have been carried in the bill.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If the gentleman is in position to answer the question, I should like him to state if there has not been a general understanding that the Executive is willing to allocate to the Chief of Engineers $50,000,000 when the relief appropriation is made?

Mr. COLLINS. It is my understanding that the Executive was perfectly willing to recommend $50,000,000 from the 1940 relief appropriation, and so stated to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and, I understand, to the chairman of the subcommittee. In other words, that when that bill was passed, $50,000,000 would be allotted for work on rivers and harbors and general flood control.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further for a brief question?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In order to make it satisfactory, and in order to provide for its being utilized as regular funds, your subcommittee recommended the increases to be divided, of the $50,000,000 one-half to rivers and harbors and one-half to flood control.

Mr. COLLINS. The gentleman is correct. I was told just a few minutes ago by the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army that relief appropriations, used strictly as such by the engineers, were by no means satisfactory, and I think that those of you who are familiar with relief and the regulations governing the expenditure of relief money are cognizant of that fact.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I assume that the gentleman's subcommittee is practically unanimously in favor of giving flood control and rivers and harbors this extra $50,000,000 if it can be done. The gentleman has indicated it ought to be done out of relief. What would be the best parliamentary procedure by which that could be brought about?

Mr. COLLINS. There is but one way that you can increase these items, and that is to adopt the method that this subcommittee recommended, namely, to increase these items by the amount the subcommittee undertook to increase them. Any other method would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And if it is the general impression that that is satisfactory to the gentleman's subcommittee, and we have enough votes to do that——

Mr. COLLINS. Oh, I cannot speak for the subcommittee. Frankly, I am going to vote as I originally voted.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How can we best make the President understand that in good faith, when the appropriation comes up for relief, we will carry out what we propose to do with him, if we carry the $50,000,000 today. We must keep faith with the President.

Mr. COLLINS. I have not conferred with the President, but it is my understanding that the method we adopted would be—I would not say approved, I would not say satisfactory to the President—but I have the idea that he would sign the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On page 314 of the hearings is a letter addressed to myself from M. C. Taylor, brigadier general, assistant to the Chief of Engineers, in which he stated, among other things:

> There are now before the Department flood-control examinations and surveys estimated to cost $5,600,000 in addition to the funds presently allotted. The Budget estimate for the next fiscal year for this purpose is $3,000,000.

I want to be clear on this. Has this $3,000,000 which the Budget recommended been increased in this bill to $4,000,000? I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say it was $3,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. The amount carried in this bill for survey work, I understand, is $3,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I propose to digress in my remarks today and to review certain things in connection with something entirely foreign to the bill before us. I wish to speak to the question of the New Deal misadministration of the Sugar Control Act.

Mr. Chairman, the policy of the New Deal administration, which for the past 6 years has constantly been to gradually eliminate the sugar industry of the United States—particularly the beet-sugar industry—is still being pursued.

All of the protestations that the New Deal administration wants to increase wages, that it wants to restore the American standard of living; that it wants to help the American farmer; that it wants to increase employment and reduce relief are in absolute contradiction to the polices being followed by the Department of Agriculture toward the sugar industry of the United States.

These are not empty phrases. They are not expressions of mere political disagreement or discontent. They are facts borne out by the figures contained in the proposed 1939 beet-sugar marketing allotments for the United States.

Not only has there been willful and needless discrimination against the beet-sugar industry of the United States, but we begin to trace the pattern into which this policy is resolving itself, and in that pattern we find that sugar allotments are being manipulated in such a way as to kill off the beet-sugar industry in those sections where it is believed to be the most vulnerable, then to proceed to those sections where the industry is better entrenched, and finally to strangle to death the entire industry in favor of offshore producers.

Mr. Chairman, a recent development marked another milestone in the progress toward eventual elimination of the American sugar-beet industry, particularly that part of it in the eastern growing area. The development I allude to was the threatened closing of the Mount Clemens plant of the Northeastern Sugar Co. at Mount Clemens, Mich. This would have made the fourth sugar refinery in Michigan to be closed since March 4, 1933, and because of the misadministration of the sugar-control legislation by the Department of Agriculture.

Representatives of 1,000 sugar-beet growers in the Mount Clemens growing area were in Washington recently urging Government officials to recognize their fundamental right to continue to produce and sell sugar for the use of the American people. These farmers were most emphatic and earnest in their demands. They spoke not only for themselves but also for the 1,200 field laborers and 300 factory workers who, because of the un-American administration of the law, would be denied the opportunity to work and support themselves and their families. The Washington bureaucrats were adamant in their refusal to interpret the law as the Congress intended it should be interpreted.

The Secretary of Agriculture, under date of February 2, 1939, by authority granted to him by the Sugar Act of 1937, made a finding to the effect that a marketing allotment was necessary to prevent "disorderly marketing of beet sugar" by the processors.

Accordingly, under dates of February 21 and 22, 1939, a hearing was held in Chicago, Ill., for the purpose of receiving evidence to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make a "fair, efficient, and equitable distribution of the 1939 beet-sugar quota among persons who market such sugar." Oral testimony was taken and briefs were filed.

Under date of April 7, 1939, the officer presiding over the hearings announced the marketing allotment he would recommend to the Secretary of Agriculture. Briefs disagreeing with the proposed recommendation were permitted to be filed up to April 17, 1939. The presiding officer considered the objections raised in the briefs and, without changing his original findings, transmitted the record of the proceedings to the Secretary of Agriculture for such action as he might deem appropriate. The Secretary approved the findings without change and issued the final order. This order jeopardized continued operation of another beet-sugar refinery in the State of Michigan.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under both the Jones-Costigan Act and the Sugar Act of 1937, allotments of planted acreage were made. In my city of Bay City, Mich., when Mr. Roosevelt assumed the responsibility of administering the affairs of the Nation, there were three beet-sugar refineries employing a total of about 1,800 workers and utilizing the products of something like 35,000 acres of land. Today, as a result of the New Deal policy of hostility to the beet-sugar industry, there is only one refinery operating instead of three. There has been, of course, a corresponding reduction in the number of wage earners employed in the refining of beet sugar and also in the tillage of acreage employed in the growing of beets.

Under the Jones-Costigan Act the Monitor Sugar Co., the only one of the three factories now surviving in my home city, was allotted an acreage of 17,234; while for 1939, under the Sugar Act of 1937, it was allotted a sugar acreage of 16,687.

Not only were the planted acreage allotments to Michigan decreased materially under the present act, but they were especially stringent on the Bay City area. This reduction in planted acres is of itself a severe hardship on the industry in Michigan, because it reduces the days of factory operation and reduces the extent to which growers may participate in the program.

Under the law American farmers are told how many acres of beets they can grow. The refiners are told how many pounds of the sugar crop they will be permitted to sell and when they can sell it.

The total marketing allotment for beet sugar in the United States for 1939 under the present consumption estimate is 29,284,470 bags of 100 pounds. Therefore, inasmuch as the total which can be marketed in 1939 exceeds the January 1, 1939, inventory, every company, if all were given equal consideration, could market its entire inventory plus some new crop sugar. However, under the arbitrary and unfair marketing allotment, the industry in Michigan cannot market in the year of 1939 its inventory on hand January 1, 1939.

So far as the plant in my own city is concerned, its inventory on January 1, 1939, was 379,747 bags. Its proposed marketing allotment is 366,037 bags, which means that on January 1, 1940, it would have left on hand 13,710 bags of sugar grown during the crop year of 1938 plus all the sugar produced during 1939.

Thus while the beet-sugar industry in the United States can collectively market in 1939 all of the inventory on hand as of January 1, 1939, plus 2,377,765 bags of new crop sugar made in 1939, the industry in Michigan is denied the opportunity to market the total of its inventory on hand January 1, 1939, and is further denied, if you please, the chance to market a single bag of new crop sugar during that year.

Normally the beet-sugar industry in Michigan markets in every calendar year all of its January 1 effective inventory, plus about one-third of the new crop sugar produced in the fall of the year. Due to the large effective inventory on January 1, 1939, the substantial amount of new crop sugar which normally would be sold cannot be expected to be sold this year. However, if every processor in the United States were permitted to market all of his January 1, 1939, effective inventory, each could still market about one-third of the new crop sugar which he normally would have marketed.

If this were the status, the Monitor refinery in my home city would be able to market, on a parity with the rest of the country not only 13,710 bags of inventory sugar but it would be able also to market about 30,783 bags of new crop sugar.

Under equitable marketing allotments and under usual conditions, the industry in Michigan would sell 756,509 bags of new crop sugar this fall, in addition to the whole of the January 1, 1939, effective inventory. However, if the amount of new crop sales for Michigan were reduced only in the same proportion as the new crop sales of the entire industry in the United States, the Michigan refiners would be permitted to market 244,915 bags of new crop sugar this fall, in addition to all of their January 1, 1939, effective inventories. But under the plan approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, the industry in Michigan, because of heavy imports, can only market in 1939 its January 1, 1939, effective inventory, minus about 26,000 bags, and, in addition, will not be able to market a single bag of 1939 crop sugar.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the discrimination against the State of Michigan as a whole, in relation to the treatment afforded the balance of the United States, can readily be seen, and surely the recommended formula cannot be said to be "fair, efficient, and equitable," as provided in the Sugar Act of 1937.

This formula creates a number of hardships for the industry in Michigan:

First. Under the contracts with the producers advance payments for beets are made in November and December. The financial structures of the companies are such that they contemplated selling a certain amount of new crop sugar in the fall to meet these advance payments to growers. Serious financial difficulties must necessarily arise when the normal new crop sales of 756,509 bags are by bureaucratic mandate prohibited, and about 26,000 bags of the 1938 crop are also barred from the 1939 market.

That means, of course, that in Michigan our sugar growers can neither market all of their 1938 crop in 1939, nor can they market a pound of their 1939 crop in 1939.

Second. The climate of Michigan is humid, and the storage until 1940 of sugar made in 1938 presents very serious problems. Indeed, it is questionable whether this sugar can be marketed in 1940 without reprocessing at considerable expense.

Third. If the industry is prevented from supplying the home market this fall with new crop sugar, this market will be supplied with other sugar. Every grower of sugar beets in Michigan, as well as every processor, is vitally interested in selling every bag of sugar as near the factory as possible, because it increases his returns.

Fourth. The avowed purpose of marketing allotments is to prevent disorderly marketing. Under the very conditions which would be caused by the recommended marketing allotment, disorderly marketing will be bound to occur in January 1940. The industry in Michigan will be forced to sell sugar in distant territories, probably at a discount—which will be to the detriment of every grower in the State of Michigan.

Fifth. Since all sugar on hand as of January 1, 1939, was produced in good faith from sugar beets to which 1938 acreage allotments pertain, and inasmuch as the total inventory on hand on January 1, 1939, was less than the total 1939 marketing allotment, there certainly is no justification for refusing permission to every processor to market all of his January 1, 1939, effective inventory plus his fair proportion of the new crop sugar which can be sold.

Now, Mr. Chairman, underlying this whole question is the one great question of why the New Deal administration is so intent upon destroying the sugar industry of the United States, acre by acre, factory by factory, and State by State.

It has been said on different occasions that the reason is that many of those high in the New Deal administration believe the sugar industry of the United States ought to be throttled to death. They simply do not believe that the American sugar market ought to be reserved in any part for the American cane grower or the American beet grower. They simply do not believe that the American market ought to be reserved for the American wage earners in the cane-sugar factories or in the beet-sugar factories. They simply do not believe that the American sugar market ought to be reserved for American capital and American profits.

Time and again I have called attention on this floor to the fact that the whole policy of the New Deal administration has been to sacrifice the American sugar growers and sugar processors and the wage earners engaged in the business to the growers and the processors of Cuba and of the Philippine Islands.

The theory which has been enunciated from time to time by spokesmen for the New Deal in explaining their hostility to the American sugar industry is that American sugar producers and processors cannot produce sugar as cheaply as it can be produced in those offshore areas where labor is paid less—where wages are lower, if you please—and where the living conditions of the wage earners are not comparable to the living standards of American wage earners.

I am perfectly ready to concede that that is true. I will say this: If we are willing to scrap the National Labor Relations Act, if we are willing to repeal the Wage-Hour Act, if we are willing to abandon any effort to do anything for the American farmer, if we are willing to oppress our wage earners, if we are willing to abolish labor unions and reduce the workers of the United States to the status of those workers in offshore fields, then we can produce sugar as cheaply in the United States as it can be produced anywhere.

But, Mr. Chairman, so long as I am able to raise by voice we will not reduce the American farmers to a state of serfdom. We will not reduce the American wage earners to a state of peonage. We will not countenance the oppression of American labor to the low living standards and the miserable living conditions of those workers in those offshore, tropical areas who can produce sugar cheaper than we in the United States.

The contradiction of New Deal philosophy is so glaring that it cannot escape the most casual observation. The New Deal cries to high heaven that it wants to increase the income of the American farmers and to preserve the American market for the American farmers; but, if you please, not where the American sugar-beet grower is concerned.

The New Deal administration cries to the high heaven that it wants to increase employment, so that the one-third ill-fed, ill-clad, ill-housed shall have jobs at good wages; but not where the workers in American sugar factories are concerned, if you please.

The New Deal administration cries to high heaven that it wants to maintain and even to increase the standard of living of the American people; but not where the sugar growers and the sugar processors and the wage earners engaged in this industry are concerned, if you please.

The New Deal administration cries to the high heaven that it wants an adequate national defense, and yet it deliberately closes its eyes to the fact that during the World War not only were Americans put on sugar rations, but when domestic supplies were exhausted the American housewives had to go to the grocers and plead for the opportunity to buy a pound of sugar at 32 cents.

We hear nothing from the administration, Mr. Chairman, of the millions piled upon millions that were wrung from the pocketbooks of the American consumers because a short-sighted policy had permitted foreign sugar producers to gain control of the American market. No; they carefully refrain from mentioning that experience. I shall in the near future discuss this experience in greater detail.

We all know—the administration knows—that if the sugar industries of America are paralyzed, if the factories are dismantled, if the fields are fallow or are planted to other crops, we could not reestablish the sugar industry to produce even 25 percent of our domestic needs for 2 years or longer. It would take 3, 4, 5 years for America to be able to produce 50 or 75 percent of her domestic needs.

Mr. Chairman, if it were not for the courage of the Michigan sugar producers, who are willing to risk their capital and to face probable losses in 1940 rather than submit to annihilation at the hands of these bureaucrats, the beet farmers of Michigan would today face a serious and most disturbing situation. In the face of these inequitable and unfair and arbitrary allotments which penalize the Michigan growers and processors, the producers of my State have determined to continue operations for at least another year. The attitude of the Michigan producers is summed up in the words of one producer who has written me. He said:

> We came to the conclusion that we had an obligation to fulfill with these farmers, and whether we lose money or make any money this year, we decided that we would operate the plant. We also felt that if this plant did not operate this year it would never operate again. The farmers would lose their acreage allotments, and that would be the end of the sugar industry in this area.

Here is a situation, Mr. Chairman, in which every promise of the administration to try to encourage private industry has been violated wantonly. Here is a situation in which every declaration of the administration that it desires to help the businessman and the wage earner has been violated, and if it were not for the sound patriotism, the fine type of citizenship, the high character of the Michigan sugar producers in recognizing an obligation to the growers and in translating it for the Michigan farmers into a practical mode of relief, the Michigan beet farmers would be left facing a dreary future by the administration.

Is this action by the sugar-beet processors of my State to be branded as the acts of "economic royalists" and "princes of privilege," or is this attitude to be recognized for what it is, a sound, basic American attitude on the part of the sugar processors to carry out to the extreme limit, even at the risk of their own capital, what they conceive to be an obligation to the American farmers, an obligation which rests upon the administration and which the administration has refused to recognize, and which now will be carried out for the administration?

Now we have heard a great deal about protecting the consumer in this matter of quotas. I, for one, am ready to face the question of the consumer interest in this problem. This I shall also discuss in detail in the near future.

Mr. Chairman, there simply is no rational basis on which any such policy as the New Deal policy toward the sugar industry can be justified. If we are going to deal with the sugar industry of the United States on the basis of the New Deal philosophy that because sugar can be produced offshore cheaper than it can be produced here, then to be economically logical we ought to follow the same principle with regard to the manufacture of textiles, of shoes, of thousands of other things which can be produced more cheaply in those countries which pay miserable pittances to their workers, which compel their people to live under standards so low that Americans would rebel. Of course, such a thing is unthinkable. But it remains an absolute fact that if such a policy with regard to shoes or textiles or all of the other commodities would not be a sound policy, then it is not a sound policy so far as the sugar industry is concerned.

The fact is that the American sugar industry is being sacrificed to the whims and the mistaken views of a few individuals in the New Deal who are in positions sufficiently powerful to enable them to carry out their warped ideas of an American economy.

Let me say in conclusion that every time you deny the planting of an acre of sugar beets you have kept some farmer in the plight he is in today. Every time you deny the planting of an acre of sugar beets you send some farm hand into the bread lines in the city or onto the relief rolls. Every time you close a sugar factory you throw hundreds of people onto the relief rolls and you deny many farmers and farm hands the opportunity to make a decent living for themselves.

We might just as well face this fact now: Every dictate of a sound and sensible national defense, of a sound and sensible internal economy, of consideration for the wage earners and for the farmers of America, compels the conclusion that not only is the administration sugar-control policy unjust, inequitable, unfair, but it is economically and nationally suicidal. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I shall discuss this question further in the near future.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, when a mere mine-run Congressman is hanging around one of these powerful congressional committees trying to find out what is going on about a very important bill in which he and many other Members are vitally interested and what they are going to do about it, he really does not know whether he is a Congressman or a tramp trespassing on the premises. [Laughter.]

Ella Wheeler Wilcox said, "Nothing is ever settled until it is settled right." But I always thought that Ella used about twice too much language, and I know it now. "Nothing is ever settled." Because if many Members of this body ever had a right to think that a bill reported by a subcommittee to the full committee settled a controversy that has been going on for 3 months, we had a right to think so here.

In the first place, that subcommittee and its members state that more Members of Congress appeared before that subcommittee in behalf of this legislation than ever appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in its history. Apparently the full committee does not rate Congressmen very highly.

But it dates back beyond that. It dates back to the middle of February when 40 Members of Congress, on a single written request, appeared in the committee room of the Committee on Food Control for the purpose of considering whether or not they would support the estimate and figures of the Army engineers on the flood-control program for 1940, on which program the engineers said they could profitably expend $195,000,000.

Those 40 Members of Congress unanimously endorsed that proposition, unanimously endorsed the $195,500,000 estimate of the Army engineers. Thereafter it was decided to lay this matter before the President. A committee of 31 Members, representing 29 States and 2 Territories—and, mind you, 47 of the 48 States of the Union are interested in this legislation—went to lay the situation before the President. We received an appointment with him at 11 o'clock on a Monday morning, a rather unpropitous hour to make a showing, but every single Member was there. When we presented the matter to the President I told him I thought it was of such significance as to be worthy of mention, as showing the interest of Members of Congress; that the 31 members of the committee appointed had appeared down there to the man to ask him to raise his sights, so to speak, and to recommend that more money be carried in the flood-control program.

There was need for more money. Do you know what we have authorized, beginning with the Flood Control Act of 1936 and 10 amendments of 1937–38? We have authorized $710,000,000 worth of flood-control projects, construction costs, to which we have added since about $90,000,000 by shifting the cost of land and local damages from the sponsors to the Federal Government. So that you now have $800,000,000 worth of flood-control program under the act of 1936 and its amendments.

Now, what has been done, how much money has been appropriated, to construct that great program?

The first flood-control act passed Congress too late in the session to be included in the 1937 appropriation bill. For 1938 and 1939 combined only $120,000,000 was appropriated to execute this $800,000,000 program.

All right, let us look at the Budget. There ought to be some reason in the Budget as well as in Congress. I have never recovered from the jolt I got when the first Budget message came in here in January 1937, after we had passed the first flood-control act at the end of the preceding session, with $310,000,000 of projects in it. The Army engineers said they were ready to proceed with $150,000,000 of projects. The Budget estimate that was sent up here to begin that great program carried—I cannot forget it, I was sitting right there in a front seat; it nearly knocked me out of the seat—was $30,000,000 to begin that program.

Now, there are a lot of us fellows who have been going along on these things for 6 years who are out on the ragged edge, who never got a dollar for flood control expended in their districts. Let me say to you now that we feel we would be a damn sight better off if we got licked fighting than if we laid down and took it. [Applause.] So when we get to that stage of the game I have the amendments already up there at the Clerk's desk to restore the figures which the military Subcommittee on Appropriations put in their bill yesterday, but which was thrown out of the window this morning by the full committee on a few minutes' consideration—figures put in there after the most exhaustive hearings, as the chairman of the subcommittee has told you, that were ever held by a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, and those figures did not suit me entirely.

At a recent meeting of this group of Members, and we have never had any trouble to get 35 or 40 fine fellows out there just on a few hours' written notice to these meetings, when we commenced to get down to brass tacks on this thing, I want to show you how much some of us have sacrificed to agree on the small figure that was thrown out the window by the Appropriations Committee. We met and unanimously agreed to go behind just $50,000,000 additional, instead of $85,000,000. We wanted to be reasonable, so we reduced our sights to $50,000,000 additional to the Budget figure of $110,000,000. That additional $50,000,000 was to be for flood control only.

The next thing that transpired, however, was a report that rivers and harbors were to get half of this $50,000,000. In all the 3 months we had been working on this thing we had never heard a word from rivers and harbors or that they wanted any more money. All the work was done by a voluntary group of flood-control Members, and we brought it to the point where it was agreed by everybody, from the President down, that we should get $50,000,000 more for flood control if the grand total of appropriations could be brought within the Budget, and we were positively assured than an allotment in that amount would be made from the work relief appropriation for 1940.

It was not until our final meeting on Friday last that any report reached our group that there was to be a division of this $50,000,000 with rivers and harbors, and that rivers and harbors would get as much or more than flood control.

So we held a meeting yesterday morning and we agreed on this proposition, and I will tell you just what the proposition was, because there were only two votes cast against it after consideration which lasted for an hour and a quarter. The majority leader was present at this meeting. We adopted a motion that we would stand for a split of this $50,000,000—$30,000,000 for flood control and $20,000,000 for rivers and harbors. We further agreed that if the committee accepted this figure we would oppose any attempted increase on the floor of the House, because some of the Members wanted to go the limit. We would be satisfied with these figures.

But the subcommittee changed our figures, and still I am going to follow the subcommittee. The subcommittee gave rivers and harbors $25,000,000 and general flood control $23,000,000, and the Lower Mississippi $2,000,000, making up the $50,000,000. The subcommittee adopted those figures, and we, knowing that that subcommittee has been working earnestly and informedly on this problem for 2 months, decided to abide by the subcommittee action.

Let me say that I was thunderstruck when I learned that the full committee this noon, not 2 hours ago, and not by any possibility having the knowledge the subcommittee have, in a brief session just tossed the whole thing out of the window.

It is my intention to offer amendments at the appropriate time. I got up here just to advise you what is coming and why. I could write a book on this thing—maybe I will after it is over—but all of this is such a small amount on such a tremendous program, a program of such tremendous importance. Do you know that nearly this whole flood-control program is based on the report of the Mississippi Valley Committee, issued in 1934—a national committee of eminent engineers, headed by the eminent Philadelphia engineer, Morris Cooke?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, that body of engineers made a preliminary survey of the Mississippi Basin. The Mississippi Basin comprises all or parts of 31 States. These engineers outlined a program which has in it today—a program issued 5 years ago—if you will search it, every project of any magnitude that is in the Flood Control Acts passed by this Congress. They estimated that the total cost of that program would be seven or eight billions of dollars. That was the start of this whole thing.

When the President dedicated the Fort Peck Dam in November of 1934 he said it was proposed to build dams to stop every drop of this water where it fell and make a use of it, instead of having it destroying the land and running away to the sea. He said—and I agree with him—that this country could well afford to spend $500,000,000 a year over a period of years to put over such a flood-control program. We have been spending only $60,000,000 a year—only about 10 days' relief money.

Let me say—and I bear down on this—that we have fallen down on the execution of our flood-control program more than any other program that has been undertaken in the last 6 years.

We have poured hundreds of millions of dollars of our money into one river. Need I remind anyone present that there are a few other rivers in the United States that need dams?

We had everything lined up here to settle this thing amicably. There was to be no fight. This was a very small increase. They talk about increasing the Budget. Why, we tossed three-quarters of a billion dollars into the naval bill we passed last week and nobody was interested. Nobody was crying about the Budget in connection with that bill. No one asked where we were going to get the money. The Senate has just added $371,000,000 to the House farm bill for 1940, boosting that appropriation to more than $1,200,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one-half additional minute.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. What justification can there be for voting for $772,000,000 in the form of a naval bill, which includes battleships that cost $93,000,000, perhaps $115,000,000, each, then refusing to vote $50,000,000 for flood control, rivers and harbors?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I can answer in one word and that word is "none." [Applause.]

Mr. SHORT. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am going to offer these amendments when we get to it. If you fellows will line up here and vote as you have been talking we will carry them, putting the subcommittee figures back in the bill—$25,000,000 for rivers and harbors, $23,000,000 for general flood control, and $2,000,000 for the lower Mississippi.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate that opposition has developed in connection with this matter. Only yesterday it seemed assured that this $50,000,000 would be divided amicably between these two groups. Today we find that the $50,000,000 goes out of the window. It will be poor satisfaction to the people along the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the smaller rivers of the country, which include those far out in Arkansas, Colorado, and up in New England, to know that this $50,000,000 has gone out of the window when the experts yesterday all agreed this should be appropriated. We who are not on the Appropriations Committee are not experts. We are just common, everyday Congressmen. We are going to have a little trouble explaining this. The fact of the matter is, it cannot be explained. I call upon these experts, these men who know the finances of the Nation, these men who were in accord yesterday and who are now in rank discord, to get together so that when this bill is read under the 5-minute rule we can do what was agreed to be done yesterday. They should not object. They said they could get so much money yesterday. Today they cannot get it. We do not want to run in opposition to them, we do not want to have to widen this breach, and I therefore call upon them to come back and follow their judgments. Are we going to allow ourselves to lose this? I, for one, am not going to be able to explain to my people, although my own district will not suffer by reason of the failure to appropriate this money. However, there are other people who, if this is not passed, will in the future be in water up to their necks, and I think we ought to get together.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. As I understood the preceding speaker, this item would only involve the price of a half battleship.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Less than half of some of the big ones; that is right.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman made the statement that the members of his own party were in agreement as to this amount and called upon us over here to explain why it was thrown out of the window. I think if the gentleman would ask the members of his own party, he will find the true facts.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I still maintain the majority sentiment on our side is favorable to this. It is well recognized that we have been economists, or we try to be economists, but we are sensible economists. There would be no sense in saying today that you cannot spend $50,000,000 when yesterday we were told we could. Nothing has developed between yesterday and today to indicate why we cannot do it.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, who has made a very valuable contribution to the cause of flood control, will appreciate the fact that in the 1937 flood the Ohio Valley suffered damages totaling over $400,000,000 from that one flood. The purpose of this money is to carry out a program which was authorized by the Flood Control Act of 1938 to stop all of the damages that have come to the different sections of our country because of these unprecedented floods. That is the purpose of it and it is wise economy, it is an investment and not the wasteful spending of money.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is absolutely right. In connection with these programs of spending that we have been experiencing during the last 3, 4, or 5 years, I defy anybody to show any place where the money has been spent more judiciously, where it has done more good, dollar for dollar, than the money spent along these rivers to keep the water out of the homes and business places of our people.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. In other words, "a stitch in time saves nine."

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very glad to know that my friend supports a 100 percent Federal contribution toward flood control or toward projects that will assure flood protection. The gentleman recalls the terrific fight we had in the House last year. It is very refreshing to note that our Republican colleagues have changed their view from the position they took last year and have taken the broad national viewpoint that it is a problem of the Federal Government.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say to the gentleman that there were only four votes in the entire House, Republicans and Democrats alike, against that proposition.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] such time as he may desire.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in reading the accounts in the press of the address of Howard L. Russell, director of public assistance of Pennsylvania, delivered over the radio on April 25 and also the report of his department as outlined in the newspapers of May 8. Mr. Russell in his address deplores the burden placed upon the taxpayer of Pennsylvania in providing for a relief program and from the press accounts of his speech he is apprehensive about the curtailment of Federal W. P. A. funds, which is necessary because of the recent action of the so-called economy bloc in Congress in reducing W. P. A. appropriations. In the same speech Mr. Russell apparently advocates the enactment by the Pennsylvania Legislature of the Van Allsburg bill which would return relief payments over to county boards in Pennsylvania. I do not know what Mr. Russell is more interested in, the return of relief administration to the county boards in Pennsylvania, or the expense to the taxpayer in Pennsylvania, involved in the curtailment of Federal funds for W. P. A. The quickest way to make the unfortunate people, who are obliged to accept relief, the football of politics is to turn the administration of relief back to the county boards in Pennsylvania, which will be dominated by local political organizations. Everyone in Pennsylvania remembers the deplorable conditions which existed in our State when the local county boards controlled the administration of relief. It actually meant that the local Republican committeemen in those days were the dispensers of relief, and that they dominated the relief boards through their political appointees, and that the applicant for relief had emphasized to him the importance of the Republican committeeman in his voting precinct, and was subject to all kinds of intimidation, threats, and pressure and was in constant fear of what would happen to his relief check, should he incur the displeasure of politicians. It was for this reason that a nonpartisan commission made up of men of unquestioned integrity and reputation, who were not identified with political organizations, recommended the establishment of a civil-service system in the selection of employees to administer relief, and the removal of administrative powers from the hands of local county politicians.

Now, Mr. Russell apparently is advocating the return of the administration of relief to the same agencies which were responsible for the evils which existed. No doubt the purpose of this is to provide jobs for the political worker. However, as this is a matter for the Legislature of Pennsylvania to decide itself, and for the people of Pennsylvania to later pass judgment upon, I am not so much interested in it at the moment as I am in that part of Mr. Russell's remarks deploring the curtailment of Federal funds and also the report of his department. I agree with Mr. Russell that curtailment of Federal funds for relief and W. P. A. is a very serious matter to Pennsylvania, and that the taxpayers of my State are going to be penalized because of such curtailment, but I would like to know if Mr. Russell communicated with the Members of Congress from Pennsylvania when the Congress was considering the recommendations of the President for W. P. A., and if he pointed out to them the effect decreased appropriations would have on Pennsylvania, and if he asked them to support adequate appropriations. I think I am safe in saying, that every Republican Member of Congress voted to decrease the amount below the recommendations of the President and of Colonel Harrington. When the first recommendation was sent to Congress and the deficiency W. P. A. appropriation was originally considered by the House, the entire Republican membership from Pennsylvania voted for the reduction from $875,000,000 to $725,000,000, thus clipping $150,000,000 from the estimates submitted as necessary. Further than that, all who were present on the floor during the non-roll-call votes, in the Committee of the Whole, also voted to cut the amount down to $350,000,000, which if the amendment had been successful, would have slashed the amount finally voted by more than one-half. Later when the President sent his message recommending the necessity of an additional $150,000,000, which had been previously slashed from the estimates, they all voted to reduce the amount by $50,000,000 and to provide only $100,000,000. And, believe it or not, those whom I saw on the floor during the vote in the Committee of the Whole, also voted for the amendment which would have trimmed the figure to a bare $55,000,000. Of course, this was a nonrecord vote and perhaps Mr. Russell does not know it.

Now, Mr. Russell complains because the very things the President warned of are taking place and thousands are being thrown back on the relief rolls, but these are the things for which the Republican Party's representatives in Washington voted, and the responsibility for the unemployment of these thousands who are being removed from the W. P. A. rolls belongs to the men in Congress, who should represent Pennsylvania, but who evidently were not much concerned about it when they slashed the W. P. A. funds. I would like also to direct attention to the situation in Philadelphia. If Mr. Russell's figures are correct, there are 78,419 cases in Philadelphia, representing 200,682 people, who are on relief. Millions of dollars have been available to Philadelphia for the past 2 years for W. P. A., which would have provided employment for a great number of these people, and which would have relieved Pennsylvania of the necessity of providing relief funds for them. However, the local authorities in Philadelphia have never exhibited much concern in utilizing this money and providing employment for these people, who themselves prefer to work rather than to receive a dole. Right at this moment enough money is available from the Federal Government to provide employment for approximately 20,000 people in Philadelphia, and Federal authorities cannot understand how it is that other cities in the United States not only utilize available funds but are complaining bitterly about the attitude of those Congressmen who voted to curtail W. P. A. funds, while Philadelphia apparently has no concern for its unemployed, notwithstanding the fact that the State government of Pennsylvania is being saddled with the huge costs of direct relief because of this callous attitude. Only last Monday mayors of four big cities, of different political persuasion, appeared in Washington to testify as to the need of additional funds and the desirability of W. P. A. projects. I would suggest that Mr. Russell could help solve the problem for the taxpayers of Pennsylvania by using his influence and powers of persuasion in an effort to induce Republican Members of Congress from Pennsylvania to vote for adequate funds and also to prevail upon the hard-boiled councilmen of the city of Philadelphia to accept the funds which the Federal Government is even now ready to provide for the unemployed in that city.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the whole trend of the Federal Government in the matter of disbursements is the following of strange gods. Agencies which did not exist several years ago now command the power of bureaucracy and millions in appropriations, but when we come to the essential fields of government, the preservation of property by flood-control measures and the maintenance of commerce by river and harbor development, we seem to have gotten into a condition of the doldrums.

Last year there were carried over the inland and coastal waters of the United States 583,000,000 tons of freight. This freight was carried at substantially one-tenth of the cost that would have been incurred if it had been carried over the rails, and this saving went into the national development.

Today we are confronted with the proposition that in this year of our Lord, for the development of our west coast, for the protection of our people there who have no transportation facilities except by water, particularly in Alaska, and for the protection and development of our Gulf ports and ports on the Atlantic coast, we have only the meager sum of $30,000,000, which is definitely inadequate for the needs of the situation and for the true and genuine development of America along industrial and social lines. So I say to you I am in full sympathy with the declaration of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] that $50,000,000, to be equally divided between river and harbor projects and flood-control projects, should be added to the present bill. If this is done, it will add substantially to the standard of living of the American people, it will add to their comforts, and it will add to the industrial and steady growth of America. Therefore, I say that when this matter comes up I for one, and I believe I speak for all Members of the House who understand the situation, will get behind the amendment when offered. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to talk about the bill. The gentlemen who have preceded me have covered that pretty thoroughly. Instead I am going to talk about a bill that will come onto the floor of the House next week, H. R. 5435, to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

In the fore part of April I appeared, with some farmers and canners from Wisconsin, before Mr. Andrews, Administrator of the Wage and Hour Act, when he was holding hearings on changes in the administration of the act. At that time we went over the canning industry, I thought, very thoroughly. There were other members of the industry from Wisconsin and other States present, and all of them gave practically the same testimony. All of us were down there with one idea in mind, to have further exemptions in the act so far as agricultural labor was concerned, and to have a clarification of the definition of agricultural labor, area of production, and so forth.

Two weeks after these hearings Mr. Andrews came forth with a new ruling, and this recent ruling—I believe it was dated April 19—absolutely disregarded all the testimony that was offered at the time of these hearings. He paid no attention to the statements of men in business, or to the statements of men interested in agriculture, and he paid no attention to the statements of Representatives of the House. He came out with a perfectly arbitrary ruling which was most injurious to the canning industry and agriculture, and the Lord knows we do not want to hurt the farmers any more. The ruling was absolutely a slap in the face to everybody who went down there to have the act clarified and broadened.

The gentlewoman from New Jersey, Mrs. NORTON, chairman of the Committee on Labor, is bringing a bill before the House next week under a rule which I understand will absolutely prohibit amendments. They have attempted to enlarge and clarify some statements on agricultural labor as well as a lot of other types of labor, but they have stuck some funny things in this bill. The expression has been used, "When those operations are performed at a terminal establishment," and this refers to the grading, cleaning, packing, drying, refrigerating, and so forth, of canned, fresh, and dried fruits and vegetables. Then later in the same section they attempt to define "terminal establishment" as follows:

> As used in this subsection, the term "terminal establishment" means an establishment which (1) is located either in the urban area where the products are to be consumed or at transportation centers for the purpose of servicing consumer markets, (2) receives the major portion of its goods from other establishments at which such goods have been previously concentrated or prepared, and (3) distributes its goods to wholesalers, retailers, consumers, or manufacturers.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Suppose a group of farmers get together in a cooperative organization to wash and pack their apples. Are they exempt under that law?

Mr. HAWKS. What does the gentleman think?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I do not think they are.

Mr. HAWKS. I do not, either, and I do not see how in the world, if you send this language back to the average layman or the average farmer, he is going to understand a definition of this kind.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to my friend from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. The gentleman is making a very splendid statement and I wish to corroborate what he has said. I know that in southern Missouri and northern Arkansas we have many small tomato-canning factories, and unless these small tomato-canning factories as well as the sawmills, particularly those that make staves, are exempted in the wage and hour law many of them will be forced to close their doors, which will throw more people out of work.

Mr. HAWKS. I would like to tell the gentleman from Missouri that I have correspondence in my files which indicates that at least 50 percent of the canning factories in Wisconsin are going to be closed this year. I had a letter the other day from one of the real good operators, a man who pays his bills, pays the farmer, and pays his labor, who states that if this amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act is enacted into law it is going to curtail his operations as much as 50 percent and injure not only his business but injure the farmers and injure the people who work in such factories.

Mr. SHORT. I wish to say to the gentleman that I also have dozens, if not scores, of letters, telegrams, and communications from canners all over my district, as well as the operators of these small sawmills, protesting vehemently about being included in the act.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I may say that I also have received letters from my district protesting against this provision of the law that has restricted them so they cannot operate their business.

Mr. HAWKS. What I want to know is whether this Congress is interested in giving jobs to people. Are we interested in helping the farmer market his produce? Are we interested in helping these little businesses and small towns all over the country keep on their feet, help them get along, or are we, through legislation of this kind, going to continue to keep on driving them down, deeper into debt and despair? It is high time we did some common-sense thinking for the small-business man and for the small farmer in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that the original law is so broad, and so vague, and so capable of many different interpretations that no one can tell what it is unless it is the Administrator himself?

Mr. HAWKS. Yes; and he has not demonstrated that he knows what it is all about.

Mr. SHORT. No lawyer can tell you what it means. How do they expect the layman to understand it?

Mr. HAWKS. They do not want the layman to do any thinking. Here is what the bill says:

Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, such regulations and orders may define terms used in this act.

The Administrator can go out and do as he pleases.

Mr. SHORT. The law is so ambiguous it is clear as mud.

Mr. HAWKS. Absolutely.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to my good friend.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I wonder if the gentleman has not the same situation in his district that I have in mine with regard to the small farmers' telephone companies?

Mr. HAWKS. Yes.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I have eight or nine that will either be driven into curtailment of service, bankruptcy, or into the hands of A. T. & T.

Mr. HAWKS. They started with 250 stations and increased it to 500, when they know darn well the only thing that will give relief is an exemption of 1,000 stations.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I think this is one of the most important bills that has been before this Congress during this session. We can appropriate money by the hundreds of millions of dollars for battleships and their manning without any questions being asked, and battleships may come and they may go, but when it comes to appropriating money to conserve the things that not only we here today need but generations yet unborn are going to look to for a living, it seems to me we are mighty short-sighted.

I think we should be the most liberal in connection with appropriations for flood control, and certainly more so than any other one item that comes before the Congress. We have seen our great rivers, such as the Missouri, such as the Mississippi, such as the Ohio, the Yellowstone, the Warrior, take away our best lands and leave nothing in their wake except gaping wounds in the earth and sand bars to challenge us in the future and call us to account for the mistakes we have made.

I want to call your attention to something which I think has been overlooked, and that is the fact that we are constructing our dams to control floods too far down the streams. Those dams in time will be filled up with silt. Our top soils are being washed away by rampant high waters. I do not want to make any disparaging remarks about the dam that was built at Fort Peck, but I have received pretty fair and reliable information to the effect that in 50 years hence it will be filled by silt, and then we will have a great waterfall only. I contend that these dams should be built closer to the source from whence the water comes.

Take the Yellowstone River. It rises in the State of Wyoming, flows into Yellowstone Lake, and thence on in a northeasterly direction to the State of North Dakota. An impounding dam should be constructed at a point where silt would not be a factor, such as is the case at Fort Peck. We should have a dam where the river goes out of the Yellowstone Park. The principal tributary rivers of the Missouri River which cause floods are the Marias and the Yellowstone Rivers. Those rivers should have impounding dams close to the source to prevent the great ravages of the major streams as they flow from the Central States to the State of Mississippi. I was upon the committee that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] refers to. We got a very sympathetic hearing, but did not get very much encouragement. We should be liberal here today in voting these appropriations. It is true we may have resources enough in this country to take care of the present population, but remember the millions and hundreds of millions that are to come after we are gone, and if we let our resources get away from us, such as our fine bottom lands that are being submerged, flooded, and cut away by these streams, we are denying to future generations what is rightfully theirs and what is within our power to allot to them today. We will increase our greatest and only permanent asset which in the end will take care of the Budget. So I say it is up to us. We need impounding dams on the Yellowstone River. We need them on the Marias River to protect the land through which these streams flow. I have seen the finest of lands along the Yellowstone River producing splendid crops, which were cut away, destroyed, and in time there was nothing left but sand bars. I have seen the same condition happen along the Marias River and the Missouri River as it flowed down through the Central States. We must legislate not only for today but for years and years hence and save the natural resources that Nature gave us, from which we feed and clothe ourselves and provide for the future people. We cannot do less. Let us appropriate the amount of funds the Army engineers say is necessary.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, there is a growing sentiment among the Members of the House of Representatives that the present exclusive appropriating powers of the Committee on Appropriations should be restricted, and that some of the authority over appropriations ought to be restored to the important legislative policy-making committees of the House of Representatives, which formerly had jurisdiction in this field; and the reason for that sentiment is the fact that there is an increasing belief that in many important instances the Committee on Appropriations has abused the exclusive authority that was given to it some years ago.

These policy-making legislative committees of the House spend weeks and months in hearings, taking the testimony of experts, and weighing the opinions of the best minds throughout the country for the purpose of arriving at correct conclusions as to what ought to be done in certain fields of legislative activity, like flood control, rivers and harbors, military and naval affairs, and many other matters.

One of the main purposes of all this consideration by the legislative committee is to determine what amount of money it is necessary to appropriate in order properly to prosecute the governmental activity which the committee has under consideration. When the committee comes to a conclusion upon the subject it reports out a bill authorizing an appropriation in the amount decided upon and submits that bill to the House for its consideration. Such a bill is called an authorization bill. The House may then, after thorough debate, either approve or reject it. If it is approved it goes to the Senate, where it is referred to committee, thoroughly considered, and reported to the Senate for approval or rejection. If the Senate approves it and the President signs it, it then becomes law.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that a majority of the membership of the House are and always have been of the opinion that an authorization act, so considered and so approved, not only by the Congress but by the President, ought to be considered by the Appropriations Committee as a mandate to appropriate, and that this mandate ought not to be ignored by the Appropriations Committee except for the most sound and well-considered reasons.

But time after time these legislative committees have seen their well-considered proposals and recommendations go to the Committee on Appropriations after those proposals in legislative form have received the approval of the House, the Senate, and the President, and they have seen them there disposed of in the most perfunctory and arbitrary manner. They have seen them given a brief hearing by a subcommittee, and then they have seen the recommendations of the subcommittee go before the full committee and receive practically no hearings at all. The Appropriations Committee fixes and reports to the House such appropriations as it pleases, regardless of the mandate of the House, the Senate, and the President as expressed in the authorization bill.

That has been the case with the Appropriations Committee in the bill before us now. I think the action of the Appropriations Committee in this case is an abuse of its authority, and I believe the House is going to correct the action of the Appropriations Committee in ignoring the mandate of the Congress in connection with the flood control and river and harbor appropriations which are now before us. I believe the House is going to increase the appropriation for these items so that they will be somewhat commensurate with the amounts which the House by an overwhelming majority has authorized to be appropriated.

In 1936 the Congress, by enacting the first general flood-control bill, declared it to be the policy of the United States to control the floods of its rivers. It declared flood control to be a national problem, and it declared that the problem should be solved by the Federal Government at Federal expense. After very long and careful hearings in 1938 another flood-control bill was reported to the House, and it passed the House and Senate and became law. That bill authorized a broad, scientific, comprehensive program which has met with universal approval of the country. That bill authorized $300,000,000 for the control of floods. The Army engineers recommended this year there should be expended out of that appropriation $195,000,000, and they made that recommendation after a most careful, thorough, and expert study.

But the Bureau of the Budget, without, so far as anyone knows, making any study of it at all, sent in a Budget estimate of $110,000,000 instead of $195,000,000, and told the Appropriations Committee that that was all it could recommend.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman is criticizing the Committee on Appropriations for overruling the legislative committee. Can the gentleman tell us in what way the committee today overruled the legislative committee?

Mr. MOTT. The legislative committee, as I have just stated, authorized an appropriation of $300,000,000 for flood control. The Army engineers recommended there could be profitably expended from that amount this year $195,000,000. The engineers recommended $195,000,000 as the proper, scientific, and economical amount to be spent; but, as I say, the Budget, without any good reason, in my opinion, and, in fact, without any substantiated reason at all, recommended that only $110,000,000 be expended.

This matter then went before the Military Affairs subcommittee on appropriations, and the subcommittee, after some consideration, and at least after hearing the testimony of competent witnesses, recommended that the small amount of $25,000,000 for flood control be added to the Budget estimate. All of the subcommittee, I understand, were agreed to that. Then it went before the full committee, and the full committee, after consideration of about 30 minutes, and without taking any testimony whatever, rejected the recommendation of the subcommittee and reported out the bill only for the amount recommended by the Budget. I say they had no moral authority to do that. I say that in all the circumstances their action was an abuse of the exclusive power over appropriations that has been given them. I hope that the House this afternoon will vote—will rebuke that abuse of authority—and that it will vote to restore at least a part of this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has expired.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

As a matter of fact, the Army engineers recommended no amount. They said they could profitably expend $95,000,000 for flood control and $105,000,000 for rivers and harbors.

Mr. MOTT. Of course, that is the technical way in which the engineers put in their report or recommendation. Such a report by the engineers is always considered as their recommendation.

Mr. ENGEL. They said they could profitably expend that amount, but they did not recommend anything.

Mr. MOTT. Well, we call that a recommendation. It is just a technical difference in the use of words.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I could not let pass without some observation the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] to the effect that there is a growing sentiment in behalf of abolishing the appropriation function of that committee and revesting it in the legislative committees of the House.

Some Members may be interested to know that that was the procedure up to 1921, but when we passed the Budget and Accounting Act and at that time set up the Bureau of the Budget, we also changed the situation in Congress, so that the appropriating power should be vested exclusively in the Appropriations Committee. There was good reason for that, and the reason was to escape the constant charge of "pork," for one thing, and to be able at the end of the congressional session to tell what the fiscal state of the Nation was. We had the expression "the old pork barrel" back before 1921, and for good reason. Here was the Military Affairs Committee first legislating for the War Department, then providing the appropriations, without any check. Here was the Naval Affairs Committee legislating for the Navy, and then providing the money for the Navy. Too often there was a sense of gratitude that made the appropriation climb up pretty high. Here is the Flood Control Committee, first of all initiating and authorizing the projects that shall be approved by the Congress, and then spending the dough for them.

There was no check or balance, and if you will examine the history of supply bills and appropriations before the Congress you will find it was often months and months before the fiscal agencies of Government could tell where we stood. They could not tell you how much had been expended; they could not tell you how much had been appropriated; they could not tell what the revenues were. There was no budgetary system. The whole fiscal situation in the country was in a confused and chaotic state. So it became necessary, in the interest of orderly procedure, in the interest of checking the legislative committees, that there should be an Appropriations Committee, which on occasion would sit down on the lid, when it became necessary. That was the reason for the Appropriations Committee, with exclusive power for one thing; and if you ask me, I think in my humble way I can say to you that they have done a pretty splendid job for the taxpayers of the country. We have to sit there behind the table day after day listening to Members from both the House and Senate come here and ask that these appropriations be increased no end. If there were not some kind of check, Heaven only knows what would happen to the United States of America.

The President right now is quoted in the press as saying that the Congress had welched on its obligation to the Executive in not providing tax revenues necessary in order to approximate some kind of a state of balance for the Budget. The Appropriations Committee has been doing some kind of a job in assisting the Chief Executive in that direction.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Was more money appropriated by the Naval Affairs Committee and by the Military Affairs Committee and by the Rivers and Harbors Committee when the legislative committees did the appropriating than has been appropriated since?

Mr. DIRKSEN. You can draw no parallel, for the simple reason that only 40 years ago our naval appropriations were around $40,000,000. There was no occasion for more appropriations at that time. The only way you could properly contrast the matter would be if they were having that power today and there would not be an Appropriations Committee to sit down and take off a few million here and there. The whole impulse is always to get all the money there is in the Treasury. There is only one agency that stands between the Members of Congress and the Federal Treasury, and that is the Appropriations Committee, and I will say to you that they have a very hard time doing a little job in that direction.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman tell me why the Appropriations Committee almost as often as not has increased the Budget estimate as well as decreased it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, there is a difference of opinion on the Appropriations Committee, just as there are differences of opinion in this whole body.

Mr. MOTT. Certainly; and the point I am making is that all of these matters are carefully and minutely considered by the policy-making legislative committees, and then it comes before the full Committee on Appropriations, and it is given a half hour consideration and in their discretion they raise or lower it. That is not fair. I say in this particular instance it was an abuse of authority, in my opinion.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will say to you, as far as the half hour's consideration is concerned, that we held hearings for 6 weeks on the Agriculture Department appropriation bill.

Mr. MOTT. But how long on this bill before the full committee?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The full committee was only on this bill this morning, but the subcommittee labored behind closed doors day after day and day after day for weeks, and if an incessant and relentless pressure had not been exerted on the members of the subcommittee handling this bill the amount carried would have been smaller than it is.

Mr. MOTT. And you turned down the recommendation of the subcommittee in half an hour.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; quite true; and for very good reason, as probably will be explained on this floor before we finally finish the bill. But I started on the premise that the Appropriations Committee is essentially a kind of check upon the spending proclivities of the legislative committees and, for that matter, the spending proclivities of every Member of the House.

Mr. MOTT. I understand; but certainly it has not been put into practice in some instances.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I say it very impersonally. I am no different from any other Member of Congress. I get requests from my constituents for projects of one kind and another, and I do the same identical thing that other Members do; but here is the Appropriations Committee, and it is supposed to operate as a check. I think the gentleman himself would not care to go back to the bewildering and confusing situation we had prior to 1921, when nobody knew for at least 6 months after Congress adjourned how much actually had been expended.

Mr. MOTT. That is not my point.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I was interested in the statement that the Appropriations Committee had been sitting on the lid. Does the gentleman know that there is a movement in this House now to pry that lid open again and to add $50,000,000 to this bill for just two objects?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that that effort to pry off the lid has been going on ever since 1932. He knows it and I know it, and that is the reason we are in the $9,500,000,000 bracket of expenditures per fiscal year, and soon we will be going up to the $11,000,000,000 bracket if we are not careful.

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman will permit, let me say that if there is one thing the American people are asking this Congress to do it is to sit on the lid.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no question about it, and that is the sentiment that comes from the people back home who have to pay the taxes and carry this tremendous load.

I pointed out here 2 weeks ago that the interest on the national debt for the single fiscal year 1940, as reported by the subcommittee on the Treasury and Post Office appropriations, will be $1,050,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940. This is more money than the entire cost of government in the year 1914, when for the first time since the Civil War we got into the $1,000,000,000 class. If we keep on spending, the interest on the national debt goes up and the burden on the taxpayer increases year by year. Mr. Chairman, there has got to be an end to it, and the Appropriations Committee has been trying to make a start. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill now carries $28,000,000 more for flood control than the flood-control bill caried last year. On the other hand, it carries $42,000,000 less for rivers and harbors construction than last year's bill did. I live in the Great Lakes region of Michigan, and I am going to go along with the bill.

Referring to the statement made by the gentleman from Oregon, he has echoed the sentiment that has been expressed several times in this House. I call the attention of the House to the fact that I sat in the Appropriations Committee last year and watched more than $12,000,000,000 go across the table in one session of Congress. The present Budget, not figuring trust funds, will before we get through amount to about $10,500,000,000. Congress in the Appropriations Committee for the fiscal years 1934, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939 and 1940, if we carry out this Budget and stay within the Budget, will have appropriated over $65,000,000,000, or 48 percent of the assessed value of every piece of real and personal property placed on the assessment rolls by the local assessing officers of the 48 States. Were we to appropriate everything authorized by the legislative committees of Congress, where would we be?

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Does the gentleman not think it good economy to spend $1 if by so doing you can save $10?

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman is assuming that we are going to have disastrous floods every year. I am willing to go along with a reasonable flood-control appropriation. I am willing to give $110,000,000 for flood control, which is $28,000,000 more than was appropriated last year. However, I, for one, am going to insist on being shown where the money is coming from before I go beyond the Budget.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Congress last year, with I think only four dissenting votes, passed the 1938 Flood Control Act authorizing the construction of projects which they thought would solve this pressing problem in our country. No appropriation was made last year to carry out that program. This is the first year Congress has had the opportunity of appropriating any sizable sum to carry out a program which will save this country billions of dollars, the very thing the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. ENGEL. The flood-control program runs to somewhere around $400,000,000. Again I ask, Where are we going if we appropriate everything authorized within a year or two? Right now more than $2,000,000,000 has been authorized by Congress without appropriations having been made to cover these authorizations.

Are you going to accuse the Appropriations Committee of thwarting the will of the legislative committees because we do not bring in here two or three billions of dollars in additional appropriation bills beyond what is authorized by the Budget?

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I know the gentleman will give me a frank answer to this question.

Mr. ENGEL. I will try to.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman knows the history of flood-control legislation in the past couple of years?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman knows what the subcommittee did after several weeks of careful hearings. It recommended to the full committee that $25,000,000 over the Budget estimate be reported to the House today. What I want to know is what justification there is in the gentleman's mind for the full committee, after considering the proposition for less than 30 minutes, turning down the recommendation of its own subcommittee?

Mr. ENGEL. I shall answer the gentleman and answer him fairly. In the first place, the subcommittee was divided. The subcommittee, I may say, was evenly divided. I understood the subcommittee was going to refer the question to the full committee. I was called out. When we got into the full committee, some of the members were under the impression that we could earmark $50,000,000 of relief funds. We found we could not do that, because the relief bill has not been passed.

In the second place, the committee felt if the President wanted $50,000,000 for flood control, the President should send down a Budget estimate, then the committee would act upon it and keep within the Budget.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee felt they did not want to go beyond the Budget. They did not want to place themselves in a position where the Executive could say they jumped the gun on him, that we had increased the appropriation above the Budget allowance.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I have no criticism whatever of the Committee on Appropriations. I think it serves a very important and essential function in this House. I will go further and say I think every serious-thinking Member of this body is genuinely alarmed at the continuing deficit and the constantly rising public debt. But I think I speak the truth when I say the American people are more concerned not as to the amount of money that is spent but the manner in which it is spent and the purposes for which it is spent. This money, Mr. Chairman, is not going to be wasted on "boondoggling" projects—the raking of leaves, building of outhouses on the sides of hills in North Carolina, the constructing of a dog pound in Memphis, or monkey houses in Little Rock. This money is going to be spent to save human life and to save hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property.

I want to remind you also that every dollar that has been spent in our past history by the Army engineers has been wisely spent, and never has anyone raised his voice in protest or questioned the integrity and honesty of the men who construct these projects. It seems to me when we come in here and vote hundreds of millions of dollars for so many different things, then vote against an increased appropriation of $50,000,000 for these useful projects which will serve the public all alike, indiscriminately, without partisanship, without favor or discrimination, is simply straining at the gnat and swallowing the camel.

I am heartily in favor of increasing this appropriation $50,000,000—$25,000,000 for flood control and the other $25,000,000 for rivers and harbors—because it is really an investment and will yield interest on the money that is spent.

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman has asked me a very interesting question. [Laughter and applause.] In answer, may I say that I agree with the gentleman with one exception. I am not going to jump the gun. When you bring in a relief bill and show me that you can use relief labor to advantage on these projects, and I think you can, I am willing to earmark the $50,000,000 for flood control and rivers and harbors.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that when relief funds are allotted to this purpose it is required by the contract let by the Corps of Engineers that as much relief labor as possible shall be employed. Thereby those able workmen who are unemployed but not on relief cannot get jobs on those projects. I feel this money for flood control ought to be allotted directly to the Corps of Engineers to expend as the corps sees fit and that the work be given to regular unemployed workmen who are entitled to the jobs whether they are on relief or not. Relief status should not be required. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CORPS OF ENGINEERS

RIVERS AND HARBORS

To be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, and to remain available until expended:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes and other boundary and connecting waters as heretofore authorized, including the preparation, correction, printing, and issuing of charts and bulletins and the investigation of lake levels; for prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City; for expenses of the California Debris Commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893, as amended (33 U. S. C. 661, 678, and 683); for removing sunken vessels or craft obstructing or endangering navigation as authorized by law; for operating and maintaining, keeping in repair, and continuing in use without interruption any lock, canal (except the Panama Canal), canalized river, or other public works for the use and benefit of navigation belonging to the United States, including maintenance of the Hennepin Canal in Illinois; for payment annually of tuition fees of not to exceed 50 student officers of the Corps of Engineers at civil technical institutions under the provisions of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (10 U. S. C. 535); for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors; for printing and binding, newspapers, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and office supplies and equipment required in the Office of the Chief of Engineers to carry out the purposes of this appropriation, including such printing as may be authorized by the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, either during a recess or session of Congress, of surveys authorized by law, and such surveys as may be printed during a recess of Congress shall be printed, with illustrations, as documents of the next succeeding session of Congress, and for the purchase (not to exceed $220,708) of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats, for official use: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law, nor for any work upon or incident to the project to extend the channel of the Mississippi River above St. Anthony Falls, $71,000,000: Provided, That from this appropriation the Secretary of War may, in his discretion and on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers based on the recommendation by the Board of Rivers and Harbors in the review of a report or reports authorized by law, expend such sums as may be necessary for the maintenance of harbor channels provided by a State, municipality, or other public agency, outside of harbor lines and serving essential needs of general commerce and navigation, such work to be subject to the conditions recommended by the Chief of Engineers in his report or reports thereon: Provided further, That no appropriation under the Corps of Engineers for the fiscal year 1940 shall be available for any expenses incident to operating any power-driven boat or vessel on other than Government business: Provided further, That not to exceed $3,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be available for the support and maintenance of the Permanent International Commission of the Congresses of Navigation and for the payment of the actual expenses of the properly accredited delegates of the United States to the meeting of the congresses and of the commission.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 8, line 4, strike out "$71,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$96,000,000."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment adds $25,000,000 to the amount in the bill for new river and harbor work. I plan to offer an amendment to the flood-control paragraph increasing the amount in the bill by $23,000,000, and to offer another amendment to the Mississippi River project paragraph increasing the amount therein by $2,000,000. These are the amounts the subcommittee had approved, and in the aggregate they amount to $50,000,000, which is the amount the President has indicated he would later allot of the work-relief appropriation for 1940.

A representative of the Engineer Corps of the Army has indicated that relief appropriations are not designed for this character of work. I dare say that he would state to you that he would prefer not to have it. He has indicated he can spend in an economical way about twice as much, or nearly twice as much, as the bill will carry with these amendments. Personally I am convinced there will be no increase over the Budget estimates when we take into consideration the fact that it is the determination of the House later to decrease relief appropriations by the amount of $50,000,000.

In a sense, the proposals in the three amendments I have referred to are related, and in view of that fact, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to offer the other two amendments at this time and ask that all three be considered together.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman to request that his three amendments be voted upon as one amendment?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right; they are all closely related. They are identical with the amounts in the bill as reported by the subcommittee to the full Committee on Appropriations. Considering the three amendments together would very much expedite the consideration of the bill. You cannot discuss one without discussing the other.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, according to the gentleman's request, the subject may not be divided?

Mr. COLLINS. No; it would not be divided.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Suppose some Members agree with the first increase and do not agree with the second increase?

Mr. COLLINS. I believe it would be very much better to consider them together, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a very unusual parliamentary procedure to have three amendments voted on as one amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the three amendments be considered together. If the gentleman from New York desires to object, he may do so.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEALEY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEALEY. Do I understand that the only amendment now being considered is the proposed increase of $25,000,000 in the rivers and harbors section of the bill?

Mr. COLLINS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the status now.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if this series of amendments to be offered by my colleague from Mississippi is adopted, it will have the effect of increasing the amount in this bill over the Budget estimate by almost 30 percent. If this increase is carried on throughout the entire Budget for this fiscal year, this Congress will appropriate approximately $13,500,000,000, instead of the $9,500,000,000 recommended by the Chief Executive. Unquestionably many of these projets are highly desirable. They touch the districts of many of our people and of many Members of the Congress. I am quite sure that is one of the reasons my good colleague from Ohio today said he was for sensible economy and that sensible economy impelled him on this occasion to vote for an increase of $50,000,000 over the Budget estimate in a bill which carries $187,000,000.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, because he is the gentleman who made that statement.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Where is there any sanctity about the Budget? Does anybody want to say that the members of the Bureau of the Budget resolve all these figures by definite calculation? Does not the gentleman know that whenever the Budget arrives at a conclusion they look at geography, they look at politics, and they look at a good many factors? Who is it that wants to put a halo around the Budget? Nobody on the gentleman's side pays any attention to the Budget. If the gentleman's side does not pay any attention to the Budget, why does the gentleman raise a hue and cry about the Budget today, when the people in many sections need this relief?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yielded only for a question.

I place no halo about the Budget, but I do place a halo about sound common sense and a sound fiscal policy for the Federal Government. I believe the time has come when we must call a halt to unauthorized and unbudgeted expenditures. Sooner or later, regardless of what you think of the Budget, this Government must get upon an even keel financially or repudiate governmental obligations. This is the reason I call it to your attention. Of course, there is no halo about the Budget. In the long run, the financial salvation of the country depends on the sound, common sense, good judgment, and patriotism of the Members of this House. Every sensible person knows, regardless of his own enlightened self-interest in some of these projects, that sooner or later the Budget must be balanced, and we plead with you to stand by the Appropriations Committee in this respect.

The time is coming when you can obtain sufficient funds to carry on additional projects if you so desire, but do not run over your committee and do not run over the Budget, and do not disregard the plea of the President of the United States in voting for an increase in this bill of $50,000,000 and thereby add that much to the total indebtedness of this country.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield for a question.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Does not my distinguished colleague from Alabama know and realize, as does the membership of this House, that the expenditure of this $50,000,000 will help to balance the Budget by saving the resources of this Nation?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. May I say to my colleague from Missouri, who has rendered service of such inestimable value to the people and the country in this connection, that I appreciate our difficulties here. I appreciate the value of river and harbor work and of flood-control work, but I also appreciate the value of a sound public credit. When we destroy the faith and credit of the Federal Government, we have destroyed everything worth while and we have nothing to save. I will remind the gentleman that 2 years ago I stood on the floor of this House and fought for flood-control money in the relief bill and had his assistance at that time. The time is coming when we will get a sufficient amount of money to carry on some of these projects you are so much interested in at this time.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The gentleman talked about unauthorized expenditures——

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I said unauthorized and unbudgeted expenditures.

Mr. HEALEY. All the projects that are covered by the increase that was introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi have been authorized and have been recommended by the Army engineers, have they not?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I said unauthorized and unbudgeted expenditures.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield so that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all time on this amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to 20 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, the Board of Army Engineers asked for $102,000,000 for works already authorized by the Congress. When their request went before the Budget it was reduced to $30,000,000—some reduction, you will agree.

Now, is this for relief or is it for worth-while projects that have to be accomplished in the interest of all the people of this country? Naturally, we took this out of the hands of the "pork barrel" committees that formerly handled it and gave it into the hands of the Army engineers for the express purpose of having them do the work that was considered necessary in the interests of all the people of this country. If we cannot get this money any other way than by taking it out of the relief funds, of course, let us do it in that way; and I understand from the author of the amendment that is the only way we can put this in the bill at this time. Surely, if there are the people unemployed that we read about, this money could well be spent in taking care of the unemployed. But let me tell you further about the inconsistency with which we approach this problem.

We appropriated $775,000,000 for the Navy just a day or two ago. We have an increase provided for of 20 percent over the normal size of the Navy.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. In just a moment, please.

That 20 percent requires that we build a certain number of battleships, cruisers, and lighter craft. Mr. Chairman, part of the funds asked for by the Army engineers was needed for the dredging of harbors in which to place those ships when they are built. Already the building program is turning out from 30 to 40 ships a year. Where are we going to put them? The $30,000,000 allowed by the Budget will not take care of the necessary items for the needs of the United States Fleet, and you do not have to take my word for that. All you have to do is to ask the Navy Department.

It so happens that part of this fund was to be spent in my district, but that is a minor detail. If you have not the room in my district you can put the fleet somewhere else, but it also happens that is the proper place for part of the fleet at the present time. National policies demand it. And I am not asking anything for my district that I would not ask for your districts, but I am asking this in the name of national defense.

When we spend $775,000,000 for the maintenance of the fleet for 1 year and cannot spend more than $30,000,000 for the maintenance of the harbors of this great Nation for 1 year, there is something vitally wrong with our fiscal policy.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. Yes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman wants to be fair. Thirty million dollars is for new construction. This is not for maintenance.

Mr. IZAC. That is correct. The maintenance of a harbor merely means keeping the lanes open. New construction means dredging which has to take place before you can put ships in certain places in the harbors. If the harbors are congested, you will not be able to do away with the merchant shipping to make place for the Navy, so it simply means that we have to do some dredging in order to provide the space necessary for naval defense. I hope everyone will support the three amendments offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition. During all of my service in Congress I have been a friend of river and harbor legislation, and since it has come in, of flood-control legislation, and never have had a dollar of that money for either purpose spent in the district that I represent. I rise to call attention to one matter. The President of the United States made a statement about exceeding the Budget in appropriations, and I think 90 percent of the people of the United States applauded him for making the statement. If we today in this one bill, which already carries something over $200,000,000, add to it, for two things, rivers and harbors and flood control, a sufficient sum to carry it over the Budget estimate by $50,000,000, I do not think the people of the country will sustain us. I think already we have made a rather liberal allotment.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Just let me get through with this $50,000,000 matter. Further than that, it will be remembered that in 1938, when earmarking the relief bill, the President agreed to spend $50,000,000 for flood control and river and harbor work, and on Friday last the President told me—and I said to him that I asked the question in order that I might quote him—that I could assure the House of Representatives that he would, out of the relief funds voted for 1940, allot or spend as much as $50,000,000 for flood control and river and harbor work. With that assurance I do not believe that this Committee this afternoon, considering the condition of the Treasury, considering how much the people are worked up about Government expenditure, should hazard placing in this bill an additional $50,000,000 over the Budget estimates. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS rose.

Mr. RAYBURN. If I have any time remaining I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLLINS. If this House votes $50,000,000 in this bill, and the relief bill is reduced by $50,000,000, then we have gotten very much better river and harbor and flood control work, and no more money has been expended. Is not that true?

Mr. RAYBURN. I very much hope that this earmarking of the relief bill will not be begun, as I tried to prevent it last year, but that these things may be done voluntarily, because when you begin earmarking relief money, when you take free money away from the man who administers relief money, then you have no real relief money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I know how long and hard and how faithfully the majority leader has worked to bring about an accommodation of this controversy, and I thank him for his efforts, and also for yielding me a half minute of his brief time in which to make the statement that the amendments offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] are the first of three amendments I said in general debate I proposed to offer, and we are very glad to have a member of the Committee on Appropriations offer those amendments and I urge all Members present to vote for all three amendments. These three amendments, $25,000,000 for rivers and harbors, offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] and the amendments yet to be offered by him, $23,000,000 for projects under these flood control acts and $2,000,000 for the lower Mississippi, totaling $50,000,000, should all three be voted up or voted down. No group of Members could have been fairer than our flood-control group.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, when we consider an appropriation bill in this House, I think we ought to stand up here at the desk the figure of an American taxpayer and put a sign across his breast, and that sign ought to read, "What chance have I in this Chamber?" [Applause.] For 6 years and more I have stood in the Well of this House and supported river and harbor legislation and appropriations, and I propose to go along with this bill as it stands in spite of the fact that out of $256,000,000 which the bill carries only $1,493,000 is carried for the State of Michigan, which has a coast line of 1,700 miles. In spite of that fact, I propose to support the bill as it stands. I call attention to the fact that with every appropriation bill when it reaches this floor there is a tendency to increase the amount. Money is voted and appropriated by Congress with utter abandon and recklessness. There is no attempt to economize. How long is the American Nation going to travel along this road before we reach the point when the credit of the country is no longer good—that is the question the American taxpayer and the American citizen is asking himself and the country today. The first line in this bill reads "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." Every Member of the House knows that the Treasury of the United States is empty, and this money must be borrowed to carry on this work. There is no money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. I echo the sentiment that has been advanced by my genial and able friend from Alabama [Mr. STARNES], when he says that one of the things that is required in this country in order to keep it on an even keel is a sound financial policy. There is not a Member on the floor of this House who does not agree with that. How long are we going to have a sound financial policy when the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States has already publicly stated that he would not dare make any forecast as to what might happen in this country if the national debt went above $50,000,000,000. But how long will it be if we travel the pace we are now going before we reach the point when the national debt is $50,000,000,000 and will be above it? Every time we put an extra burden on the back of the taxpayers we take just that much more money out of private industry and business. The price and cost of government is becoming a staggering burden most detrimental to the welfare of the American people. We must return to common sense in this Nation. Let us vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi to add $50,000,000 more to this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, in voting for the amendment under consideration I am taking into consideration the appropriation for relief that has been recommended by the Budget.

As far as I am concerned, I propose to stay within the Budget recommendations in connection with these two matters. As a friend of the pending amendment I trust that all those who vote for it will pursue the policy outlined by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. Chairman, if the suggestions of the President that flood control and rivers and harbors are to be increased by $50,000,000 out of relief funds, is to be adopted, substantially this amendment must be approved; for otherwise neither the Congress nor the Chief Executive can make available $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors and flood control for effective use. If we are to make effective the agreement outlined by my friend, the majority leader, substantially the pending amendment must be adopted. Otherwise that $50,000,000 will not be available for flood control or rivers and harbors.

Under the relief and emergency acts passed in 1938, and under all prior relief and emergency acts passed, we have included flood control, but in reality neither the President nor the Congress, when they have undertaken to provide for flood-control projects that have been appropriated for out of relief funds, have succeeded, and both the President and the Congress have signally failed. For the fiscal year 1938 the Congress appropriated $30,000,000 for flood control and appropriated an additional $30,000,000 out of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937; that is, the Congress under took to earmark out of relief funds. The Corps of Engineers was unable to spend that $30,000,000 relief funds, and after spending every dollar they could, $11,000,000 of that amount was reappropriated a year thereafter for rivers and harbors with the relief limitations removed. For the Mississippi, in the same act, there was appropriated an additional $15,000,000, earmarked by Congress out of said relief appropriation act. Congress could do no more nor less than the Chief Executive. The only way that relief funds can be used by either Congress or the President for flood control and for rivers and harbors is to remove the W. P. A. restrictions. We can only remove those restrictions by passing substantially the pending amendment. We appropriate $1,425,000,000 for relief and tell the country we are going to provide for flood-control work, street improvements, and other similar work, to aid unemployment, but these relief funds cannot be used satisfactorily for flood control and river and harbor works. We might as well understand that if the President's agreement to increase this appropriation is to be made effective, substantially this amendment must be adopted. We should vote to adopt the amendment and reduce the appropriation in the emergency relief measure by $50,000,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] is recognized.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. Is it not strange to see some men stand on this floor today and talk about balancing the Budget, when they voted for billions of dollars to be spent for the politicians, to keep themselves in office, and they object to the Army engineers spending a few hundred millions for permanent projects?

Mr. CULKIN. I agree with the gentleman, and that is the very proposition to which I intend to address myself.

Mr. SHORT. That is fine.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, of course, the past 6 years have been a period of extraordinary emergency, but there has been approximately $8,000,000,000 foolishly spent. It might just as well have been thrown into the sewer. Today we heard the gentleman from Alabama and certain Members on my own side of the aisle protesting appropriations for things that are part of the true functions and true business of government. Rivers and harbors is one of those functions. Flood control is another. I ask you gentlemen, are we to treat the Budget as a sacrosanct when it comes to these important and vital functions of the Government, and when it gives an inadequate sum to flood control? I say to the dignified Appropriations Committee that they should pare this budget in places where it can be pared without doing violence to the essential functions of government. I say to you Members from the farming areas that adequate water navigation in the Western States, in the Mississippi Valley, in the South, everywhere, depends upon carrying out the projects which are provided for by this amendment. [Applause.] They cannot be carried out without adequate money. I say to those of you who yesterday, in common with myself, voted $730,000,000 for the Navy, based largely on war psychology created in a certain quarter, that the people of the United States, the farmers, the industrialists, and the consumers, are truly served by this river and harbor development. If they are abandoned, as there seems to be an apparent intention in some quarters to abandon them, the American people are the ones who will suffer. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not very often that I inflict myself upon the Members of the House, but I do feel very keenly about this amendment, which I want to see adopted.

In 1938 Congress by practically a unanimous vote, gentlemen on both sides of the aisle voted for a national flood-control bill which would inaugurate a system of flood control that in their judgment would save the great valleys of our Nation from future devastation and ruin. We realized that the floods that come in different sections of our country had become in recent years so serious that something must be done about it, that it was a national problem, a problem which should be dealt with by the Federal Government. We all remember what happened in New England, New York, and other sections where millions of dollars of property were swept away in a few hours. On the Ohio River $400,000,000 were lost to the people of that section of the country in a few weeks' time. For these reasons we voted almost unanimously that the time had come when we should inaugurate a program which would avert in the future these calamities which lead to these sections of our country.

Mr. Chairman, we must remember that the wealth of this Nation is wrapped up in our great valleys. They are the food basket of the Nation, if you please, not only in time of peace but in time of war; and we must preserve these rich, fertile, agricultural sections of our country for the future as well as use them in the day in which we live. Mr. Chairman, this is the first opportunity we have had to make a liberal appropriation to inaugurate this program which I think will add to the national income largely, help balance the Budget—and that is what a lot of Members have been concerned with here today.

It seems to me that in opposing these amendments we are penny-wise and pound-poor. If we are ever going to balance the Budget we have got to increase the income and assets of the country, and the only way we can do it so far as the agricultural sections are concerned—and I will include the industrial sections too—is to prevent these billions of losses that come to our country periodically by devastating floods. [Applause.] It seems to me it is highly logical that we appropriate enough money to make a fair start on these authorized projects. I earnestly urge the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I want to read a paragraph from a communication from the War Department that deals with this question:

> The funds for flood-control works contained in the appropriation for the fiscal year 1938 contain balances transferred from Emergency Relief Act appropriations. The Department was instructed to insure that these funds be used to employ as many local people in need of relief as possible. To comply with these instructions, the specifications for all contracts for flood-control work to be financed from the flood-control appropriation of 1938 have been drawn to include a provision that labor be obtained from relief rolls as far as possible, provided that such labor is qualified for the job and can be secured from the vicinity of the work.

That policy is followed through by a paragraph inserted in the contracts let by the War Department for flood-control works, which reads as follows—and this is quoted from a letter addressed to me by the Los Angeles Building Trades Council, signed by Mr. C. J. Haggerty, secretary:

> 1–37. Relief labor: The contractor shall employ as many laborers (skilled and unskilled) as possible from relief rolls: Provided, That such labor is qualified for the job and can be secured from the vicinity of the site of the work: And provided further, That such relief labor shall be subject to the same wage, hour, and other conditions applicable to labor generally under the terms of this contract.

Mr. Haggerty goes on to say:

> I am sure that you will agree that this mandatory specification is unfair to the contractor, as well as every independent building tradesman and construction worker who has had sufficient courage, stamina, and pride to maintain himself as best he could without making application for relief. This specification is something new and was not effective until August of 1938, and has, to me, the implications of a political maneuver and should not be permitted to remain in these specifications. I am sure that you will also agree this country is unfairly penalizing independent construction workers when it places a premium upon relief clients by giving preference to those people on relief with the thousands of unemployed independent building and construction workers who are forced to remain unemployed while the relief client who has been supported by the Government for years and has made a career of relief work is given preference in private contract jobs which exist between a contractor and a governmental body.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one observation?

Mr. HINSHAW. I hope the gentleman will let me complete my statement. My time is very limited.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that when money appropriated for W. P. A. is allocated by the President to flood-control work it is then mandatory to employ relief labor on flood-control works. This means that if a man is out of a job he has to be also on relief before he can actually be employed by the War Department on these works. I have some projects in my district and I know whereof I speak. The unemployed worker who is not on relief does not have an opportunity on these projects under such an arrangement. I have letters in this file from individuals, from labor unions, from contractors, and from every element involved in the district protesting against this sort of thing.

I propose that we adopt this amendment. So far as the Budget is concerned, no man in this room can lay claim to being more earnestly interested in reducing the Budget than I; but if we are later going to appropriate $1,700,000,000 for relief in 1940, I would rather see $1,000,000,000 cut off the W. P. A. and appropriated to the P. W. A. or the Corps of Engineers for the building of public works to preserve the lives and property of the people of the United States than see it used in "boondoggling." [Applause.] I will do my utmost to see to it that as much of this money as possible is spent for valuable and useful public works and not for such things as—well, I need not enumerate them.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. Briefly.

Mr. TERRY. I may say to the gentleman that it appears from page 90 of the hearings, from the engineers' report, that they had taken men off the relief rolls to the extent of 20,976,000 hours of employment from July 1, 1938, to April 1, 1939.

Mr. HINSHAW. I understand that, but what I want to say is that it ought not to be necessary for a man to be on the relief rolls in order to get one of these jobs. I object to the idea that they have to take the pauper's oath and do a lot of other things in order to get a job on this kind of work. I think it is silly. I think we ought to adopt this amendment and to reduce the relief appropriation accordingly. I think, too, that we should add to the P. W. A. bill sponsored by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] for public works and the building of useful projects and reduce the relief appropriations again. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, this situation strikes me as being rather unique. No one has opposed this appropriation on the ground that it is not needed. No one has opposed it on the ground that it would not be a wise expenditure. No one has opposed it on the ground that the committee did not recommend it. The serious block seems to be that since it has been indicated that the President wants to allocate $50,000,000 from relief funds to this use, it should not be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I know of no agency of this Government that enjoys the confidence and respect of this body and of the American people any more than the Corps of Army Engineers. [Applause.] I believe they act wisely, they spend wisely, and they do constructive work. Why should we allow this $50,000,000 to come out of W. P. A., with a lot of strings tied to it, so that the Army engineers could not handle it as they could were it included in this bill where it belongs?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Briefly.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I may say for the gentleman's information that the Chief of Engineers testified that they did not have any strings tied to it; that they used these men profitably and paid the prevailing rates of wages and got very fine work out of them.

Mr. BARDEN. May I say to the gentleman from Alabama, as much as I like him and as much as I would like to follow his reasoning, to save my life I cannot have any patience with the proposition of cutting out $50,000,000 from this bill, where it should be put, and attaching it to the relief bill. [Applause.] I do not believe there is a man on this floor who will not readily agree that the engineers can do more with the $50,000,000 provided in this bill than they can do with it tied up in a W. P. A. appropriation bill.

We discuss relief labor and all other kinds of labor. I want the engineers to have the same unrestricted use of this money that they have had in connection with the spending of other funds which we have seen fit to place in their hands. I see my friend from Alabama nods his head. If that is true, I ask you the question, Please tell me why it is going to put the Budget out of balance any more to restore the $50,000,000 to this bill than it would to add $50,000,000 to the relief bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] is recognized.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I heartily subscribe to the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, which is a proposal to increase the amount for improvements in rivers and harbors by $25,000,000. All of the projects that will be covered by this increase have been previously recommended by the Army engineers after a thorough study and survey by this highly efficient organization. The Army engineers have been motivated in recommending these vital improvements solely on the basis of urgency and need. Furthermore, the Subcommittee on Appropriations spent many hours in hearings and executive session, heard many Members of Congress, engineers, and experts, and finally recommended that the Budget estimate be increased by $50,000,000 for the projects that will be provided for by this amendment for rivers and harbors improvements and the amendment which will be subsequently offered to the section of the bill dealing with flood control.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask the gentleman if there is any emergency in Government expenditure greater than taking care of the flood conditions in New England?

Mr. HEALEY. I cannot conceive of any greater emergency.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not perfectly justifiable to vote this money into the bill then?

Mr. HEALEY. In my opinion, it is, and I am arguing for it. It would be a very small flood, indeed, that would not cause $50,000,000 worth of damage to life and property. I earnestly urge my colleagues to vote for the amendment we are now considering and to also vote for the increases that will be provided for in the amendments to be offered later by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. If this vote had come during the time of the great flood in the Ohio Valley, when hundreds of people were losing their lives and millions of dollars of property was being destroyed, there would be but one answer today, would there not?

Mr. HEALEY. Yes; enthusiastic support for these amendments. I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that relief labor has been used in the past on these projects and there is nothing to prevent the employment of relief labor in the future. By the adoption of this and the companion amendment for flood-control projects we will make certain that funds will be provided for at least part of the program for the improvement of our waterways which the Army engineers have asserted are vital and necessary to facilitate the movement of commerce and trade and to protect the lives and property of our people by erecting safeguards against the havoc of floods.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were—ayes 108, noes 92.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SNYDER and Mr. COLLINS to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 139, noes 102.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALEXANDER: On page 8, beginning in line 2, strike out the words "nor for any work upon or incident to the project to extend the channel of the Mississippi River above St. Anthony Falls."

Mr. ALEXANDER rose.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will this be taken out of my time?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not believe the gentleman will need any time. If I accept the amendment, that will save the gentleman's making a speech.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNYDER. I accept the amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the Alexander amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the full committee an amendment was adopted to page 7 of the bill to include maintenance of the Hennepin Canal in Illinois. Since the amendment has been approved, the only purpose of these observations is to briefly set forth the situation with respect to the canal and indicate to the War Department that it was the sense of the full Committee on Appropriations that navigation on the Hennepin Canal should be continued for the ensuing year of 1940.

The canal in question is about 75 miles long and traverses the western part of Illinois, uniting the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers. It is navigable. It is being used at the present time for shipment of bulk and heavy material such as grain, cement, and steel. It was built as a joint venture of the Federal Government and the State of Illinois about 40 years ago. It contains 32 locks.

In the pending bill there is an item of $75,000 for the care of the canal and maintenance of the structures along the canal. Another $100,000 per year will keep the canal in operation for navigation purposes. To me it would seem a bit short-sighted to spend $75,000 on the care of a canal that is now navigable and not add the additional amount required to make navigation possible, and I trust the War Department will interpret the action of the full committee as a desire to continue navigation.

Last year I had some conversations with the War Department relative to conveying the canal to the State of Illinois for the purpose of converting it into a recreational parkway and watering place. I believe the War Department senses certain commercial potentialities of this canal as well as its possibilities in the program of national defense and, hence, will retain title in the Federal Government until its possibilities develop.

Under such circumstances, despite the fact that the canal generated but 18,000 tons of commerce last year, its maintenance and operation for navigation at an additional cost of $100,000 is fully justified when we realize that it might cost many times that amount to put the locks and structures in proper and usable repair after they have fallen into disuse.

Approval of this item represents an appreciation of the possibilities of this canal, and I am grateful to the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. SNYDER] for accepting the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLOOD CONTROL

Flood control, general: For the construction and maintenance of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act, approved June 22, 1936, as amended and supplemented, including printing and binding, newspapers, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and office supplies and equipment required in the Office of the Chief of Engineers to carry out the purposes of this appropriation, the purchase (not to exceed $149,500) of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats for official use, and for preliminary examinations and surveys of flood-control projects authorized by law, $110,000,000: Provided, That $3,000,000 of this appropriation shall be transferred and made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for preliminary examinations and surveys, as authorized by law, for run-off and water-flow retardation and soil-erosion prevention on the watersheds of flood-control projects, including the employment of persons in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books and periodicals, printing and binding, rent in the District of Columbia, the purchase (not to exceed $75,000) of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats, and for other necessary expenses: Provided further, That funds appropriated herein may be used for flood-control work on the Salmon River, Alaska, as authorized by law.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 9, line 13, strike out "$110,000,000" and insert "$133,000,000."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment and a $2,000,000 amendment in the next paragraph regarding flood control on the Mississippi River and its tributaries comprise the other $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 the subcommittee placed in this bill.

In view of the fact that they are both flood-control amendments, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides an increase of $23,000,000, which would make the total expendable for flood control $133,000,000. The Chief of the Corps of Engineers testified that $195,000,000 could be economically expended for this particular activity. Of course, it is understood that a reduction similar in amount to this increase will be made in relief expenditures when the next relief bill reaches the House, so the sum total of moneys appropriated will not be any larger as the result of the adoption of this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, to me this has been a very interesting, although a very remarkable, procedure. We live to learn. I witnessed a few minutes ago a large line, an imposing line of my brethren, voting for overriding the budgetary estimates and further increasing the public deficit, and disregarding the wishes of the President. We all do those things sometimes, but the remarkable part of it was that in that line I saw my brethren from New York, from Philadelphia, from Chicago, from the great congested centers of the country, where, we are told, men and women are begging for bread and for shelter, voting for a proposition the announced purpose of which is to take money out of the relief bill that comes later and turn it over to river and harbor improvements.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Just a moment.

The purpose announced here is to put in this additional $50,000,000 with the understanding that whatever amount is decided upon for relief will be reduced by $50,000,000. If that is not right, I will yield to someone to correct me.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the statement has not been made that $50,000,000 is to be taken from relief and applied to flood control and river and harbor improvements? If that is to be done, why not put it in a bill for the work of rivers and harbors and flood control and let the honest-to-goodness relief bill go through?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes; but I will say to my distinguished friend, you have not yet passed a relief bill and there are a great many Members of Congress who believe that when we do, the money that the Congress votes for relief should be tied down so it will be spent for relief, and not go to the country with the picture that we have spent $21,000,000,000 for relief when hundreds of millions of dollars have been diverted and given out to all sorts of propositions and procedures that are in no way, under high heaven, connected with relief activities.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In just a moment. There will be plenty of time, and you gentlemen can have your say.

Now, here is what I wish to suggest to my brethren. If it is true that the administration approves of this $50,000,000 for flood control and river and harbor improvement, then why is it not legislatively honest to have a Budget estimate for it and put it in the bill in the regular way and not have a spendthrift Congress held up to the country as overriding the wishes of the President of the United States?

Now, I warn you, my brethren, that the press of yesterday and today carried statements from our President and from the Secretary of the Treasury warning Congress against overriding Budget estimates and embarking upon a spendthrift course. The Department of Agriculture bill will be before you in a day or two, coming back from the other body with nearly one-half billion dollars added there over the specific protest of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. In just a few moments.

Now, I say if it is true that the administration approves of this $50,000,000 for flood control and river and harbor improvement—and I do not question the merit of those activities, but I do say why put the Congress in the attitude before the country and before your constituents and mine of overriding Budget estimates upon the flimsy pretext of saying later on that if and when money is appropriated for relief we will take enough out of it to make up for the $50,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be limited to 45 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. SNYDER. That takes care of the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what about those Republicans who are talking about a spending President? What position are they to take on this?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I have just been engaged in conducting hearings on a Tennessee Valley Authority matter, and I ran over here to vote on the teller vote, and I am about out of breath, but I hope you will endure me if you can while I make a few remarks.

I was somewhat amazed at the remarks of my good friend from Virginia, who has just yielded the floor, particularly with reference to overriding budgetary estimates and reducing relief appropriations. The gentleman made a very correct statement when he said that hundreds of millions of dollars of relief funds are being squandered and spent in endeavors we knew not of. I agree with that, and what I want to do here this afternoon is to allocate some money so that we will know where it will be spent.

For 6 long years I have been voting, and you have been voting for the expenditure of billions, not millions of dollars, but billions of dollars for relief, and, as stated very correctly by the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, that money has largely been squandered in many directions. Here we have a bureau of the Government known as the Corps of Engineers of the War Department that has made a recommendation to the Congress that they can legitimately and economically expend to advantage $195,000,000. The Budget Bureau has said $110,000,000.

The President in his annual message to Congress in January stated that the Congress is the appropriating body, and I agree with him that it is, provided it will function. It is the duty of this House this afternoon to do what it wants to do about this appropriation, regardless of where the money comes from. It will all come out of the taxpayers' pockets in the end. So far as I am concerned, I think I shall offer a substitute amendment for the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], to raise the amount to $195,000,000, and why? Because if there is anybody in the Government service today that knows exactly what ought to be expended and where, it is the Board of Engineers of the War Department and they have said $195,000,000. It is economy because it will give widespread employment and take thousands off relief. I think it is begging the question for anyone on the floor of the House to raise the point when we propose to make a little addition of $23,000,000, raising it from $110,000,000 to $133,000,000. So far as I know, the President believes, and I believe with him, that one of the greatest sources of expanding employment in all communities of the country is to expend money for flood control, because flood control is an activity that employs labor and buys material, and it is widespread over the entire country; it is not confined to any particular district or section; it is spread over the entire country. It will provide protection from flood damage and save multiplied millions of valuable property throughout the country.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. What the gentleman says is true; and is not the point at issue not as to how much money is to be expended, because it is not a matter of increasing or decreasing expenditure, but the manner in which this money shall be expended and by whom?

Mr. MAY. It is a matter of whether Congress will say what it wants expended and for what it wants it expended, or whether we shall leave it to a Budget Director to say whether it shall be spent for this, that, or the other.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. And flood control always has another advantage in that there is just enough "pork" in it to make it palatable?

Mr. MAY. And I suppose the gentleman from Minnesota will get his slice of "pork" with the rest of us. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I was particularly interested in what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], whom we all recognize as an able debater and a splendid Member of Congress, said about relief. If there is any one thing that means relief to the people of this country, particularly in the New England area, it is better flood control. Those of you who have visited the New England sections that suffered in the flood of last September can well realize how much our section of the country needs this most necessary relief. This extra appropriation that is being asked for here of $23,000,000 is greatly desired, for a portion will be applied to that relief. It does not seem to me it is good policy to accept the idea that we will expend money for any particular line of relief that may be suggested by the administration. Let us spend it where the relief is most needed.

The destruction of property in the New England area that will benefit by this additional sum was so tremendous last autumn that the word "relief" means a tremendous lot to the people in that area. The business interests that were destroyed, the homes that were ruined, the industries that were leveled and the destitution in the flooded area cannot be overestimated. Therefore, we are right, I think, in asking for a small portion of actual relief in that territory in the form of better control of the flood areas of that section. There is just that difference between my conception of relief and that of the gentleman from Virginia. It seems to me the word "relief" should be taken in its most general terms and not applied to one particular line. Let us have the form of relief that means something not only to the people themselves, but to industry and to the well-being of an entire section of this great country of ours. Therefore, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi increasing this sum or changing it from one type of appropriation to another will be adopted.

Mr. SHORT. And even if we increase the sum $50,000,000 it will be far below the sum that the Army engineers have suggested.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is the Army engineers' estimate that we are going on when we ask for this additional $23,000,000. It is the impartial judgment of men we have designated to make these selections. Therefore we are justified in asking this additional sum be voted in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact in periods of unemployment the carrying on of worthwhile public works is really a saving from the standpoint of true national wealth, because otherwise labor is wasted and people must be given some form of relief from which there is no return. In connection with this flood-control program, the time element is important, because if at any time money is to be expended on flood-control improvements, it necessarily follows that the sooner those improvements are got into shape, the greater the saving to property will be, the less loss of life there will be, and therefore, the cheaper the real, over-all cost. In my own section of the country I know this to be true: That the sooner we can complete our flood-control program there the less likelihood there will be of portions of the works now completed being torn out by sudden floods coming down before the retarding basins and channel work are sufficiently far along to protect the existing works. If there were any likelihood of our getting all our unemployed people back to work right away there might be some of us who would feel differently about this. But my own view of the matter is that a portion of our duty at least is to get those people to work, get them to work at the best jobs, the most necessary jobs, the most useful jobs, and the most productive jobs from a standpoint of national welfare that we can find for them. That is the reason I am going to support this amendment. Insofar as future action on W. P. A. and other agencies of that kind is concerned, I believe we will have to cross that bridge when we come to it. I think we should cross it from the standpoint of the real volume of unemployment in this country, the real need of the Nation to have its people of proper working age employed on useful work, instead of attempting to support able-bodied, willing workers in any kind of idleness. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me there is one thing we must stress in the consideration of this amendment more than anything else. A few moments ago the House, after fair and sufficient debate, spoke its mind. It voted in favor of increasing the appropriation for rivers and harbors. I voted for that amendment. There is no harbor anywhere in my district that I know of that will be benefited one nickel, but I voted for that because it represents a principle.

Now, we are considering another proposition in which many people are more interested than in the rivers and harbors proposition. As far as river and harbor appropriation is concerned, that is a matter in which the Government as such is interested. It is not a matter that is so meaningful to many people as an onrushing tide of floodwater that threatens to engulf them. Now we are going to vote on whether or not we are going to extend relief to these human beings, the great common people. Anyone who knows anything about floods knows that in every town along the river, the person who suffers first and most is the poor man, the man in the lowlands, the man who has a little store off on some side street where he cannot have flood protection. I speak for those people today. Not one penny of the money covered in this amendment will come into my district. I am not personally interested in it, but all along these rivers from the headwaters of the Monongahela to the mouth of the Mississippi River, people of all classes will be affected. Not one thousand, not one million, but many millions of people. The great Mississippi River, with its tributaries, drains 36 States. All of the people along those streams which flow into the Mississippi will be eligible to receive some of this money. This money has not been definitely earmarked. So this is a gigantic proposition when we consider the territory it covers. This may not be sufficient to provide for any great extension improvements, but, as I see it, it may mean safety and peace and pleasure to millions of people, especially the poor people.

I plead with all of you who in times gone by have stood so valiantly for flood-control propositions to stand by this today. The President is not against this proposition. He has sent word up here that he is willing to go on record by giving $50,000,000 out of relief money. What is the use worrying about that? Let us do this in a logical, sincere way, and our duty will have been done. We had experience with this relief matter before. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr WHITTINGTON] and I in times gone by have tried to make compromises like this one, but it is unwise to attempt to earmark relief money that has not yet been appropriated. I am not a spokesman for the President, but the President himself found a year or so ago that he was unable to go forward with a program that had been arranged much like the relief trade discussed here today. I know he wanted to do it, but because he was bound by certain constructions which he could not help he could not follow that program. Today we are going to provide that the money be appropriated directly by Congress to the finest corps of engineers in the world, to be spent in the best way possible for the most people possible all over the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, as one of the members of the subcommittee in charge of the civil functions of the War Department, I voted with the majority of the subcommittee to support this supplementary amount of $50,000,000 to be obtained from the relief bill which will be passed later in the session. As you know, that action of the subcommittee was disapproved by the full committee this morning. I feel that it is my duty as a member of the subcommittee which agreed to this increase to go along with the increase as proposed in the amendment. If any one proposition in this House has received universal approval over the course of the past 6 years, it has been the question of the national flood-control policy. Last year we passed the river and harbor bill and the flood-control bill with about four dissenting votes. That was the history in 1936 and 1937. This House has approved and has authorized, subject to the approval of the Army engineers, $669,074,000 worth of flood-control projects. These are not pork-barrel projects. They have had the studied and careful consideration of the Army engineers. I say to you that when this Congress adopts this $50,000,000 increase, which has been agreed to by the President of the United States, we are not going above the Budget. An equal amount will be deducted from the relief bill when it is reported, according to the agreement of the President. The Army engineers say at page 90 of the hearings that they have taken people from relief rolls and have given them work on the flood-control projects. I say that by adopting this amendment you are carrying out the 100-percent desire and wishes of the Congress as has been expressed in their universal approval over the past several years. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I shall address myself particularly to the Members on my left, my colleagues in the Republican ranks. You all are interested in seeing the relief rolls reduced, so am I. I am interested in seeing them reduced, as you are, through the return of those on the relief rolls to private employment. One of the best ways to accomplish this is to give them something to do under private employment and not under relief. I do not see how we can expect these people to have to go on relief in order to get employment on these jobs. The adoption of these amendments is one of the ways to accomplish the thing you have in mind. I believe that if you will consider it in this light you will vote favorably on this amendment.

Aside from that particular subject, some of you have told me about the floods in your own districts, how 5 and 6 inches of rain have fallen in 24 hours, and what a terrific flood it brought to your particular districts. Let me tell you that in my district 12 inches of rain have fallen in 24 hours in the mountains, and there is only one place for it to go—on its way to the sea.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. And I may add that that water eventually gets down into my district; we get it.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is right; you do.

Mr. GEYER of California. Then we try to swim out of it.

Mr. HINSHAW. It is 30 miles from the crest of the mountains to the ocean. In the first few miles the water, after it hits the ground, falls a distance of something in the neighborhood of 5,000 feet. In the next 3 or 4 miles it drops another 1,000 feet, and in the next 20 miles it piles up 8, 10, and 12 feet deep while it is trying to get into the ocean.

The adoption of this amendment will enable more work to be done in my district, among others, for the protection of human life and property; and I hope you will consider this amendment favorably.

From my standpoint, I do not altogether agree with the others. It is not an increase in the Budget; it certainly is not, from the statement we heard attributed to the President a few moments ago. I cannot agree with my friend the gentleman from Virginia on this subject. He is a very able protector of the interests of his own State and his own district. I could name several ways in which he has protected them. In the matter of aeronautical research, for instance, he has protected his own State and his own district very well.

I say to the Members on this side of the House, please consider this amendment favorably. We need this additional help in the worst possible way, and in California there are plenty of people unemployed who do not want to go on relief in order to get work. Thank you. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] has confused the issue. I think he has not done this intentionally; nevertheless, he has confused the issue, and he has created the impression that possibly the Members of Congress from the large cities did not know what they were doing when they voted for the previous amendment.

Now, we are not considering a relief bill, we are not considering a W. P. A. appropriation bill, and we cannot vote upon what might be in anybody's mind. [Applause.] The only thing we can legislate upon is the provisions of the bill before us or the language and the provisions of the particular amendment now under consideration. The amendment we just adopted, and the pending amendment, as well as the third one, which is to follow, merely reinsert in the bill figures that were originally written into the bill by the subcommittee but which were taken out by the full Committee on Appropriations. We knew what we were doing. I hope the gentleman from Virginia is not insulting our intelligence to the point of conveying the impression that we voted in ignorance with regard to the provisions of this amendment. We voted for the figures set up by the subcommittee in connection with projects that were authorized by previous acts of this House.

I can assure the gentleman he will find the Members from the industrial sections fighting vigorously for W. P. A. appropriations, and I hope that when the new W. P. A. appropriation bill comes in here the gentleman from Virginia will have the regard for our difficulties that he indicates he has at the present time and that he will give us more help than he has on previous occasions, and I hope he is going to follow the recommendations of the President with respect to these things in the same manner as we have in the past. I hope also, in view of his concern about the Budget, that when the Agricultural bill comes back into this House with $327,000,000 or more written into it over and above the estimate of the Budget, that the gentleman from Virginia will give to the House the advantage of his able and competent leadership in preserving the estimates set up by the Budget Bureau. [Applause.]

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. FLAHERTY. I have no flood-control project in my district, but I am concerned, as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania, with the unemployed in the cities of this country. The gentleman overheard, as I did, the remarks of the majority leader when he stated that in a conference with the President the President agreed that $50,000,000 of the relief appropriation for 1939–40 would be diverted for this very purpose. For this reason I am voting to insert this increase in this bill, because it is not so long ago that in this very Chamber we had a terrific battle in connection with the proposed reduction of $50,000,000 from a relief bill. Since that time our offices have been flooded with the mail of these people, from the cities particularly, who have been dismissed from the W. P. A. program. [Applause.]

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Let me say to the gentleman that I agree with him, that it is our duty to vote for those things which are needed by other sections of the country. We are doing it with the hope that the Members from those sections will give us their cooperation for the W. P. A. bill later on when it is before the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, first of all may I commend my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY] for his very kind remarks. I would have gladly turned over to him my time if he had needed it. At this time, Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I want to also commend the subcommittee on Army appropriations for their fairness and for the consideration shown the Members from the various States that have no rivers and harbors.

It is amusing today to find that some of the Members have turned suddenly economy minded. This is a matter of life and death to many people throughout the various States.

I call your attention to the fact that the Army engineers have made this recommendation, and I support them wholeheartedly in their recommendations. I would have voted for the $195,000,000 had it been reported.

The great State of Ohio in the year 1937 experienced floods which did damage to the extent of $400,000,000. There are some districts and some cities there that unless they receive this year some appropriation in the form of relief will be wiped out. They are paying assessments at the present time of 50 percent on their property. In the State of Ohio it is impossible to pay the regular taxes now unless you pay the special assessment.

The Army engineers have recommended a flood-control program, and unless the pending amendment is agreed to approximately 66 projects will have to be stopped immediately. I would much rather turn $50,000,000 over to the Army engineers, who may use W. P. A. workers, and who get dollar for dollar in a more constructive program, than I would turn $50,000,000 over to the W. P. A. to use politically. This is only a case of using good, common sense so far as economy is concerned.

I believe in economy, and I have supported various economy measures. Today, however, I believe in supporting those cities that are depending on this proposition. To be specific may I mention one city alone in the Muskingum conservancy district, the city of Newcomerstown, Ohio, a city of approximately four or five thousand people. In that city the assessment runs one-third above the total real estate value and unless some relief is given that city, it is going to be wiped out. The schools will have to close. Our Senator from Ohio, Senator DONAHEY, has told the people, "Band yourselves together and strike." They have refused to pay their regular taxes into the county treasury and if the present school year was not coming to a close, the schools would have to close. These people will lose their homes.

Mr. Chairman, I make the plea today to my colleagues on both sides of the House to use good, common sense. This is false economy. It is not a question of whether you have a river or harbor but a question involving millions of people and worth-while projects. Instead of us appropriating millions of dollars to build battleships to kill millions of helpless people, let us vote for this amendment and save hundreds of homes for working people who have saved and sacrificed to build their homes. Congress at the last session authorized the amount of $4,500,000 for the Muskingum conservancy district for completing and carrying out the terms of the act of 1938 authorizing the reimbursements. Therefore, I plead with you in the name of justice and fair play for the people against this unjust watershed tax of the Muskingum conservancy district. [Applause.]

The Muskingum conservancy district has been termed America's pioneer conservation and flood-control project. It marks the first time a local unit of government has cooperated with State and Federal Governments in an effort to control a great river and correct a critical soil-erosion and water-conservation problem. With the recent completion of 14 large dams the control of destructive flood crests has been made possible with protection afforded not only to the river communities of the conservancy district but, in a lesser degree, to the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys below. Great progress has likewise been made in water and soil conservation.

When the project was first proposed to the Public Works Administration it was asked that the local costs be limited to the planning of the project. However, as Federal policies of conservation and flood control had not yet been established, the district was required to either assume a heavy local burden of cost or abandon the project. In the belief that conservation and flood control were of such great national importance as to soon necessitate the establishment of such policies and with the understanding that their benefits would be extended to the district when established, the project was started.

As a result of conditions beyond the district's control, the local cost ran much higher than was estimated and the assessable benefits were greatly reduced. Despite the sale of $1,600,000 of lands to the United States, it was necessary for the district to make a 50-percent assessment against benefited property. While such a burden might not have been excessive in prosperous times it has proven itself impossible under present conditions.

At the very time the district's first tax levy was being made the Congress passed the 1938 Flood Control Act, which authorized the Federal Government to pay the entire cost of projects such as the district's. An amendment to this act directed the Secretary of War to pay to the district the sum of $4,500,000. Officials of the district at once announced that the receipt of this payment would reduce the local assessments by at least one-half. While it was then understood that these funds would be immediately available and such information was generally circulated throughout the district, this was later found impossible. The district officials were then compelled to make the annual levy based on the full 50-percent assessment.

Confronted with such an excessively heavy local burden of cost at a time when the Federal Government was offering the same protection to other communities at no local cost, and with no reduction in their levies despite their understanding such reduction was promised, the people of the district became incensed to the point of establishing a general tax strike. By their statements, such a course of action was recommended to them by Members of Congress.

It is impossible at this time to determine the far-reaching effects of this strike. Already the credit of the district has been destroyed. With more than a million dollars of short-term notes coming due within the next few months and with the absolute necessity of raising one and one-half million dollars additional to complete its land-purchase program, the district finds itself without funds or credit except as relief is afforded by the Congress.

Under Ohio law, regular taxes cannot be accepted by taxing officials except as special assessments are also paid. Due to this condition the tax strike has a very serious effect on other local units of government. Except as prompt relief is afforded, schools must be closed and other public services reduced or eliminated. Municipal credit must likewise suffer.

By the terms of the Ohio Conservancy Act the district must pay 6 percent interest on defaulted notes. Except as the district's land-purchase program is completed it is continually confronted with the possibility of flooding lands above the dams which it does not own. Already this item of damage has cost the district more than $200,000. Continued delay in purchasing these lands must represent many hundreds of thousands of dollars of additional losses.

It is the firm belief of thinking people within the district that it was the full intent of Congress to promptly pay the $4,500,000 it authorized. With this payment made the full flood protection will be almost immediately available, the credit of the district will be restored and the faith of the people in their Government renewed. It is respectfully urged that this committee recommend payment of the full amount of the appropriation at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this statement: Flood control is a national question. The committee has made appropriations for the National Flood Control Act, the act of June 22, 1936, as amended by the acts of 1937 and 1938, and has made appropriations for the Mississippi River. There has been a general understanding that the $50,000,000 which the Chief Executive stated he wanted to allocate out of relief funds would be divided equally between rivers and harbors and flood control, as proposed in the amendments offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]. Personally, I regret we are not voting on the other flood-control amendment, which is for the Mississippi River, at this time.

Mr. Chairman, in emphasis of what I have previously stated, I call attention to the fact that Congress itself in the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1938 undertook to appropriate $60,000,000 for national flood control by appropriating $30,000,000 regularly and, quoting from the appropriation act, "$30,000,000 in addition of the $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937."

To reinforce my previous statement, those funds could not be expended and upon the expiration of the fiscal year 1938 there were $11,000,000 unallocated and unexpended. For the Mississippi River in the same act there was appropriated $15,000,000 out of relief funds. Thirteen million dollars of that amount were not spent. For the next fiscal year, 1939, and I am reading from the appropriation acts themselves, these two balances that we understood we were going to get for flood control out of the relief appropriation act were reappropriated in the sum of $24,000,000 for rivers and harbors.

Mr. Chairman, I say the only way to effectuate what the Chief Executive has said he is willing to do, to wit, increase these appropriations by $50,000,000, and the only way that the Congress can do it effectively, is to follow substantially the language of the gentleman from Mississippi by increasing this appropriation $23,000,000 and the other appropriation $2,000,000, for the Mississippi River and its tributaries. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend my remarks, I think it well to call attention to the flood-control acts passed by Congress and the appropriations made under those acts. There are two general flood-control acts—one for the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and the other for the other rivers of the country. The Flood Control Act for the Mississippi River and its tributaries was approved June 15, 1936, and it authorized the expenditure of $272,000,000 over a period of 6 years. It thus contemplated an annual appropriation of approximately $45,000,000. For the fiscal year 1938 there was appropriated $22,500,000 of regular funds, and in addition, $22,500,000 from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937. I call attention to the significant fact that in the appropriation in the War Department Civil Appropriation Act of 1938 the following language was used with respect to the $22,500,000 of relief funds, and I quote:

> And of such additional amount, $7,500,000 shall be used in augmentation of the foregoing appropriation of $22,500,000.

Of the $15,000,000 thus appropriated out of relief funds, only $2,000,000 was used. The Chief of Engineers was unable to use the remaining $13,000,000 in flood-control works along the lower Mississippi River. The restrictions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act made it impossible for the Chief of Engineers to buy materials and otherwise to do effective flood-control work. Thirteen million dollars of the money appropriated by Congress and intended for flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley was thus not used.

For the fiscal year 1939 there was appropriated $31,000,000 for the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The other flood control act is known as the National Flood Control Act. It was passed on June 22, 1936; it authorized appropriations aggregating $310,000,000, $10,000,000 being for examinations and surveys. This act was amended on August 28, 1937, and increased authorizations of not to exceed $24,877,000 over a period of 2 years were made. The act was again amended on June 28, 1938, and appropriations authorized aggregating $375,000,000, based on a 5-year program. Thus far no appropriations have been made under the act of 1938.

The first appropriation for national flood control was made for the fiscal year 1938. The Civil Appropriation Act of that year appropriated $30,000,000, and I quote from the act:

> And in addition $30,000,000 of the appropriation of $1,500,000,000 contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

Congress thus undertook to earmark relief funds for flood-control work. The Chief of Engineers was able to use only $19,000,000 of the $30,000,000 thus appropriated, and he was only able to use that amount because of the regularly appropriated funds that he could use in purchasing materials and in making contracts.

Eleven million dollars of the money authorized by Congress was not used.

The $13,000,000 appropriated out of relief funds for the Lower Mississippi River above mentioned, and the $11,000,000 appropriated for national flood control, aggregating $24,000,000, was not used by the Chief of Engineers but was reappropriated for the fiscal year 1939, and I quote from the Civil Appropriation Act of that year:

> And there is hereby reappropriated for the objects embraced in this paragraph for rivers and harbors, $24,000,000.

And the act describes the $24,000,000 as "the balances of the two appropriations mentioned."

For the fiscal year 1939 there is appropriated for national flood control $82,000,000, but $14,000,000 of that amount was used by the Department of Agriculture and for preliminary examinations and surveys.

There has thus been authorized for national flood control approximately $700,000,000. There has been appropriated for construction, during the past 2 years, approximately $120,000,000; in other words, one-sixth of the program has thus become available.

The annual report of the Chief of Engineers shows that approximately $195,000,000 could be profitably expended during the fiscal year 1940 on authorized flood control projects in the above acts. These funds would enable the continuation of the construction of 69 projects, and would provide for the initiation of construction of 91 additional projects.

The President in his Budget message recommended $110,000,000 for national flood control, and in his Budget message, and in a supplemental Budget message, he recommended $37,000,000 for the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

The Chief of Engineers stated that he could use profitably for the Mississippi River and its tributaries, $50,000,000 for flood control for the next fiscal year.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has stated that representatives from approximately 30 States have held numerous conferences, have requested an additional Budget recommendation, have conferred with the President, and while they have asked for an increase in the Budget of some $85,000,000, it was finally agreed that if an additional $50,000,000 could be provided out of relief and emergency funds, to be used as regularly appropriated funds and to be equally divided between rivers and harbors in the sum of $25,000,000, and national flood control and flood control along the lower Mississippi River in the sum of $25,000,000, the advocates for increased appropriations would not insist upon the appropriation of a larger amount than an aggregate of $50,000,000. The President evidently was sympathetic. As has been stated by the majority leader, the President indicated that he would allocate to the Chief of Engineers a total of $50,000,000, without strings on it, out of the Relief and Emergency Appropriation Act. I thereupon proposed an amendment that would have provided that the amounts recommended for flood control in the sum of $110,000,000 be augmented by $23,000,000, in the following language:

> And that in augmentation of the foregoing appropriation of $110,000,000, $23,000,000 of the amount heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the public projects in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, shall be transferred to this appropriation and made available for expenditure by the Corps of Engineers for the objects embraced by this paragraph in the same manner as if appropriated under this section.

Moreover, it was my thought to offer a similar amendment for increasing the river and harbor item by $25,000,000 and a similar amendment in identical language to increase the appropriation for the Mississippi River and its tributaries from $37,000,000 to $39,000,000, making a total increase of $50,000,000 available only if a relief and emergency act were passed for the fiscal year 1940.

The President had agreed to the allocation. The subcommittee was agreeable to the allocation, the group representing the 30 or more States that had held numerous conferences urging that inasmuch as Congress had authorized $375,000,000 for flood control in 1938, an increase be made in the Budget recommendation as no appropriation had been made, were agreeable to the $50,000,000 increase, to be equally divided between rivers and harbors and flood control.

It was immediately pointed out that the amendment in the language that I proposed would be subject to a point of order on the ground that the Relief and Emergency Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1940 had not been passed. There was therefore no other valid means for the Subcommittee on Civil Military Appropriations to adopt except to increase the appropriation as has been proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]. The language that I proposed was exactly the language that was used in making available for the Mississippi River and its tributaries for the fiscal year 1938, $7,500,000. If a point of order had not been made, or if it had not been stated that it would be made, my amendment, if adopted, would have secured the $50,000,000 as we understood the President had agreed. But, after all, the end was the same. The purpose was to provide $50,000,000 additional of regular funds for river and harbor and flood control without relief limitations. I have urged that all appropriations remain within the recommendations of the Budget. Such will continue to be my policy. Inasmuch as the President stated that he would allocate $50,000,000 out of the Relief and Emergency Act, I can see no difference between increasing the pending appropriation by $50,000,000 and reducing the relief and emergency appropriation by the same amount. The Budget will be in the same condition as if the amount of both Budget recommendations had remained the same. The point is that the aggregate of both recommendations would be as recommended by the Budget.

I have therefore stated that the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi are substantially the only amendments that could be offered to make effective the $50,000,000 which the President has indicated he would allocate out of relief and emergency act without strings to the Corps of Engineers. The Subcommittee on Appropriations undertook to make effective the so-called gentleman's agreement between the President and Congress. Congress tried to allocate relief funds for the fiscal year 1938; they were ineffective. If the President allocated funds, assuming that the act for 1940 would be substantially in accordance with the acts of 1937 and 1938, he would be without power to do effectively that which he had agreed to do. The only relief funds that have been effectively used for flood control and river and harbor work have been funds in augmentation of regular funds that could be expended just as regular funds are expended.

The country is sold on flood protection. Congress has provided the authorizations. The projects have been selected. The Subcommittee on Appropriations has reported the projects that will be constructed. Congress has thus selected the projects after being authorized by Congress. The works will protect lives and property; they will provide for employment; they will thus aid unemployment. All relief and emergency acts have provided for flood-control works, but it is fair to say that only local works, with local sponsors, have been constructed. The limitations prevent the construction of the works that have been approved by Congress and recommended by the Chief of Engineers. If we mean what we say, if relief and emergency acts are to provide for flood control and other improvements, the effective way is to allocate the amount intended for flood control so that the amount can be used, as proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, effectively for flood control.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I care not whether you live on the Connecticut, the Hudson, Monongahela, Susquehanna, the James, the Ohio, the Wabash, the Illinois, the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Arkansas, the White, the Red, the Rio Grande, the Columbia, or the Colorado, you know you are naturally and justifiably interested in the problem of improvement of navigation and flood control, which is a national problem. Whether or not you live in Boston, Philadelphia, Wilmington, New York, Baltimore, Charleston, New Orleans, San Diego, San Francisco, or Seattle, you are interested in rivers and harbors improvement and development. The enactment of this bill will benefit not one or a few but practically all sections of our great country.

May I say to the Members present that none of this money will be spent in my district; but my district, though it is 250 miles long and 150 miles wide, is a very small portion of the United States. By helping other people I will help my own. This Nation stands or falls together.

I am for the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi because I think it is sane and sound; I think it is a good investment, and one that will yield dividends in years to come. Not the size but the wisdom of expenditures is the vital point. Do we get value for the money spent is the significant question. In this particular measure we do. Why confuse the issue by mixing rivers and harbors and flood control with relief? We will later consider W. P. A. on its own merits. Why should not Congress now exercise its own constitutional right and duty by allocating this money for these specific purposes that appropriately belong in this particular bill instead of handing it over to the President in a W. P. A. bill, who is reported to have agreed to spend an additional $50,000,000 of W. P. A. appropriations on river and harbor development and flood control?

The only assurance we have that this would be done is the President's promise. Lately we have had too much government by promise and often the President's memory fails him. It is the function of the Congress and not the President to earmark all funds. The responsibility is ours today to determine how much money shall be appropriated for rivers and harbors and flood control and later to determine how much shall be given to W. P. A.

I was surprised that the gentleman from Virginia intimated and left the impression that by voting for this increase of $50,000,000 we will be taking that amount of money from the W. P. A. appropriation. In the name of common sense, how can you take money from the W. P. A. appropriation before we ever bring it in here? You might as well say no; instead you are taking $50,000,000 from the river and harbor development and flood control and adding it to W. P. A. That position would be just as sound as the position taken by the gentleman from Virginia. It will require something more than his suavity and the smoothness of his golden tongue to convince Members of the soundness of the position he has taken.

Of course, the Budget recommended only $30,000,000, whereas the Army engineers recommended over $100,000,000. I do not need to remind you that the Director of the Budget is appointed by the President and holds office at the pleasure and will of the President. If the President and the Director of the Budget had their own way, the Army engineers perhaps would not be given a dime to spend because the President would like to have complete control of the entire purse strings of this Nation. The only issue here is whether one man is going to spend this money or whether we are going to invest the Army engineers with the power and responsibility of discharging their duties fearlessly and courageously in the future as they always have done in the past.

I trust that you will support the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, oh, how a Democrat can love a Republican when the Republican is helping him out in a fight! I never knew before what a persuasive fellow my friend, the Honorable DEWEY SHORT, from Missouri, was. He has just now completely won my heart with his argument to the point where it is my purpose to vote for this amendment. After all, when a fellow needs a friend, politics is not even skin deep.

The greatest fight which has occurred so far in the Seventy-sixth Congress, the result of which was heralded to the country as the first major defeat for the President, was led by the very able gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. He was not very much concerned in that fight about what the President wanted, as he is today, but that fight is only a skirmish compared to the one he is going to lead against what the President wants when he brings in the 1940 relief bill. I am satisfied that when he gets through with the W. P. A. if he can have his way neither the President nor Harry Hopkins will recognize it. So let us not be too deeply moved by his plea to stand by the President.

There has been no legislation before this House that is of as much general interest as the pending amendment. Forty-seven of the forty-eight States have flood-control projects, for which the Army engineers have asked $60,000,000 beyond what we are proposing to allot them in the pending amendment, and if there is any agency of the Government that has its program blueprinted it is the Army engineers.

I am going to say something to you frankly, if it costs me votes: I am not particularly worrying about whether we are going to get this money before this bill reaches the White House. What I would like to see would be the House of Representatives do something on its own motion and not sit around here and wait for the Senate to do everything.

In 1938 the Committee on Flood Control and a majority of the Members of this House wanted the local damages where flood-control projects were being built to be paid 100 percent by the Federal Government, but a bill was brought in assessing 30 percent locally and 70 percent against the Government because there was fear of a veto, they were afraid if they brought in the 100-percent provision the President would veto it. The first thing the Senate did within a few minutes after consideration of the bill was begun was to put in the remaining 30-percent provision, and the President signed the bill. I believe the same thing is liable to happen with reference to this bill. There will be ways found to finance it. Let us do a little legislating on our own hook. [Applause.] Why should the Bureau of the Budget dictate everything to us? I never saw the Director of the Budget in my life; I never was in his office; I never asked him for anything, and I never got anything. I am voting on my judgment and for the interests of my State rather than for some arbitrary figure guessed at by the Director of the Budget and sent up here to the Appropriations Committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for 3 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, on the 4th day of May, at the close of business, the Federal deficit was $2,936,000,000. Here we are voting on the question of whether or not we shall raise the amount to be appropriated by $25,000,000. What is the situation? A year ago this Congress appropriated for flood control $82,000,000. Here the bill without any amendment carries $110,000,000, or $28,000,000 more than last year. If you will look at the projects that are set forth in the hearings on page 92, you will find that very liberal amounts are provided for all the flood-control projects. A $280,000,000 increase ought to be enough in these times of Federal deficits to satisfy anyone who believes in large appropriations.

It seems to me that at this time we should have regard for our responsibility to the American people. We should not raise the appropriations so rapidly on this kind of a big job that we cannot have efficient expenditure. We should not try to do the whole job in 1 year, when we know if we set it up that way the only result we can expect is a balance left over at the end of the year.

I hope the Members of this House will vote on this amendment on its merits and stick to the $110,000,000 the committee has provided. The bill as it came from the committee carried enough to take care in all reason of all the problems that are to be met by the bill. I hope the Committee will reject this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ELLIS] for 3 minutes.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] are very interesting, but the fact remains we are just now beginning the program of flood control in this Nation. It is not a matter now of increasing the appropriation. Let us see where we stand. By the Flood Control Acts of 1936, 1937, and 1938 the Congress authorized a total of $1,148,877,000 for flood control in this Nation. That was not the total appropriations authorized but the total authorized projects themselves. Here is the difference, and I think it is very important. In those bills the Congress set up another figure, a much lower figure, a figure of $698,877,000, which is the total authorization for all appropriations.

For instance, in my district and in my State the White River, one of the greatest undeveloped rivers in this Nation, has a total authorization on it under these acts of six projects. Those six projects would cost $75,000,000, but the Congress permitted an authorization of only $25,000,000 for the six, and only two of them can be built for the $25,000,000.

Sixty-nine projects are now under construction throughout the Nation—but none in my State; and Arkansas, next to Louisiana, suffers the heaviest average annual flood losses of any State. Had we appropriated the $195,000,000 this year, 91 new projects would have been begun and given enough money to make a good showing this coming fiscal year.

We are being ultraconservative. Yes, indeed, the Army engineers are conservative, but they have based their figure not on the more than $1,000,000,000 but on the $698,877,000, and then the Budget Director cut their figure down 43 percent, reducing it to $110,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, every single one of these projects has been determined by the Army engineers to be economically sound. Every one of these projects, when completed, will add to the total wealth of this Nation. It is not a question of extravagance; it is not a question of expenditures; it is a question of saving human life and adding to the wealth of this Nation.

I think the greatest thing we could do here today for the generations yet unborn would be to support this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I think the House ought to be congratulated on the way it has handled this question this afternoon. The seriousness and the importance which Members have attached to these amendments is shown by the fact that throughout the debate they have dealt with them strictly from the national viewpoint. Although perhaps one-half of the Members of the House have flood-control and river and harbor projects in their districts, none of those projects has been specifically mentioned in the debate and none of them individually has been brought to the attention of the House for the purpose of urging adoption of the amendments. They have shown by their action, moreover, that this is not a political question. They have considered it as a national issue on which opinion is not divided along party lines.

It was intimated here a while ago by the gentleman from Virginia that a majority of the Republicans are supporting what he referred to as the President's economy program, so far as this bill is concerned, and that a majority of the Democrats, judging from their action on this bill, are opposed to that program. I do not think that is quite correct. At any rate I do not think it is important. But the gentleman from Virginia did raise an issue which I think ought to be mentioned.

The gentleman said that support of these amendments seemed to be predicated upon the idea that the President intended to take $50,000,000 out of work relief and apply it on flood control and river and harbor projects, and that that being the case it was unnecessary for the House to increase the appropriation by that amount in this bill. Now, I do not understand that to be the situation at all. The President has consistently declined to ask for a supplementary Budget estimate. So far as anyone knows, the President is not in favor of these amendments. He does not want this additional $50,000,000 to be carried in this bill. It may be true, as has been stated on the floor, that the President told some members of the Appropriations Committee that he intended to take $50,000,000 of the work-relief money and allocate it to flood control and river and harbor projects. I think that is true. So now, since he says he will spend $50,000,000 of relief money for flood control, he has asked the Congress, for that reason, not to legislate upon this subject at all. For my own part I think that is a highly improper proposal on the part of the President. Here is a legitimate activity of the Government. The question before the House is whether the House, by its vote, ought to increase this appropriation by $50,000,000. It is the exclusive business of the House to decide that question. Whether the President intends to take work-relief money and apply it to flood-control work has nothing at all to do with the issue before the House. This matter should be decided by the House upon its own responsibility. The only question here is whether this amendment is proper or not. If it is, we should vote for it regardless of what the President may or may not do with relief money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, today the proposition is the expenditure of Federal funds for flood control. Tomorrow it may be an appropriation of funds for reclamation of land in the Dust Bowl. The next day it will be something else, and the day following there will be another proposition to spend more money. Always there is a spending program, regardless of the taxpayers' ability to pay. The hard, cold fact remains that the situation is the same today as it has been during the past 2 or 3 or 4 or 6 years. Each year we go into debt two or three billion dollars more.

In 1932 we were on the verge of national bankruptcy, we were told by Candidate Roosevelt. Since then the national debt of 20-odd billion dollars has been doubled. The Republicans have been criticizing the President because of his spending and because of his wastefulness, because he each year has increased the public debt. If there is anything that we can do to make ourselves more ridiculous as critics, if there is anything that we can do to convince the people back home of our lack of sincerity, I do not know how we could go about it more effectively than to continue to make appropriations when we know that we lack the money to meet them; when we refuse or neglect to levy taxes to pay the debts we make. In the Senate yesterday that body voted something over $300,000,000 to be added to a bill, not at the request of the President, but because some Senators wanted to see that money spent. Here today we are adding $50,000,000, not at the request of the President, but because we here in the House want to spend some money.

Just how can we go back home—just how can we go before our people in the next election and advocate economy, advocate living within our income, advocate balancing the Budget, if we who have criticized the President week in and week out, year after year, not only refuse to accept the estimates of the Director of the Budget, but continually add millions to the figures that he recommends that we spend? For myself I would like, if I can, to be consistent. I would like, if I may, to have the people back home believe that when I told them last fall I intended to vote to live within the revenues of the Government I meant what I said; that I really intended to do that very thing, and I would like to show the people back home now, when the time comes to vote, that I was honest and sincere; that I keep the promises I make. Let us keep faith; otherwise let us cease our criticism of a spending program. When the President wants to economize, let us stand behind him, support him.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, yes; I am very glad to yield to the great economic expert from the State of Missouri, who has been after the President here on the floor day in and day out, and who now wants to tell him how best to spend the money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have decided to give the Congress of the United States a break and not make a speech. [Applause.] And I do not wish permission to extend nor to revise my remarks, but now ask unanimous consent to retire from the Hall and yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Alabama is granted.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, all of us individually know of many things that we would like to purchase for ourselves or to acquire for ourselves and for the happiness of our families, but if they are beyond our means financially, we forego that pleasure. That same rule applies to governmental expenses. Many things are highly desirable as governmental activities. There are many things which have social and economic values that our Government would like to embark upon and you and I as legislators, representing our people, would like it to embark upon, but if the financial condition of the country is such that the embarkation upon such a policy would place a strain on the credit and resources of our Nation, then we cannot afford to undertake many of the things that we would like. Those of you who would criticize the whole committee in following the recommendation of the Budget in respect to this bill, should remember, particularly those who advocate flood control, that this bill carries over $28,000,000 above the amount provided for in the last appropriation bill for flood control, and, therefore, your committee has not been niggardly in treating this national problem. To those of you who have seen fit to criticize the remarks and conduct of the able and distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], I say that he has been honest and sincere and consistent in his attitude at all times in the Committee on Appropriations, and on the floor of this House. [Applause.] The time is coming when many of you will regret that you failed to follow the sound advice and sagacious leadership of the very able and distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to proffer a unanimous-consent request. The pending amendment is to add $23,000,000 to flood control. Another amendment for $2,000,000 for the lower Mississippi will be presented by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS]. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be read at this time and that the two amendments may be acted upon as one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the two amendments be read together and voted on as one. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may the Clerk read the next proposed amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas will indicate to the Committee how the two amendments relate to the same subject?

Mr. RAYBURN. They are both flood control. It is adding $2,000,000 to the lower Mississippi for flood control; $23,000,000 is the general flood-control proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I would not have the same objection that I had to the first request because the first request involved the House of Representatives voting on a river and harbor appropriation and a flood-control appropriation at one and the same time, which I think would be establishing a wretched precedent. I objected at that time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. I did not make that request, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May the amendment be read with the text?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph and then report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the Flood Control Act approved May 15, 1928, as amended (33 U. S. C. 702a), including printing and binding, newspapers, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and office supplies and equipment required in the office of the Chief of Engineers to carry out the purposes of this appropriation, and for the purchase (not to exceed $51,400) of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats for official use, $37,000,000.

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Page 10, line 12, strike out "$37,000,000" and insert "$39,000,000."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the two amendments do relate very closely one to the other, I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS], both amendments to be voted upon at the same time.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLLINS, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. MOTT) there were ayes 101 and noes 83.

So the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. DELANEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6260, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill do pass.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAYBURN). Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the two Collins amendments as they were adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, does that request of the gentleman mean that the gentleman from Alabama is demanding a separate vote on all three amendments?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. There were only two votes.

Mr. POWERS. There were only two votes, but three amendments.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. They are to be included. I ask unanimous consent that there be one roll call, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we have a second roll call on the two amendments relating to flood control; that we have one vote on those two amendments.

The SPEAKER. That is one amendment now, because they were voted on together in the Committee.

Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the agreement was there would be a separate vote on all amendments. Is that the understanding?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are two amendments upon which separate votes have been demanded.

The other amendments have been agreed to.

The Clerk will report the first amendment upon which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: On page 8, line 4, strike out "$71,000,000" and insert "$96,000,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to consider both amendments on this roll call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at this time. A roll-call vote has been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 171, nays 165, answered "present" 1, not voting 93, as follows:

NEW DEAL RECIPROCAL-TRADE TREATIES A FAILURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, on April 24, 1939, the minority leader in the House of Representatives, the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN of Massachusetts, called upon all Members of the House and Senate to work earnestly to bring about 12 objectives to restore normal conditions. Objective No. 10 was to "create a special committee of Congress to inquire into the effect of the reciprocal trade agreement policy on American industry and agriculture."

On April 26, 1939, the Honorable ALLEN T. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, submitted a concurrent resolution to the House of Representatives asking for the establishment of a Joint Committee on Trade Agreements to determine the economic effect of reciprocal-trade agreements upon domestic agriculture, labor, and industry.

This is the least that should be done! The unsound idealism which urged the making of reciprocal-trade agreements also prompted the boasts of the promoters of these treaties.

It was claimed that such trade treaties would promote peace, would bring prosperity, and would stimulate world trade to the benefit of American labor, industry, and agriculture.

Has the trade-treaty program brought about peace? Why no! This is clear to everyone. Since the inauguration of trade treaties we have seen a bloody civil war over in Spain, a cruel hard-fought war in China, the conquest of Abyssinia, and the destruction of the republic of Czechoslovakia. And at the present time all of the leading countries on the face of the globe are speeding the production of arms and munitions. More airplanes, more battleships is the cry—war is imminent!

Have reciprocal-trade agreements brought prosperity? Millions of unemployed say no! Business is stagnant, capital is fearful, commodity prices are very low, and the businessman and farmer are hanging on by a mere thread.

Have the trade treaties been of benefit to American labor, industry, and agriculture? Certainly not! The prostrate economic condition of this country indicates the only answer is "No!"

How can we attain prosperity in this country if we give up our domestic market to foreign nations? What worth is there in the argument, that by permitting foreigners to sell here, they will buy more of our goods, when there is no binding agreement upon them to purchase any of our products? Foreign countries, like individuals, usually buy where they can get the goods they want, at the best price. And they must not, will not, and have not, to any corresponding degree, bought American goods with the purchasing power gained through selling their products in the American markets.

The markets of the world are open. There is no political direction or control through goodwill tours and good-neighbor policies. Production costs chiefly set the price of our articles. And the amount of business we get in the world arena depends upon the attractiveness of the price at which we can sell our goods in competition with other nations. The money foreigners get by selling their goods to Americans can be used, and has been used, to purchase goods from non-Americans.

Up to the present time we have made about 20 trade treaties. The most recent treaty with Great Britain was made at great sacrifice. Hundreds of concessions were made by us, for which we received benefits of little or no value whatsoever. In many instances all we did was to bind the present tariff treatment of our products. That the United States has had its leg pulled in making these treaties is putting it mildly. Perhaps that is to be expected from our present Secretary of State and New Deal leaders who passionately desire to make these trade treaties. The other nations know this and they drive hard bargains! If the Congress or the Senate were to ratify these treaties the result would be different, for the chosen representatives of the people would never tolerate the ignominious treatment accorded Americans under the trade-treaty arrangements.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act gives the President the power to negotiate trade treaties without the advice and consent of Congress, to raise and lower duties without any definite standards having been established by Congress for such action. This is contrary to principles embodied in the Constitution, and is another blow at our republican form of government. Congress has in effect surrendered its right to levy tariffs, and placed an unwarranted amount of power in the hands of the Chief Executive. Like so many other powers given to the President, as emergency measures, a limited time period was placed upon the Trade Treaty Act. But in 1937 Congress approved a resolution extending the act for another 3-year period. Now, the duty of Congress has always been to protect and promote the interests of the people it represents. The trade-treaty program affects the interests of every man, woman, and child in this country; yet these individuals have not been represented by their Senators in the making of reciprocal-trade treaties.

Article II, section 2, clause 2, of the Constitution reads as follows:

> He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur. * * *

This demonstrates that the reciprocal trade-treaty program is not in accordance with the rules of our Republic, and clearly violates our Constitution.

One of the principles of the New Deal is that of cutting down production to raise prices. This runs counter to a policy of selling our surplus products to the world, and actually benefits foreigners at the expense of the American taxpayer.

It is essential to this Nation's welfare that we exchange our surplus goods for things we do not produce. A policy which is designed to curtail our surpluses by distributing the taxpayers' money to those who plough under their cotton, corn, and other commodities, and then permits and encourages foreigners to sell us the same surplus products, just does not make sense.

We give foreign nations a joker when they play cards with us in the game of international trade. And that joker is the most-favored-nation policy. Under this policy, the concessions which this country makes under all trade treaties, except the Cuban, are extended freely to all other countries, Germany excepted. And the other countries give us no such treatment. Under the British treaty, for example, we made hundreds of tariff reductions, practically all on competitive articles. The whole world will get the benefit of these reductions. Every country, except Germany, will now be able to send these articles into our country under the low tariffs to the detriment of the American producer. Every trade treaty that is made goes one step further in bringing about a general downward tariff revision, and a general downward trend in our standard of living.

The last Congress enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act. A great deal of time, effort, and money have been spent, trying to put this act into operation with a view toward raising wages and lowering hours of labor. This act was to elevate the standards of labor in America. The present foreign-trade policy makes the promise of better wages and hours ridiculous. How can we in America compete with cheap foreign labor which does not conform to any wage or hour standard, and is paid one-third to one-tenth of what we pay in America for similar work. If we want to raise the standards of labor in this country and enact laws for that purpose, we cannot open our markets to the products of cheap foreign labor.

Our tariffs have been lowered, seemingly, without any regard to domestic production costs, thereby jeopardizing American agriculture, labor, and industry, undermining our wage level, and threatening our standard of living. This policy is taking away from the American farmer the first opportunity to supply the needs of our domestic markets. When the prices of industrial products have to be reduced to meet foreign competition there is a resulting loss of income and jobs to the workers in our industries. And if prices of our products cannot be reduced sufficiently to meet foreign competition it means factories will close, mines will be boarded up, and millions of men will be added to those now walking the streets looking for jobs.

Wisconsin industries have been serious victims of the disastrous effects which began with the signing of reciprocal-trade agreements. The Canadian treaty has put Canadian dairy products in direct competition with those of Wisconsin. The dairy industry, upon which the well-being of our entire country is largely dependent, has been seriously affected. The treaty with Canada brought about a tariff decrease, and in many cases a quota increase, on dairy cows, calves, milk, dried buttermilk, cream, and cheese. Under the Tariff Act of 1930 a tariff of 3 cents a pound was placed upon the dairy cattle imported from Canada. On January 1, 1936, a trade treaty was made, which reduced the tariff on dairy cattle to 1½ cents a pound. But a limit of 20,000 head of cattle was permitted to come into this country under that agreement. The recent trade arrangement made retains the duty at 1½ cents, but lifts any restriction, and an unlimited number of dairy cattle can now enter the United States. The Canadian treaty has brought about an actual decrease in the market value of every dairy cow in the State.

One of Wisconsin's most important products is cheese. In 1930 a duty of 7 cents a pound was imposed on imported cheese. Under the recent trade treaty with Canada the duty has been reduced to 4 cents a pound and there is no limit on the amount that might be imported. Because of this condition the control of cheese prices can be said to be in the hands of foreign countries. Under the 1939 trade-treaty arrangement the duty on whole milk has been reduced from 6½ cents to 3¼ cents per gallon; the duty on cream has been reduced from 56.6 cents to 28.3 cents per gallon; and the duty on dried buttermilk has been reduced from 3 to 1½ cents per pound. The resultant low prices in the dairy industry will affect other industries. They will cause a decrease in the dairy farmer's purchasing power, which will prevent him from buying farm machinery and equipment and prevent the improvement of buildings and grounds. In the more extreme cases the low prices cause the farmer to abandon the dairy industry altogether.

If all nations had the same wage scale, if all nations had the same standard of living, if all nations had a stable monetary system, with fair fixed relationships between all currencies, and if all nations had a sound form of government, then reciprocal-trade agreements, equitably made, could do much good. But such a condition among nations does not exist and will not exist for many generations to come. The New Deal dreamers in Washington cannot see realities. It is doubtful whether they will ever wake up.

Where is that prosperity we were told would come? Where can we see world peace? Who can find the benefits American labor, industry, and agriculture were to get from these trade treaties?

If anyone offered a prize for some half-baked system to undermine the economic structure of this country, that prize would go to the New Dealers for their reciprocal trade agreement program, coupled with their scarcity policy to raise prices. Something must be done. Congress should immediately make a thorough investigation of the effects of the reciprocal trade agreement program with a view toward revising the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 or discarding the act entirely.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 8, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. William S. Abernethy, D. D., pastor of Calvary Baptist Church of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, may we place in Thy hands this day our best powers of mind and body and soul. Even as the disciples of old put their slender resources in the hands of the Saviour, and they were multiplied, and the multitude was fed, so may we today dedicate our talents to the service of our fellow men and, in so doing, dedicate them to Thee.

May God bless today this weary, suffering, bewildered world, and bless the efforts of all who are engaged in the endeavor to afford relief and bring humanity out of its wilderness of despair. So we pray for this honorable body. May God give them health and strength and wisdom, and, above all, may they realize that when they have reached the end of their human resources there are great reservoirs of power still available. May we, when this day shall have closed, experience a certain sense of satisfaction because we have done our best.

We offer this prayer in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ACQUISITION OF STOCKS OF STRATEGIC MILITARY MATERIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 572) to provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical materials essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and to encourage, as far as possible, the further development of strategic and critical materials within the United States for common defense, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the natural resources of the United States in certain strategic and critical materials being deficient or insufficiently developed to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country, it is the policy of Congress and the purpose and intent of this act to provide for the acquisition of stocks of these materials and to encourage the development of mines and deposits of these materials within the United States, and thereby decrease and prevent wherever possible a dangerous and costly dependence of the United States upon foreign nations for supplies of these commodities in times of national emergency.

SEC. 2. To effectuate the policy set forth in section 1 hereof the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior, acting jointly through the agency of the Army and Navy Munitions Board, are hereby authorized and directed to determine which materials are strategic and critical under the provisions of this act and to determine the quality and quantities of such materials which shall be purchased within the amount of the appropriations authorized by this act. In determining the materials which are strategic and critical and the quality and quantities of same to be purchased, the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, and Commerce shall each designate representatives to cooperate with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy in carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, when they deem such action appropriate, shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury through the medium of the Procurement Division of his Department and from the funds authorized by the provisions of this act to make purchases of such materials in accordance with specifications prepared by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department and approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and to provide for the storage and maintenance, and, where necessary to prevent deterioration, for the rotation of such materials. To accomplish such rotation, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, is authorized to replace acquired stocks of any material subject to deterioration by equivalent quantities of the same material by such method as he may deem serves best the purposes of this act. The Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to meet, out of the funds authorized in this act, expenses necessary to accomplish this rotation. The commodities so purchased shall be stored by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department on military and naval reservations or in other locations approved by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 4. Materials acquired under this act except for rotation to prevent deterioration shall be used only upon the order of the President in time of war, or when he shall find that a national emergency exists with respect to national defense as a consequence of the threat of war.

SEC. 5. For the procurement, transportation, maintenance, rotation, and storage of the materials to be acquired under this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $100,000,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, during the fiscal years June 30, 1939, to and including June 30, 1943, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That any customs duties paid on such materials, imported from any place not included in the United States, as defined in section 401 (k) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by section 2 of the Customs Administration Act of 1938, shall not be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, but shall be credited by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be available for expenditure until the expiration of the then next fiscal year; And provided further, That materials purchased under this act and imported shall be entered at the customhouse in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That purchases under this act shall be made in accordance with the Buy American Act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1520), and a reasonable time, in the judgment of the Secretary of War and Secretary of the Navy shall be allowed for production and delivery from domestic sources.

SEC. 6. In the acquisition of stocks of materials, as herein authorized, the agency charged with the duty of acquiring the same shall, as to the materials acquired outside the United States—

(a) Request the appropriate department or departments to undertake the acquisition of the same from those nations which are indebted to the United States and which will consent to credit the agreed purchase price on the principal of such indebtedness; and

(b) Further request the appropriate department or departments to undertake the acquisition of the same from those nations which will consent to exchange such materials for surplus agricultural commodities produced in the United States: Provided, That the acquisition of such material shall not be delayed on account of the negotiations undertaken under paragraph (a) and (b) of this section.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of the Bureau of Mines and the Director of the Geological Survey, is hereby authorized and directed to make scientific, technologic, and economic investigations concerning the extent and mode of occurrence, the development, mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of ores and other mineral substances found in the United States or its Territories or insular possessions, which are essential to the national defense or the industrial needs of the United States, and the quantities or grades of which are inadequate from known domestic sources, in order to determine and develop domestic sources of supply, to devise new methods for the treatment and utilization of lower grade reserves, and to develop substitutes for such essential ores and mineral products; to explore and develop, on public lands and on privately owned lands, with the consent of the owner, deposits of such minerals, including core drilling, trenching, test pitting, shaft sinking, drifting, crosscutting, sampling, and metallurgical investigations and tests as may be necessary to determine the extent and quality of such deposits, the most suitable methods of mining and beneficiating them, and the cost at which the minerals or metals may be produced.

For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this section there is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1940, 1941, 1942, and 1943, the sum of $500,000, of which amount $350,000 shall be appropriated to the Bureau of Mines and $150,000 to the Geological Survey.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 1288) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States, reported it adversely and submitted a report (No. 420) thereon.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] had given notice that today he desired to address the Senate on a matter of personal privilege. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I desire today to discuss, not at great length, matters which have been brought to my attention during the course of several months, published in a certain column written here in Washington, known as the Merry-Go-Round.

Initially, I desire to state that there is no stronger advocate than myself of freedom of the press, freedom of speech, and freedom of religion. The newspapers have a perfect right to criticize or condemn any legislation that I may recommend or foster if they think such legislation will not prove beneficial to our Nation or if they think it is not worthwhile legislation. Every citizen has the same right and privilege. I for one would not curtail or even weaken one iota of this God-given right in a free America.

But, Mr. President, freedom of the press is not freedom to libel. Freedom of the press is not freedom to slander, whether the object of the slander be a private citizen or a Member of the Senate of the United States of America.

The matter probably would not be so serious if the comments were confined merely to the columns of the Merry-Go-Round; but these reports are picked up by other writers throughout the country even before I have an opportunity to enter a denial, and consequently the general public naturally grows to believe these unwarranted attacks and insinuations, which are written in a clever, left-handed style.

In that connection I may state in passing that I have implicit confidence in the integrity of the press of America. The people of America have the same implicit confidence in the press of America. That confidence has grown out of the fact that for many years here at the National Capital the press of the country has been represented by men of integrity, men of character, men who could be believed, men who send over the wires only statements of truth and fact, and who rarely attempt to color any story they send from here to their respective clients. These reputable correspondents of reputable newspapers throughout America have built for themselves a fine reputation for character, integrity, and truth by relating squarely and fairly and truthfully the facts from day to day and from time to time, until as a result of their integrity and character and of the truthfulness as to statements of fact they have educated the 130,000,000 people of America to rely implicitly upon that which they read in the respective columns of American newspapers as the news which emanates from Washington. The danger we are now experiencing is that some columnists wielding the pen are always endeavoring to color the facts and to lead the people to believe anything but the truth; and, as a result thereof, having been educated by the reputable newspaper correspondents of Washington, when the American people read certain statements from the pens of columnists, such as those who are the authors of the Merry-Go-Round, they immediately assume that the words written by such authors are as truthful as if they came from the pen points of the reputable, truthful reporters residing here in the city of Washington as the representatives of the press of the country.

Mr. President, I have stated time and again on the floor of the Senate, by letter, and in radio addresses and speeches throughout the Nation, that I do not condone the practices of dictators. I have time and time again joined millions of other American citizens in bitterly denouncing the inhuman treatment of defenseless minorities in Germany, Italy, and other foreign countries; but I insist that the United States should remain aloof from foreign political entanglements or embroilments unless we are prepared to be dragged into another world war. Articles falsely accusing me of being lined up with the "bund" merely tend to divide our Nation at a time when perhaps more than at any other period in our Nation's history we need unity. These manufactured stories also have the effect of giving encouragement to the Nazi groups by leading them to believe that I, as a Senator—and, for that matter, other Members of this body whose names I shall later mention—condone their practices, when as a matter of fact I have preached, I might say, from the housetops, that nazi-ism, fascism, and communism should be banished from our shores. I have reiterated in the strongest language I could command that there is no room in this Nation for such philosophies; and I have advocated shipping back to the lands whence they came all those who preach in our country those foreign doctrines that would undermine our democratic form of government.

Unfortunately, the only way a public official can avoid vilification by these two men, the authors of the Washington Merry-Go-Round, is to bow to their will and the will of those whom they serve.

No man enjoyed to a greater degree the confidence and respect of the Members of the Senate of the United States, Republicans and Democrats alike, than did our lamented leader, the late Senator Robinson, of Arkansas. Shortly after I came to the Senate I was outraged when I read the false attacks of these two colmunists upon that great statesman. They referred to his practice of law and reflected upon his integrity. He ignored the attacks. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], as a matter of fact, was time and again subjected to abuse because he was the friend of Judge Wilson, who, as a judge in the Virgin Islands, denounced Drew Pearson's father, who was then Governor of the Virgin Islands. Pearson was a Hoover appointee, but he continued in office under the Democratic administration, because Mr. Pearson, who was Governor of the Virgin Islands, was an eminently honest and sincere man.

When Judge Wilson and Governor Pearson were asked by the President to resign they did so. Wilson acted in good faith. Pearson was immediately appointed to an office in the Interior Department, where he remained for the rest of his life. When I learned that the President of the United States had appointed Mr. Pearson to a position in the Department of the Interior I was very happy, because personally I was fond of Mr. Pearson. He was one of the most fatherly, one of the most gracious, one of the most kind-hearted men I have ever known in all my life; and, as a matter of fact, when Mr. Pearson, the father of Drew Pearson, experienced difficulty in reference to the Virgin Islands matter, I personally did everything within my power as a Senator of the United States and as a member of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs to retain him in that position, because I was convinced of his honesty and his integrity; and, with many thousands of his friends, I grieved when he was called to the Great Beyond.

I speak again of our beloved and departed colleague, Hon. Joseph Robinson, of Arkansas. I recall that once upon a time hurriedly there was handed to me, when I first came to the Senate of the United States, a statement to be inserted in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I did not take time to read the statement. Next morning its contents were called to my attention, and I found that it contained insinuations and a slur upon Joe Robinson, the leader. Without the slightest hesitation, as those who are now here and who were here then know, I came into this Chamber and publicly denounced the article, and asked that it be expunged from the RECORD, and extended my apologies not only to Senator Robinson himself but to the other Members of this body. That I did willingly and without the slightest hesitation, because I felt that I had done that great man a great injustice—not an intended injustice, but an injustice—because I had failed to take the precaution to read that statement prior to inserting it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I may add in passing that that was a great lesson to me. It was my first lesson as a Member of the Congress of the United States, because never since then have I inserted in the RECORD any article from the hand of anybody without personally reading it. I want to say further that never during my term here have I cast the slightest slur upon any Member of this body; but in every State into which I go from time to time, as many of the Senators who do me the honor to listen today know, I say nothing but praise for them, regardless of their respective positions and regardless of their political affiliations because for every Member of this body I have the very deepest affection.

In that connection I recall that a few days ago in the city of New York, when I delivered an address in the banquet hall of the Hotel Astor, at Forty-second and Broadway, under the auspices of the American Defense Society, to which address I will refer later for a particular reason, I mentioned the fact that my colleague the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] had introduced a bill providing for the admission into the United States of 20,000 refugee children within the next 2 years. I took occasion to say that I honored the Senator from New York, that I knew of no man for whom I had a greater affection, that we differed only in opinion. My colleagues know, as I do, that we would be foolish to become angry at one another because we do not always vote the same way or because our opinions differ upon various questions. We do not consider ourselves as conservatives or liberals, not as Democrats or Republicans, when we are in yonder cloakroom, but as friends affiliated together in the interest of the American people, here to do that which our consciences dictate to us to do.

I remarked at the time to the constituents of the Senator from New York that he was the busiest man in Washington, that very infrequently did he find it possible to be in his office; that he was chairman of several subcommittees and chairman of the great Banking and Currency Committee. I reminded them of the fact, in order that they might know that I spoke sincerely, that innumerable times school children from his State come to Washington, as they do from all our States. Frequently they cannot see the Senator, and when they do come and I see them I invariably invite them into my office and provide them with little pamphlets giving the history of the Capitol, and provide them with cards with my signature on them admitting them to the galleries of the Senate. In addition to that, I invariably say, "You youngsters go back home and tell your mothers and your fathers that your Senator is the hardest working Senator in Washington. And do not forget to tell them, boys and girls, to vote for BOB WAGNER when he comes up again for election." Our diversity of opinion makes no difference in our personal relations.

Mr. President, I had just spoken in regard to our departed friend, Governor Pearson. While the controversy concerning him was on the Senate committee, of which the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was chairman, was called upon to make an investigation, and because the Senator from Maryland, in the discharge of a public duty, a duty he was sworn to perform, did not do what Pearson and Allen wanted him to do for the father of Drew Pearson himself, he earned then and there their enimity, and from that day to this has been slandered by them from time to time.

I remember well the time of which I have just spoken, and I believe the Senator from Maryland, the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, will recall that I supported Mr. Pearson, then the Governor of the Virgin Islands, and tried my best to have him retained in that position. In that connection I well remember the day when the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, the Senator from Maryland, and our able friend and colleague the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], joined me, and the three of us took a taxicab at the Capitol and drove to the White House, where we conferred with the President of the United States in regard to this matter. These two Senators, who now honor me with their presence, will recall very vividly the conversation we had with the President of the United States.

The newspapers have stated, in reference to the Senator from Maryland, that in the Senator's campaign for reelection last summer, Pearson contributed more than $30,000 to defeat the Senator from Maryland. If that story is true—and I am inclined to believe everything I see in the newspapers except what is written by Pearson and Allen—it would be interesting to know whose money it was they spent for the purpose of defeating the Senator from Maryland, who was so overwhelmingly reelected.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] has been held up to ridicule by these men. The senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] have been denounced by them. The majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], within the last month has been accused of treachery amounting to treason to the President of the United States, solely because he failed to take orders from Pearson and Allen.

As all my colleagues know, hardly a week passes that the Vice President of the United States, who is respected and loved and admired by every Senator, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, is not misrepresented before the people of the Nation and ridiculed by these men, because he will not consult them and will not follow the views of those who dictate their conduct from time to time.

We resent those insinuations and statements in regard to the President of this body, and every one of us has from time to time resented and now resents the accusations made against our leader, the Senator from Kentucky, and the accusations made against the beloved Vice President of the United States, who presides over the Senate daily.

Mr. Jesse Jones, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a Democrat from the Lone Star State of Texas, as fine a public official as this administration has had, is slandered day after day. The former Secretary of Commerce, the Honorable Daniel Roper, a man who has served his country with honor in many positions, has been held up to the scorn of a nation by those two men. The Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Colonel Johnson, of South Carolina, has been attacked by them. I recall that several years ago the Secretary to the President of the United States, Mr. Marvin McIntyre, who now unfortunately is ill, and is spending some time at his old home town, which is my home, in the mountains of western North Carolina, was attacked by Pearson and Allen, who tried even to reflect upon his character.

Senators, a man in public life has no defense. All he can do, as a matter of fact, is to enter a denial. He cannot write letters to the newspapers defending himself. His letters would be published, if published at all, where, perhaps, they never would be seen.

In view of the character of the Members of the Senate, to be attacked by these writers seems to people who know them to be almost a tribute. But those who read the newspapers of the country do not know them, and they are misled by them. They are misled because, as I stated in the outset of my remarks, the men of honor and of integrity and of character and of truthfulness who for so many years have represented the press of the United States have educated the readers of the various newspapers of the country to believe when they see them in print the articles which come over the wires from their pens here at the Capital. Therein lies the danger as the result of the reputable correspondents having educated the reading public of America to the point where they believe what they read in the American press, because it is a free press.

Mr. President, I determined I would not remain silent, as others have with a few exceptions, but, on the contrary, that I would reply to the utterly false, left-handed statements of these men. I can understand the motive of their attacks upon me. Mr. Allen is a correspondent of the Philadelphia Record. The Philadelphia Record is owned and published by Mr. David Stern. Because of my humble efforts to keep this country out of war, Dave Stern evidently determined to injure me through Allen and Pearson. I know that if I would change my position within a very short time the Merry-Go-Round would hold me up to the Nation as a great statesman and a great patriot. But neither Drew Pearson, Bob Allen, nor Mr. Dave Stern can cause me to change my views on this question, which I believe of such vital importance to the people of America.

I digress here to say that, regardless of any attacks made upon me, the only way anyone will ever make me shut my mouth in my endeavor to do what I think is my duty in this body is to shoot me. They cannot frame me and jail me because I can say with a great deal of happiness that if they were to do so there would be thousands of real, full-blooded, honest-to-God Americans there to take me out. The only way they can stop me from talking in the interests of the people of America, in my humble, feeble endeavor to keep us from being led into foreign entanglements and again into war—the only way they can keep me from trying to keep the foreign elements abroad from coming here and taking the jobs that should go to our unemployed—and there are now 11,000,000 persons out of employment in the United States—the only way they can shut my mouth and stop me is to shoot me; and so long as I am in this body I am going to speak my conscientious convictions.

I know there are many Senators who do not agree with some of my statements made on the floor of the Senate, or with my way of thinking, but I know that those Senators are convinced of the fact that I am honest in my endeavor; and when Senators do not vote as I vote, when their convictions are not parallel with mine, I have for them the same respect I always have had. What would this body be if it were not a forum for the purpose of discussing the great issues in which we are interested at this time?

Members of the Senate, I made a statement a moment ago as to what would happen if I were to change my position. I will restate what I said. After I mentioned Dave Stern, I said, "I know that if I would change my position, within a very short time the Merry-Go-Round would hold me up to the Nation as a statesman and a patriot."

Let us see about that. Let us see how true that statement is. Let us see how very true it is. Yesterday when I decided to take the floor, I addressed, regardless of the harm that has been done to me, a very respectful telegram to Messrs. Pearson and Allen, as follows:

MAY 10, 1939.

MESSRS. PEARSON and ALLEN,
Washington Merry-Go-Round,
Press Building, City:

Shall appreciate it if you will favor me by sending to me this afternoon, by Western Union messenger, collect, copies of all articles written by you for columns of Washington Merry-Go-Round since January 1 this year which have any reference of any nature whatsoever to myself.

(Signed) ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

In order to prove to Senators what the attitude of these men would be if one were to bow to their will and talk and vote as they want one to talk and vote, I will read the answer which I received within an hour thereafter:

DEAR SENATOR: Would like very much to comply with your request but that would entail several hours' work going through the files, and, regretfully, I just haven't the time for that. Why don't you ask the Library of Congress to dig up this material for you?

The fact is, I was desirous of having those gentlemen provide me with those articles for the very reason that I did not want them hereafter to be able to say that the subject matter and the point I am making today had been eliminated.

They have plenty of clerks for that purpose. Have just been informed of your announcement that you intend to discuss us tomorrow. Look forward to the occasion with lively interest though I must confess I feel a bit slighted that you are only going to devote 2 hours to us. We ought to be worth more of a ride than that. After all the nice things—

I hope Senators will note this, which only goes to prove, as I stated a while ago, that if you bow to their will and talk as they think you ought to, and vote as they think you ought to vote, you are an angel, but if you do not, you are a traitor to your fellows.

We ought to be worth more of a ride than that. After all the nice things we said about you last year when you were running for reelection—

Remember, up until the time I was reelected I was all right with them.

After all the nice things we said about you last year when you were running for reelection as a liberal we ought to be worth at least a couple of weeks speechifying on your Nazi activities.

I want Senators to bear in mind those three words: "Your Nazi activities." I am coming to that.

I say that what these men write cannot be believed. I happen to know that there are many Members of the Senate who share the identical opinion, and I happen to know that there are many Members of the House of Representatives who likewise share that opinion. Further than that, there is a member of the Cabinet of the United States who shares their opinion and who shares my opinion in regard to Allen and Pearson. I refer to a member of our beloved President's Cabinet by the name of Cordell Hull. I recall that I served my first short term in the United States Senate with Cordell Hull, who was then the colleague of the Senator from my sister State of Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and according to my recollection the present Secretary of State occupied the seat in the Senate Chamber I now indicate. The Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, says that these men are unworthy of belief.

Let us see about that. I shall read to the Senate a statement I read sometime ago in the Merry-Go-Round. I still take the Washington Herald, but I have that portion consigned to the bathroom before I begin to read any other portion. Here is a column of the Washington Herald of Friday, April 14, 1939. Let us see what they said that eventually occasioned the remarks addressed to me by letter and by word of mouth that I have just stated to the Members of the Senate. This article was published in the Times-Herald. I am going to read it to the Senate so Senators can understand its significance.

WASHINGTON DAILY MERRY-GO-ROUND

(By Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen)

The State Department has just heaved a big sigh of relief after terminating one of the most crucial episodes of international prodding in years.

Objective of the State Department, or perhaps it is more accurate to say of the President himself, has been to push, goad, or cajole the British Empire into the realization that democracy is at stake in Europe.

All this took place during a period of diplomatic double-crossing in which British banks actually were lending money to Germany for rearmament, and the Federation of British Industries was negotiating a secret pact with German industry in violation of the Anglo-American trade agreement.

In other words, they are charging that the British, in violation of the trade-treaty obligation, were lending money to Germany.

British double-crossing finally became so flagrant that when Roosevelt, Hull, and Welles got the full drift of it, they sent a virtual ultimatum to Chamberlain that, as far as the United States was concerned, Great Britain could fish or cut bait.

CZECHOSLOVAK INVASION

Part or all of this may be denied—

They therefore insinuate that it was the truth, but they say:

but the actual facts are that tension in United States-British relations came to a head on or about March 16, one day after Hitler had swallowed the remains of Czechoslovakia.

It will be recalled that on March 14, just as the entire world realized Hitler was about to break his pledge to the Czechs, American correspondents in London cabled that the British Government saw no cause for alarm. This was because the British Foreign Office had called in United States correspondents and told them that the British Government was unperturbed.

British serenity continued next day even with Nazi troops actually on the march, and it was not until 2 days later that the British Government began to burst forth in a fine flare of righteous indignation over Hitler's violation of his pledge at Munich.

Reason for the British rightabout-face was partly British public opinion. But in the interim, also, Chamberlain had received from Roosevelt the message just referred to, in which the President warned that Britain could expect no more support from the United States, moral or material or through the sale of airplanes, if the Munich policy continued.

In effect, Roosevelt bluntly asked whether Britain was a Nazi nation or a democracy, and warned that the United States would watch Chamberlain's future policy for the answer.

HISTORY AFTER MUNICH

To get the full picture of British double-crossing, and to understand what led up to this crisis in Anglo-American relations, it is necessary to trace events after the Munich crisis last October.

Following Munich the Roosevelt administration instructed Ambassador Joe Kennedy to suggest to Chamberlain that the only thing Hitler understood was the straight arm, and that it would be an excellent idea to call an abrupt halt on appeasement.

Supposedly Chamberlain agreed. Whereupon Roosevelt and his State Department mapped out a program carefully calculated to show Hitler that he could give the democracies no more lip.

To this end the United States deliberately recalled its Ambassador from Berlin, deliberately planned that Secretary Ickes should scold the Nazis, and that Acting Secretary Welles, in turn, should scold the German chargé d'affaires for his effrontery in protesting. It was no accident that Roosevelt's address to Congress on the state of the Nation vigorously slapped down the dictators and asked for heavy air armament.

Furthermore, American soundings taken in Europe all showed that this strategy was having an excellent effect, that Hitler and Mussolini both were worried.

BRITISH CHICANERY

But about this time the State Department began to get wind of what the British were up to. In the first place British bankers had engaged in a scramble for business in Sudetenland. They had even started making deals with the Germans before the cession of the Sudetens was decided upon at Munich.

Later it was discovered that whenever the State Department would take a stern stand against Hitler, Sir John Simon or other Tory members of the British Cabinet would go around to the Nazis and tell them that Britain was not in sympathy with these United States pronouncements.

The State Department had known for some time that Sir Auckland Geddes, former British Ambassador to Washington and head of the Rio Tinto mines in Spain, had been subsidizing Franco. But now it developed that Franco was sending the money back to Germany to buy arms. Thus the British were subsidizing Hitler.

Even more startling, it was discovered that where the Nazis were not able to barter, as with Sweden, which demands cash, British banks were loaning money outright to Germany to finance rearmament. Of course, they were getting a nice, fat interest rate.

Also, it dawned on high officials here that no less a person than Prime Minister Chamberlain himself is heavily interested in German armament, his Imperial Chemical Industries owning a good block of stock in the Dynamit Actien Gesellschaft and in the giant I. G. Farbenindustrie A. G., largest trust in Germany.

Finally, just before the last Czech crisis, the State Department learned that the powerful Federation of British Industries, in which several Cabinet members are represented, had worked out a secret trade agreement with the Nazis undercutting the United States and the Anglo-American trade agreement so laboriously negotiated by Cordell Hull.

UNITED STATES SEES RED

By this time the sentiment of Roosevelt, Hull, et al., toward the British would have burnt up the printed page. Their almost inescapable conclusion was that the oligarchy which actually rules Britain was anxious at heart to preserve the dictators, and secretly feared the strengthening of democratic government similar to the Popular Front in France or the Negrin regime in Spain.

All this came to a head with the Hitler march into Prague, plus the occupation of Memel. Roosevelt issued his strong warning in between these two events.

Indications are that even the British Tories now are worried. They admit their mistake in trusting Hitler after the Munich agreement. There is no question regarding the status of British public opinion. But both Hull and Roosevelt still are keeping their fingers crossed about the British Cabinet and wondering whether it will stay put.

I remember the morning I read that article. I called on the telephone a man whom I consider one of the best-informed Members of the United States Senate, and told him of the article. My recollection is that he had read it. He is now present in the Chamber. I told him I could not believe it, and that I was going to address to the Secretary of State a letter requesting that he advise me whether or not the things related by Pearson and Allen were true. So I wrote a letter to the Secretary of State. Follow me carefully. Let us see what Cordell Hull, former United States Senator, now a member of the President's Cabinet as Secretary of State, says in reply to the following letter which I addressed to him on April 15:

APRIL 15, 1939.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In the columns of the Times-Herald, issue of Friday, April 14, 1939, under the head of the "Washington Daily Merry-Go-Round," there is an article by Messrs. Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen concerning the chicanery of Great Britain. This article begins by stating in its first paragraph that "the State Department has just heaved a sigh of relief after terminating one of the most crucial episodes of international prodding in years," etc.

I respectfully request that you write me the full facts in this matter. In other words, I respectfully request that you substantiate in writing the entire article heretofore referred to by Mr. Pearson and Mr. Allen.

Thanking you very much for your prompt attention to this most important matter, I am,

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

On April 19 I received from Hon. Cordell Hull the following letter, on the letterhead of the Department of State, in response to the one I have just read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 19, 1939.

The Honorable ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: I have received your letter of April 15 calling to my attention an article published under the caption of the "Washington Merry-Go-Round," which appeared on Friday, April 14, with regard to Anglo-American relations. I cannot "substantiate in writing the entire article." Those parts of it of which I have knowledge are so thoroughly inaccurate and misleading that they could not, in my judgment, be substantiated by anyone.

The article is one of a series written in a style which would convey the impression to the reader that the author or authors have access to the official files of this Department, or have been informed of the thoughts, words, and actions of this Department, as also of the thoughts, words, and actions of other governments. There is no such access, and the impression conveyed has absolutely no basis so far as this Department is concerned.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

This is Cordell Hull speaking, through his letter of April 19, 1939, which I have in my hand and which any Senator is privileged to inspect. In other words, a man in whom Senators have implicit confidence, a man with whom many Senators now in the Chamber have served, a man who we all know is a man of integrity, our Secretary of State, says that Pearson and Allen try to leave the impression that they, and they only, have access to the private files of the Secretary of State. I say that such statements as are being made by them from day to day relative to international or foreign affairs should be condemned, not only by Cordell Hull, but by every Member of the Congress. Pearson and Allen would lead their reading public of perhaps a million people to believe that they, and they alone, have a right to look through the files of the State Department and obtain all the data they want. Secretary Hull says their statements are absolutely without any basis.

Let me read again what the Secretary says, because I want Senators to remember it:

The article in one of a series written in a style which would convey—

That is how they get away with it. A newspaper in my State published an editorial about me which I intend to read to the Senate today. It was stated in its columns that the newspaper had never been convicted of libel or slander. Why? Because it uses an underhand style of writing to convey an impression, as does the article which I read, which discusses the President of the United States and the Secretary of State.

Mr. Cordell Hull says that the statements of Pearson and Allen are not true. He virtually says there is not a word of truth in the article.

Let us examine the question further. I respect confidences. Perhaps many persons do not, but I do. When Mr. Hull wrote me that letter I brought it to the attention of only one Member of this body; he is present here today, and listens to what I say, and will substantiate, if necessary, every word I say in regard to this letter.

So yesterday when I decided to answer the statement of these gentlemen, and decided to make denial of every single thing they have charged against me in connection with being a representative of the Nazi government and with heading an organization that is financed by mysterious money, I wanted to hear what somebody else thought of them and what somebody else said about them. So in yonder room I took the telephone receiver in hand. Sitting across from me were two Members of this body who overheard my conversation with Secretary Hull. I did not know at the time that they overheard it, but they mentioned it to me after I had walked through the room. I said, "Mr. Hull, tomorrow on the floor of the Senate I am going to take occasion to answer stories from time to time published about me in the Merry-Go-Round column, stories that are absolutely false, absolutely without foundation. I am forced to do it, for if I do not answer them I will be destroyed. Mr. Hull, do you recall that I sent you a clipping of the Merry-Go-Round column several weeks ago, at which time I wrote you a letter and asked you to verify the truth or falsity of the statements in that column?" Secretary Hull said, "Yes, Senator, I recall it." I then said, "Well, Mr. Secretary, tomorrow I am going to answer some malicious, unfounded charges."

I owe it not only to myself to do so, but I owe it to my colleagues with whom I am serving. I have virtually been branded as a traitor, as a scoundrel, as a representative of that government which the American people hate worse than any other government on the face of the earth. The writers of this column are trying to destroy me; I am standing here today in my own defense, and I hope to God that they will never decide to destroy any other Member of the Senate, as they tried to destroy a Member of the Senate from the State of Maryland and others, as they have tried to destroy the Secretary of State by telling the world that they had the inside and could virtually get anything they wanted from the secret files of the State Department. I wonder if the American people will condone such action on the part of the press? I say now to the American press—and there are honorable gentlemen at the head of it—that such men as those to whom I refer will eventually destroy the confidence of the American people in the American press if the newspapers that subscribe to their column continue to publish it.

I said further to Secretary Hull, "I should like to be able to bring to the attention of the Senate the letter that you wrote me, together with the column, and my letter to you."

Here [exhibiting] is the Secretary's letter. If any Senator wishes to see it, he is at liberty to do so.

The Secretary said, "Senator, I have no objection. I will be glad to have you do it; I will be glad to have you put it in the RECORD."

Here [exhibiting] is the letter which Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State, wrote to me as a result of the letter I addressed to him. Bear in mind, Senators, the underhanded, left-handed style of writing of these men.

I come to statements to which I have objected. I now bring to the attention of the Senate the following under date of January 18, 1939:

Washington Daily Merry-Go-Round—

They head this statement in their column on this date with the caption—

Tar-Heel Fuehrer.
Friends of BOB REYNOLDS, usually shrewd Senator—

I thank them for that compliment; I have never before been referred to as being "shrewd"— from North Carolina, are worried over his plan to loose a Senate speech praising Adolf Hitler.

The wisecracking REYNOLDS took a trip to Germany last summer and was wined, dined, and flattered by moguls of the Goering-Goebbels clique. He came back singing their praises and acclaiming Hitler as a great man. Nobody took this seriously until Bob unpacked the material he had brought back and began to write a Senate speech proclaiming the virtues of Adolf and describing nazified Germany as a virtual paradise.
Some of Bob's friends are wondering what influences prevailed on him—

Listen to that, Senators—some of my friends, they say, are wondering "what influences" prevailed on me—in Berlin, and whether his move to get appointed to the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee was not inspired by the Nazis.

Already some of REYNOLDS' colleagues are derisively calling him "The Tar-Heel Fuehrer."

Consider that specimen of underhanded, left-handed writing. In the first place, let us find out as to the truth of this statement. I wish to deny emphatically that when I was in Germany I ever talked with a single German official. The truth about the matter is that after the election last fall I went to Europe. I think I visited about 14 or 15 different countries there. I saw Mr. Chamberlain personally, having been introduced to him by Mr. Kennedy. I saw the Prime Minister of France. I was in a number of other countries. I finally journeyed, by way of Bucharest and old Vienna, up to Prague, where the bank was robbed by Hitler of about $85,000,000 in gold, belonging to a country that was swallowed up by him in his mad desire for territory and for conquest. I left Prague one night on the train and reached Berlin the next morning. I spent 2 nights and 2 days in Berlin. I was on a Thomas Cook & Son's tour. I never talked with a single official of the German Government, and, as a matter of fact, the only official place that I called was the American Embassy, where I talked with those in charge.

What do Pearson and Allen say? Senators, I defy them to prove what they have said. When a man makes a statement he ought to be in a position to prove the statement; otherwise he does great injustice. There is not a Member of this body who would make an accusation against a fellow Member unless he was able to prove it. The danger, the pathetic feature of it is that one can make a charge against anybody, regardless of his innocence, and half the people will believe that charge. Let me refer again to this specimen of underhand writing.

Friends of BOB REYNOLDS, usually shrewd Senator from North Carolina, are worried over his plan to loose a Senate speech praising Adolf Hitler. The wisecracking REYNOLDS took a trip to Germany last summer and was wined—

That is absolutely untrue—

dined—

That is also absolutely untrue—

and flattered—

That is absolutely without foundation of truth—

by moguls of the Goering-Goebbels clique.

That is absolutely false, but the people of the United States who read that column will believe it, because they think that Pearson and Allen are reputable representatives of the press like those who represent the newspapers here at the Capitol.

He came back singing their praises and acclaiming Hitler as a great man.

I came back saying just exactly what the President of the United States said in an address at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress of the United States, in which, according to my recollection, Mr. Roosevelt said that the totalitarian states for the time being, at least, had succeeded in solving the unemployment question, and had succeeded in solving the surplus-capital question. I did state, when I got off the boat, that they had made great headway on roads; and every man in the United States Senate who has been there knows that to be a fact. I had not seen those roads, I had not been in Germany since 1933, and I wanted to see the marvelous roads I had heard referred to. I believe, if I recall correctly, I heard the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] speak about them. I wanted to see the great stadiums that the Germans had built. I wanted to see what they were doing, in order that I might be able to warn the American people that we had better take our heads out of the sand and wake up to what is going on, or else we would lose all of our trade. But the writers of this column made the accusation, and what in the name of God can a man do?

Well, I have this comfort: When persons do you a grave injustice and you are in a sense defenseless because you have not the medium through which to answer, their day will come. Something will come to their lives that will make them pay for this sort of thing. It always comes home. I have never seen it fail in my life. Make a false accusation against a man that is calculated to destroy him, do your fellow man a great injury, and the chickens always come home to roost. Something will happen. I pray to God it will not happen within their families. If they have wives and are fathers, I pray to God that the punishment will not come upon the members of their families, but the punishment will come. It always does.

Now, let us see what they say:

Nobody took this seriously until Bob unpacked the material he had brought back and began to write a Senate speech—

In the first place, I never in my life wrote a speech to deliver in the Senate except on about two or three different occasions—proclaiming the virtues of Adolf and describing nazified Germany as a virtual paradise.

Some of Bob's friends are wondering what influences prevailed on him in Berlin, and whether his move to get appointed to the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee was not inspired by the Nazis.

"What influences prevailed on him in Berlin?" What do these men want to do? What impression do they want to leave? They want to leave the impression that I sold out my country. They want to leave the impression that I am a traitor. They want to leave the impression that I sold out and was paid in gold. No other impression could be gained from that article, after saying that I was "wined and dined and flattered."

They say further:

Whether his move to get appointed to the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee was not inspired by the Nazis.

Senators, let me say to you that for 3 long years I have tried my best to be designated as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and finally, after worrying them from time to time, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] secured for me a place on the committee. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] will verify the statement that ever since he has been the leader of this body I have been doing my best to obtain membership upon the Foreign Relations Committee; yet these men would have the 1,000,000 American people who read their column believe that I sold out to Berlin, and that that is why I wanted to become a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

That was on February 8.

Now, let us see what else they say. They attack, left-handedly, two other Members of this body, for whom everyone has the utmost respect.

I read from the Washington Merry-Go-Round of February 7, 1939. They have a paragraph divided now into "gems"—Gem No. 1, Gem No. 2, Gem No. 3.

Gem No. 2: Senators HIRAM JOHNSON—

Listen to this, Senators:

CLARK, REYNOLDS, and others spent an afternon fuming against the idea of selling airplanes to France.

But—last year it was revealed that Secretary Hull—

They are attacking Cordell Hull again—

was allowing planes to be sold to Germany in violation of the treaty of Berlin, which states that Germany "shall not import" arms or aircraft from the United States; and also in violation of the Neutrality Act which the above Senators wrote, stating that no licenses shall be issued by the State Department "in violation of a treaty." At that time the above Senators said nothing.

By their left-hand writing they would leave the impression that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and I were trying to keep planes from being sold to France for the benefit of Germany, for they follow that statement by stating that Secretary Hull was in on the thing with Senators JOHNSON, CLARK, and REYNOLDS because he permitted airplanes to be shipped to Germany in violation of the treaty. They not only attack me but they attack other Members of this body.

Yes, I was one who protested. Yes, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was one who protested. Yes, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was one who protested, and others; but by using that language in that manner they again attack the Secretary of State.

The next article was the very next day, attacking me again. See how cleverly this is done! See how they write so that people will derive certain impressions, and the readers will believe certain things, not knowing the truth, and not knowing that a man here is trying to do his duty to his country; but what can we do?

Let us see the Merry-Go-Round of February 8, under the head of "Nazi Press." That follows the one of the day before which I have just read, an insinuation that the Senator from California, the Senator from Missouri, Secretary Hull, and I were trying to help Germany by preventing the sale of planes on the one hand to France, and Secretary Hull, on the other hand, was permitting American planes to be sold to Germany. What impression does that leave? It leaves the impression that Secretary Hull was violating a treaty, and permitting the sale of planes to Germany to help them, while the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from California, and I were protesting against the unlawful sale of planes to France in order to help Germany, linking us all together.

All right. This article in the Washington Daily Merry-Go-Round of February 8, 1939, has a paragraph entitled:

NAZI PRESS

Immediate effects after January 4 appeared to be good. Rome and Berlin both were scared. Then the Nazi-Fascist-controlled press got to work. They played up the anti-Semitic angle, claimed that Roosevelt had become the tool of Jewish bankers in New York, was pitching the United States of America into war at the behest of the Jews. Naturally, the Nazis knew these reports would be cabled back to the American press.

Nazi papers headlined all the speeches of Representative HAM FISH; also of Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, who visited Berlin last summer.

I was there last December. They may call that summer if they want to.

These eminent statesmen were played up to the German people as representative of the great American masses; Roosevelt as the tyrant. Later—

Listen—

Later Senators CLARK, NYE, and HIRAM JOHNSON became the great heroes of the Nazi-Fascist papers.

There they are. Just the day before they had made that insinuation against the Senator from California, Secretary Hull, and the Senator from Missouri; and the very next day they come back to say:

Nazi papers headlined all the speeches of Representative HAM FISH; also of Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, who visited Berlin last summer. These eminent statesmen were played up to the German people as representative of the great American masses; Roosevelt as the tyrant.

Later Senators CLARK, NYE, and HIRAM JOHNSON became the great heroes of the Nazi-Fascist papers. This press play was partly for the purpose of making the German and Italian people believe they had nothing to worry about from the United States; partly for the effect upon the American public through reprints in the American press.

That was February 8.

On March 21 the Washington Merry-Go-Round—I have in my hand a copy of the Times-Herald—started off with Hitler. They want to connect my name every chance they get with Hitler's name; and in every article it will be noticed that my name, regardless of rhyme or reason, is connected with that of Hitler.

Those who have talked with Adolph Hitler recently report that there are just two things which send him into paroxysms of rage.

One is any suggestion that the German people are not behind him. Even the merest thought that he does not have the 100-percent support of all Germans causes him almost to go berserk.

Second is the fact that the United States Congress passed the recent air armament bill with only 15 votes dissenting. This he considers a direct insult, if not an attack on Nazi Germany.

It is obvious that Hitler followed the reports of the air program debate in Congress very closely, and one very confidential report received in high places states that at first he was both pleased and deceived by the speeches of Senators REYNOLDS, CLARK, and NYE.

Now they have the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] in it. They first take me in, then they take in the Secretary of State, then the Senator from California, then the Senator from Missouri, and now they have taken in the Senator from North Dakota.

Thinking that they represented American opinion, Hitler was confident that air armament would be defeated.

Then the next thing is headed "Hand of GARNER." They say so much about our Vice President—God bless him—that there is no use reading any of that.

Now I come to the next one. This, dated Thursday, April 27, is a little screed in what they call "Under the Dome." In North Carolina we have a newspaper called "The News and Observer, Under the Dome." It is owned by the Honorable Josephus Daniels, our Ambassador to Mexico. I dare say they took the heading from his paper. It is said they are accustomed to taking things. At least there is a case in court, I understand, in which they are charged with taking some stuff some lady wrote, and that lady is suing them, claiming that it was her writing and not theirs.

This is what they say here:

Senator MINTON, of Indiana, does not conceal his dislike for Senator REYNOLDS.

That is just another knock at me, following up this Nazi business. I remember the morning that came out in the newspaper I laughed at it, because I do not believe I have any better friend in the United States Senate than SHERMAN MINTON. Frequently we do not agree about certain matters pending before the Senate, but at the same time I respect SHERMAN MINTON. I think he has a fine personality, and we have always been the very best of friends. The very morning that was published in the paper SHERMAN MINTON—I call him

"Shay"—called me on the telephone at my office. He was extremely indignant about that statement in the column, and said "Bob, you know that you have not a better friend in the Senate than I. There are times when we differ, but you know that you and I have been friends for the years that I have been here, and I do not believe I have a better friend in the Senate than you."

Because I point out to the American people that England has failed to grant Ireland its absolute independence, must I be labeled an agent of Germany? Because I point out to the American people England's violation of the Balfour treaty, must I be labeled as a Hitlerite? I am asking my colleagues in all fairness about these matters.

Now let me come to the knockout, let me come to that paragraph in the column of these men which attacked me underhandedly, left-handedly, and left the impression with the American people that I am an agent of Hitler, and that my organization, the Vindicators, is financed by Hitler's money, by the money of the "bund." Let me show how cleverly that is done. I want Senators particularly to note this.

This particular column to which I now refer comes from the Daily Press, Newport News, Va., Thursday morning, May 4, 1939. It was sent to me, as a matter of fact, by the president of the Hampton Roads (Va.) Unit of the American Vindictators, the organization which I head. I desire to read the whole thing to the Senate. I want all my colleagues to look at this. They will see that in the middle of what I am going to read I have it marked with a red pencil. The paragraph relating to me is sandwiched right in between all the other propaganda which is published there. Let us see what it is:

WASHINGTON.—Two members of the House Un-Americanism Committee have unearthed evidence that Nazi agents are under orders to conduct an aggressive "smear democracy" campaign throughout the country. The sensational documents show that:

Bund branches are required to compile card indexes of every person in their localities who publicly endorse the administration's foreign policy.

Bund members must write two letters to these individuals denouncing them and produce copies of the letters as proof that they were sent.

Bund members must write letters to Congressmen, Senators, and newspaper editors at regular intervals attacking the President and his anti-Nazi-Fascist views.

Bund members are urged to subscribe to and distribute copies of The Vindicator, Fascist weekly recently launched by Senator REYNOLDS of North Carolina with mysterious financial backing.

What else could they desire to infer and to leave in the minds of the American people than that I sold out to the Germans, sold out my Government to the Germans, when I was in Berlin, when they said I was wined and dined and flattered, and not a word of it is true, so help me God.

How can men be so vile as to attempt to ruin another man? They must be Communists; they must want to flood this country with all the riffraff from all the foreign soil in the world, because consistently on this floor I have fought against our country going into war, and I admit that from day to day I give Britain and France hell because I believe down in my heart of hearts that they are doing their best to take us into war and kill the sons of American mothers. So help me God, so long as I live I will never vote to send the son of an American mother to any foreign shore as a soldier and insofar as all the foreign countries are concerned, they can all go to hell, because none of them are our friends.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The propaganda the Senator produces here reminds us of the kind of propaganda distributed prior to and during the World War against the late distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, the elder Senator La Follette, Senator Norris, and Senator Gore, and others in the House of Representatives and the Senate who were opposed to our entering the war. Evidently the same thing is going on now.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator for his observation. I have been told the same thing a thousand times. There is propaganda sweeping this country today to take the United States into war. As the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] stated on the floor of the Senate a few days ago, any man who is not blind and can read the newspapers and magazines knows that this country is flooded with literature, "hate" literature, to make the American people hate until they get to the burning point, and will want to go further and sacrifice their sons.

My God, think of going into another war, when day after day veterans apply at my office for help in obtaining admission to hospitals, and I am told day after day by the officials of the hospitals that veterans who need hospitalization cannot get into the hospitals because they have not sufficient room for them. Do I not know it?

Someone told me in the cloakroom a day or so ago concerning the position taken by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], at the time of the World War. I have not had an opportunity to ask him about it, but I was told that prior to the World War he was a Member of the Congress of the United States, and that he fought courageously and vigorously against our going into the war because he knew it would bring about the murder of many sons of American mothers and would cost the taxpayers billions upon billions of dollars. The Senator from Minnesota, then a Member of the House, fought against our entering the war, and when the fever heat was high, as a result of false propaganda in this country, and the Senator went back to the State of Minnesota, they told him that they wanted to hang him. They wanted to burn him alive. They threw the furniture out of his office into the street; they dragged him down to the railway station and locked him in an ice boxcar and sent him out of town, and said that if he came back they would kill him. But, thank God, the Senator from Minnesota, patriot that he is, is in the United States Senate today, because his constituents in Minnesota knew that he did the right thing, and knew that he felt he was doing the right thing when he voted as he did.

As the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] suggests, the same kind of propaganda is sweeping the country today that was sweeping the country then, and anyone who raises his voice against it is damned. The Communists can go out and speak their say, but the moment an American citizen rises to question their conduct he is called a traitor and a scoundrel. I will bring that to the attention of the Senate in a moment.

Those who are fighting me most bitterly today are the Communists in this country. Every issue of the Daily or Sunday Worker is vilifying and libeling me.

I wish to say in passing that I do not think the American people are awake to what is going on in this country, and I sometimes feel that I will give up the fight. I say to myself, "What is the use of my wasting my energy and all my time gallivanting over the country and making speeches, and speaking on the floor of the Senate, and talking to this club and that club? No one appreciates it." I sometimes feel that I should like to see us go to war; but then a million mothers would spend the rest of their lives in misery. I sometimes feel that we ought to open up the floodgates and let the immigrants from all the world come to this country and take charge of it. If they do not have charge of the country now, they soon will.

Let me continue with what I was reading. In the middle of this article I am sandwiched in, and I want the reporter to have it printed just as it is so the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may see the clever writing done by these men.

Sandwiched in the middle of the article is the following:

Bund members are urged to subscribe to and distribute copies of The Vindicator, Fascist weekly recently launched by Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, with mysterious financial backing.

I am coming back to that. They then say:

A special bund-supported organization has been set up to push propaganda among the Indian tribes.

Literature attacking democracy as a Communist device to build up dictatorship is being sent out in large quantities, particularly in the South and West.

One document consists of the stenographic record of a speech made by a Los Angeles Bund leader, in which he declared it was the duty of Hitler supporters to "smear Roosevelt and defame democracy."

"Nowhere in the Constitution is it stated," said he, "that the Union is a democracy, and therefore the 'protect democracy' cry is only a maneuver of the enemies of the United States, the anti-Nazis."

This bund leader also is quoted as saying that when he was in Germany he received special training in how to "expose the evils and crimes of democracy."

I read that to the Senate, and the whole of it, in order that Senators may see what clever propagandists these writers are in sandwiching in that small statement there against me.

Let me read it again:

Bund members are urged to subscribe to and distribute copies of the Vindicator, Fascist weekly recently launched by Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, with mysterious financial backing.

First, by the employment of the words "mysterious financial backing" they would have their readers believe that I sold out to Berlin when I was there in December. No other interpretation could be placed upon it, and in proof of that I will read to the Senate editorials from newspapers of my own State. Before doing so, however, I hope I may be pardoned for making a personal reference.

I am a native of North Carolina. I have lived there all my life. I love my State. I am fighting for what I believe to be right; I am doing all that I can for the State and the country I love, and whether my State ever returns me to the United States Senate or not will be perfectly all right with me. The people of North Carolina have been good to me. If they should never send me back to the Senate I could not complain. I love them all. I love the people of America. I love my country. I have visited most of the countries of the world, and the more countries I visit the more I love America and the more I love the people of America. Pearson and Allen are trying to destroy me in the eyes of the American public, and I defy them; I demand that they prove their allegation; and I am throwing it right back in their lap.

It may be asked, "What harm did it do you?" I have already said to the Senate that the reputable correspondents here at the Capitol have a reputation for telling the truth, giving the facts, and educating the American people to believe what they read in the newspapers. That is why these men are believed.

In North Carolina there is a lovely little city by the name of Burlington, which is in the County of Alamance. The first blood shed in the Revolution was spilled there. I have many friends there. I have carried that county many times. All through my political life I have been opposed by machine politicians. When I campaigned for the United States Senate in 1932, virtually every one of the machines in every one of the 111 counties in North Carolina was against me. The Democratic cangressional set-ups in the 11 congressional districts of North Carolina were against me, and every newspaper in North Carolina was against me, I think, except one little weekly with a circulation of about 900. But I took the stump against the man who was then a Member of the United States Senate, and who had been Governor of my State, and my friends defeated him, and gave me the greatest majority any man ever received in the State of North Carolina during its political history.

In 1932 I was elected for two terms, the short term and the long term. Then came 1938. During the years from 1932 to 1938 the same newspapers were against me. My recollection is now that there were only two newspapers in North Carolina that were for me. One is published at Wilmington, N. C., the Wilmington Star News, a daily, owned by a friend of mine named Rye Page, and the other is just about the finest weekly newspaper in North Carolina, published in tabloid form at Roanoke Rapids, N. C. All the other newspapers in North Carolina fought me viciously, but my friends defeated them, and I am putting them on warning now that when I come up again 6 years from now I am going to crucify them. They had better get busy and write more editorials about me now, for I warn them I am going to beat them worse than I ever beat them in my life. They have been my enemies. I want them to remain my enemies, and all in God's world I want are the friends that I had, because they can do the trick, God bless them!

Senators may ask whether that article hurt me. Let us see. Here is an editorial from the Daily Times News, Burlington, N. C., Alamance County. This publication has been striking at me from time to time since the Merry-Go-Round articles first came out; but it has never been friendly. When a newspaper is against you, it is going to use everything in the world it can. Let us see what this newspaper says. I am going to read the entire editorial. I am not going to read just what the Merry-Go-Round says. It does not make me blush, not at all. I "can take it."

RAMBUNCTIOUS REYNOLDS

Our BOB REYNOLDS, securely ensconced in the Senate for another 6 years, seems to have broken out with a rash of pro-"isms" that is not conducive to building up one's popularity among one's constituents, particularly when one is a Senator from a State that boasts—yea, even as Senator REYNOLDS himself has boasted—that its native-born population is among the highest by ratio of any State in the Union.

And of that I am proud, Mr. President. I am proud that North Carolina has fewer aliens than are found in any other State in the entire Union—less than one-half of 1 percent—and I hope always to keep it as it is. There are many States of the Union whose people wish that their States were in the fortunate position of my State.

North Carolina does not want fascism or communism.

I do not either, and I will prove that to the Senate.

They despise Hitler, loathe Mussolini, and regard Stalin with suspicion and distrust.

I do, too, but I am not blaming them for doing anything in the world they can. I am not standing here and saying that I could wish Stalin and Hitler and Mussolini were lying dead. I do not wish anybody dead. I do not wish anybody any harm. I want to do what I can for my country; and I repeat, I am going to continue to talk about Great Britain and France and Soviet Russia, which is lining up with Great Britain and France, because, as I have stated—and I may be wrong—I believe that they are trying to drive us into war. Some Members of this body do not agree with me, but they do not hear me criticize them and talk behind their backs. I have just as much respect for them as I have for a Senator who is 100 percent with me. What is this but a forum?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have just come into the Chamber, having been engaged in Senate committee work. I do not know what the distinguished Senator has said in his speech up to this moment, but my notion is that the Senator from North Carolina is not on trial. Those who criticize his position in the matter of curtailing immigration into the United States are on trial.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much for his contribution.

Continuing the editorial:

But North Carolinians are seeing their junior Senator becoming more and more tarred with unfavorable publicity in which the Tar Heel solon is pictured, time and again, as a pro-Nazi.

"Pictured, time and again, as a pro-Nazi" by the Merry-Go-Round column.

And this is most alarming to a State and a nation where sentiment is overwhelmingly against Hitler in any and all manifestations of his conduct, personality, and methods of "governing."

Who is not against him? Who would condone the persecution of poor, unprotected minorities? I have condemned it time and again.

Senator REYNOLDS probably does not regard himself as a pro-Nazi at all. He perhaps bitterly resents the accusation. Yet something is obviously wrong. A man does not get a sardonic and biting write-up in the magazine Ken—

Get it and read it. Find out the names of those who edit it.

as an American Fascist, nor is he assailed by fellow Senators as something approaching one, nor do responsible columnists castigate him as pro-Hitler—

I wonder to whom he is referring when he uses the words "responsible columnists."

nor do the dailies of his own State seriously question his ideological beliefs—all without cause. Someway, somehow, an incipient fascism has insinuated itself into the REYNOLDS reputation until it has reached really distressing proportions.

This editorial is from my State. How did the writer happen to pen that editorial? He reads the Washington Merry-Go-Round column. He has been reading it this year, since it charged left-handedly that I was wined and dined and flattered and that I sold out when I was in Berlin for 2 days.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round, which steps on many toes but never yet has had a suit for libel against it to stick—

Why? Because of its insinuating, left-handed style of writing—comes out with an open hint—

That is what it is—that the Vindicator—

That is my newspaper; I am coming to it shortly—

"Fascist weekly recently launched by Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, with mysterious financial backing," is financed by Nazi money.

That is what the editorial says.

The charge is made that German-American Bund members of this country are urged by their higher-ups to subscribe to the publication and to distribute it in their campaign of propaganda to "smear democracy."

Now, this is bad, very bad, for a Democratic Senator from a Democratic State, who used his allegiance to the present Democratic administration as one of his talking points in his campaign for reelection. Maybe Senator REYNOLDS is the victim of a malicious plot. Maybe he doesn't mean it when he gets up in the Senate to fulminate against Britain and France and to speak in extraordinarily tender terms of Italy and Germany—although that's his right, of course. Maybe where there's a lot of smoke, no fire exists. Maybe. * * * Maybe Senator REYNOLDS had better begin trying to put his house in order. Right now it would seem that an active and vigorous counter-publicity agent is his most pressing need.

If putting my house in order means that I must desist in my efforts from day to day to keep my country out of foreign entanglements or embroilments which might lead to war; if putting my house in order means that I am to keep my mouth shut when I believe that Great Britain, France, and Soviet Russia are trying to get us into a war to save the democracies of imperialistic Britain, socialistic France, and communistic, anarchist Russia—I shall never put my house in order, because I shall never want to put my house in order.

If putting my house in order means that my mouth is to be closed on the floor of the Senate in trying to keep out of this country millions from foreign lands who would take the jobs of American men and women, I do not want to put my house in order.

If putting my house in order means that I must refrain from doing my best to bring about the enactment of laws for the deportation of alien criminals and undesirables who are trying to undermine our Government, I do not want to put my house in order.

If putting my house in order means that never again shall I say that we ought to banish nazi-ism, fascism, and communism because, as I have said a thousand times, there is room in this country only for Americanism, then I do not want to put my house in order.

I want to say to the people of North Carolina and to the American people that if I am to be deprived of the opportunity of talking about these matters in the interest of my country, and doing my bit to save America for Americans, so help me God, I never want to come back to the United States Senate!

If that is the way the Americain people feel about the subjects which I am sponsoring, the best thing to do is to take up arms and get into uniform tomorrow, and go over and tell Great Britain, "Yes; we are going to save you. We saved your democracy once before." Tell France, "Yes; we are going to save you," and say to the other member of the military alliance, Soviet Russia, with its 178,000,000 Communists, "We have come over here, at the sacrifice of the sons of American mothers, to save your democracy." Then, as time goes on, hundreds of thousands of little pine boxes draped with American flags will be greeted at the docks and at the railway stations by American mothers who will look down upon the faces of their sons in cold death.

If American mothers want to give their sons in death for the democracy of any country in the world, even including Soviet Russia, it is all right with me. If the American people now are damning me, as are the authors of the Washington Merry-Go-Round, because of my position in regard to immigration, then open up the floodgates.

We now have between 11,000,000 and 12,000,000 men and women out of employment. In addition, as statistics show, 26,000,000 people are working only part time. We have 3,000,000 men on the W. P. A. rolls, and 1,000,000 more who want to get on. We have 300,000 young men in the C. C. C. camps, and an equal number who want to get in. We have 4,000,000 men on the Government pay roll and on the pay rolls of the 48 States, 10,000 municipalities, 3,100 counties, and thousands upon thousands of political subdivisions. If the American people want to open up the floodgates, particularly in view of the fact that our great President says that one-third of the people today in the United States are undernourished and improperly clothed, that is all right with me. I am becoming sick and tired of the battle. Let the floodgates be opened. Let refugees and aliens from all over the world come to the United States. While we are opening the gates, let us open them to Ethiopia, China, and Japan. It will be all right with me. If I am to be damned for the things which I have advocated, I never want to come back to the United States Senate.

I am going to read something else. I am not going to keep anything from the Senate. I thank Mr. Bernarr Macfadden and the editor of Liberty Magazine for an editorial in that magazine, which, fortunately for me, has a circulation which I understand is about 2,000,000. Bernarr Macfadden stated that any man in this country who takes a stand and tries to help his country, tries to do what he can for America, is immediately branded as a Fascist. However, he said in that editorial, which I shall read, that I "can take it." I can. I wish to say again that I am not going to be run out of the fight. I took the oath for 6 years. I am going to stay here for 6 years. At the end of that time, if my people in North Carolina want to turn me down and damn me for trying to help the American people, then I do not want to be in the United States Senate.

Let me read what my home-town newspapers say about me. First, I want to tell the Senate something about my home-town newspapers. My home-town newspapers are owned by two gentlemen, Mr. Don Elias and Mr. Charles A. Webb, gentlemen of fine character. There are two newspapers in my home town, the Asheville Daily Citizen and the Asheville Daily Times, both owned by the same men. My home-town newspapers all my life have been viciously and violently opposed to me. Sunday will be Mother's Day, and when I go home to visit my mother, as I am going to do again tomorrow—and I thank God here and now that she is living; may God spare her life for many years to come; and I hope all Senators are as fortunate as I am in having their mothers still with them—when I go home they never even mention my name in the newspapers or say that I am there, and they have always "given me hell" in their editorials. I am glad of it, because they are two of the most unpopular sheets anywhere in the United States. Their representative is here today in the gallery, and I hope he wires that to them. [Laughter.] I do not want them ever to be for me. I want them to continue to be against me, as they have always been. Always I have beaten the socks off of them, and when I come up for reelection 5 years from now I will beat them again.

To show what my home-town newspapers say about me, I will read an editorial from the Asheville Citizen. They cannot do me any more harm than they have tried to do from day to day for the past 20 years. During my campaign for the United States Senate in 1932 they would hardly print a notice that I was going to speak. I want them to stay against me. Let it be understood that we understand one another from now on. Here is what they wrote about me:

SENATOR REYNOLDS SPEAKS FOR HIMSELF

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS made a speech in Boston Sunday night. This is hardly news. The foreign situation weighs heavily on his conscience nowadays, and he expresses his anxiety in frequent speeches.

The burden of his Boston fulmination was denunciation of "imperialistic Britain and communistic France" and a warning to the American people against being poisoned in their judgments of Hitler and Mussolini by propaganda. All this has become for Senator REYNOLDS an old refrain.

The Senator is entitled to have and to hold his own views about the foreign policies of this country. The Citizen would be the last to deny him this elemental right, even though its exercise now brings him into conflict with the administration whose blessing he sought so industriously when he was a candidate for reelection.

That is a reference to the fact that the President and I somewhat differ as to the foreign policy of the country. During the years that have gone by they "cussed" me because I voted for everything the President wanted. Now that I have to differ with the President on this one issue they are "cussing" me again.

What does concern us is the fear that the rest of the country may conclude that Senator REYNOLDS speaks for a large majority of the people of North Carolina when he airs his own views on Britain, France, Italy, and Germany.

Such is not the case. Senator REYNOLDS is not speaking the convictions of his own constituents when he berates France and Britain and defends Hitler and Mussolini left-handedly. The truth of the matter is that if Senator REYNOLDS had spoken in the spring of 1938 as he is speaking today, he would have been overwhelmingly defeated.

During the campaign perhaps I did make one or two speeches in North Carolina. I do not think I made any more than that—and in those speeches I played particularly upon the fact that we ought to stay out of war; that we ought to keep clear of any foreign entanglements and embroilments; and that I wished that George Washington were here in order that his words of wisdom might ring in the ears of every single American.

Taken by and large, the people of North Carolina support the foreign policy of the Roosevelt administration. They agree with President Roosevelt that the best way to keep the United States out of a world war is to prevent a world war, and that the best way to prevent a world war is to apply diplomatic and economic pressure on Hitler and Mussolini.

In other words, sanctions.

North Carolinians realize that France and Britain—

Listen to this. I will show the Senate how much sense is possessed by the fellow who wrote this editorial—

North Carolinians realize—

Do not believe this, because this is not so. The fellow who wrote this editorial is reflecting upon the intelligence of the people of my State when he makes this statement, and I resent it—

North Carolinians realize that France and Britain are about the only friends that the United States has among the larger powers of Europe.

Then why in hell do they not pay us that $20,000,000,000 they owe us? [Laughter.] Why do they not show some appreciation for the 38,000 sons of American mothers who were killed and now lie cold in death in foreign soil? What this fellow is writing is a lot of crap. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the rules of the Senate, no expression of approval or disapproval is permitted and laughter is not permitted in the galleries. The occupants of the galleries will please observe the rules of the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I continue reading from the editorial:

Senator REYNOLDS may find much to praise in the regimes of Hitler and Mussolini. The people of North Carolina do not. Senator REYNOLDS may distrust and even hate France and Britain. The people of North Carolina do not. It is to be hoped that the rest of the country will thoroughly understand that in the present instance Senator REYNOLDS is not speaking for North Carolina.

Senator REYNOLDS is speaking for North Carolina when he says that North Carolinians have sense enough to know that the American people have not a friend upon the face of the earth. Britain, France, Russia, Germany, Italy—all of them—would double-cross us at the drop of the hat. If we have not sense enough to know that, the mothers of America ought to send their sons over there and let them be slaughtered and brought back to them in death.

No, my home-town newspapers do not like me; they never have; but they hate me now, because I do not vote as they think I ought to vote. I will say to the correspondents for the Asheville Daily Citizen and the Times that, insofar as I am concerned, they can step to hell.

Here is another editorial entitled "Let Them Come In." The editorial reads:

It is difficult to see why such vigorous opposition has been expressed to the Wagner-Rogers bill which would permit the entry to the United States of 20,000 young Germans. The immigration would be spread out over easy periods of 2 years. Responsible committees, working for months, have assured that none of the young newcomers would become public charges, for each would have a home arranged for him in advance.

Men and women of intelligence, both from the liberal and conservative ranks, have given this legislation their endorsement. Mr. Herbert Hoover is one of them. Miss Dorothy Thompson is another. And surely no eyes were entirely dry after reading the moving testimony offered in behalf of the bill by Miss Helen Hayes, our first lady of the stage and a mother.

It is tiresome to iterate the stock but true argument that America traditionally offers a haven to oppressed peoples. Of course, we do that. It is one reason for our greatness. We need not be reluctant, then, in offering security in America for these 20,000 children—a handful, indeed, in comparison with the number that have entered other lands. For, is it not pessimistic to insist that we are no longer a land of opportunity, or to depreciate our acknowledged compassion for humanity, especially the child?

When I read that editorial in the Asheville Times, which is owned by the same bunch, I sat down and wrote the editor and told him that I was against him on that issue; that I was going to fight the Wagner bill which would admit 20,000 refugee children from Germany into this country; that I was going to fight it on the floor of the Senate until the "cows come home." I stated in that letter that I thought our first duty was to take care of the millions of orphans and refugee children in this country before we undertook to care for the refugees and orphan children from other lands in the world; and I mean it. If the American people want the orphans of the world to come here, then, let us be fair; let us bring in the millions from China, the 500,000 from Ethiopia, the 1,500,000 from Spain, the 5,000,000 from the Ukraine in Russia, and several hundred thousand or a million from Germany. Let us bring them all in. I am getting tired of preaching the doctrine of trying to save America for Americans. If Americans do not care, I do not care.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the Senator's correspondent explain how it is to be guaranteed that the 20,000 refugee children from Germany never at any time will become public charges?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The proponents of the bill say that every child that comes here from Germany must be under 14 years of age. That is correct. But let us remember that 5 years from now they will be 19 years of age, and then we will find the 20,000 boys and girls from Germany competing for jobs with 20,000 sons and daughters of America who cannot now get jobs.

The Senator from Oregon inquires what guaranty will be given that the refugee children will not become public charges.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The proponents of the bill say they are going to provide bond to guarantee that they will not become public charges. Let me say, remembering the number of unemployed in this country today, that if times do not get better the fellows who give the bond will be on relief themselves.

I am going to take my time today and tell about it all. I am defending myself; my political life is at stake; I have been viciously and violently attacked; but I will again say that "I can take it."

Who are the Vindicators? Ever since I have been in the United States Senate I have been working with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and a number of others to try to pass immigration laws which would deport alien criminals and protect the American people. I have never yet been able to get a bill for that purpose out of the committee. I have never yet been able to secure the passage of a bill of that kind, but I have tried. Now I have about five bills before a subcommittee, and I shall come to them in a minute. As a result of speeches that I made throughout the length and breadth of the land in regard to the matters I have been talking about, as a result of innumerable radio speeches upon the subject of foreign relations and immigration—and, by the way, next week, as soon as I come back from North Carolina, I am going to make two more of those speeches over the National and Columbia Broadcasting Systems—I have received thousands upon thousands of letters from persons of all stations in life in the United States, all of them pleading and begging that I and others do something to keep the country out of war, and to stop aliens from coming in and taking the jobs of Americans. When the showdown comes in this country—and it is coming; do not fool yourselves; the enemy is boring from within—when the showdown comes, and it is coming within the next 7 to 10 years, we shall find that people who will save our country will be the workingmen, the poor people, many of whom have not had work for years, and who, during that time, have used up their little savings. That is what I find from my correspondence. I only wish some of the Members of the Senate could see the hundreds of letters I receive from day to day, pleading with me to do something.

Then I decided that I would band together the American people who may be truly interested in their country. I virtually reached into the air, and I pulled out a word called "vindicators." That means, according to the dictionary, to defend from without, and to defend from within. It is one word. It is easily remembered. I knew I could not find a more appropriate word, because I know, as you do, Mr. President, that there is more danger to our country from within than there ever has been from without.

So I decided to organize this movement. I was afraid somebody might think I had an ulterior motive. I have no political ambition except to return to the United States Senate again 6 years from now; but, as I stated a moment ago, if my people of North Carolina want to condemn and damn me for preaching Americanism and trying to help the people of America, I do not want to come back. As for any other political ambition, I have none whatever. Why in the name of heaven should I work as I do, from early morning until late at night, and keep all my office force working, when hundreds of letters come in daily? It means nothing to me, except that I want to help the American people; because I know now that the American form of Government is on trial, as was said by Mark Sullivan in his column this morning in the Washington Post.

So, fearing that it might be thought that there was something selfish about the movement, I incorporated it. I called it "The Vindicators' Association of America." I incorporated it in the District of Columbia; and among other things I provided in the articles of incorporation that I, the president, as long as I am president, could never receive one penny of compensation in the form of a salary or anything else. Before I started this organization, people came to me and said, "Bob, if you 'can take it,' go ahead; but if you 'cannot take it,' keep your mouth shut, and sit in your seat in the Senate every day and say nothing. So long as you keep your mouth shut and never do anything, nobody will ever attack you. If you 'can take it,' go ahead; but, mark my word, you will be attacked by the Communists. You will be attacked by everybody who is in opposition to the things you stand for; and watch! Watch what you drink, and watch what you eat, and look out. They will frame you." I know it. I know the Communists are going to do their best to get me; but the only way they can stop me is to shoot me, because if they put me in jail I shall have an audience of a thousand persons every time I want to talk from between the bars. There are at least a thousand people in the country who believe as I do.

I read the charter of the Vindicators:

We, the undersigned, all citizens of the United States, and a majority citizens of the District of Columbia, desiring to associate ourselves as a corporation pursuant to the provisions of title 5 of chapter 5 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, do hereby certify as follows:

First. The name or title by which this corporation shall be known in law shall be The Vindicators, Inc.

Second. The term for which it is organized shall be perpetual.

Third. The particular purpose and objects of said corporation shall be to bring about the association of all American citizens regardless of party affiliation—or religious creed into a Nation-wide association to be known as The Vindicators, as heretofore mentioned, which organization or association of American Vindicators shall be for the sole and exclusive purpose of promoting Americanism, which embodies patriotism and good citizenship. And for the further purpose and particular object of—

Listen—

If I am a traitor, if I am to be hanged, if I am to be damned, if I am to be destroyed for trying to do something I believe to be for the interest of my country, then I am willing to be condemned as a traitor; I am willing to be destroyed.

Here are the objectives of the Vindicators. Listen well to them, Senators, and if there is anything un-American about them, I should like to know it. But I warn Members of the Senate, be careful how loud from the housetops you preach Americanism. Be careful how loud from the housetops you try to defend your country, regardless of what it is about. Do not become too much interested. There are five objectives of the Vindicators:

(a) To keep America out of war.

If there are American mothers here today who want to sacrifice their sons to save the democracy of Russia, it is all right with me.

This to be accomplished by the enactment and the administration of neutrality laws, by staying clear of any foreign entanglements or becoming involved in foreign embroilments, and by insisting that America look after it own internal affairs without meddling into the internal affairs of other nations.

I am only saying that which was said by George Washington, the Father of his Country. If there is anything un-American about that, I should like to know it.

(b) To provide employment for the millions of American citizens who are today without employment by prohibiting any further immigration to the United States for a period in duration of the next 10 years, or such time as every single employable of our 12,000,000 unemployed has been provided with work. And by deporting aliens who have usurped the jobs of American citizens and who are now enjoying employment which should firstly be provided to American citizens. And by encouraging private industry and increasing the purchasing power of the masses in order that the present overproduction may be enjoyed by those who are underconsuming.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says that the trouble with this country is underconsumption and not overproduction. Remembering those words of wisdom from that man whom I so greatly respect, I put that expression into the charter when one morning I sat down and dictated the whole thing in 30 minutes.

Should I be condemned, should I be destroyed for trying to save for American citizens the few jobs available in America today?

Objective No. 3:

(c) Deport all undesirable aliens, many of whom—

As we all know—

are now attempting to undermine the Government of the United States by advocating the overthrow of the American Government, and by the preaching of false doctrines in the form of many "isms," including nazi-ism—

That is, Hitler in Germany—

fascism, and communism, and thereby attempting to banish every and all "isms", with the exception of Americanism, with a view to paramounting Americanism in the minds of every man, woman, and child within the confines of the United States of America.

Is there anything objectionable in that, Senators, when our penitentiaries and jails are crowded with criminals who are not citizens of our country, and their keep, their clothing, and their food are being paid for by the taxpayers of America?

(d) Bring about the mandatory registration and fingerprinting of every alien in the United States in order that there may be actually ascertained the number of aliens residing within the borders thereof at the present time, and for the further purpose of ascertaining the location of these aliens so that their activities may be observed in case of war, since every alien within our midst—

I am not talking about naturalized citizens, Senators. They are just as good as native-born citizens. I am talking about persons who have come here illegally, or who have come here legally and remained illegally, and are not American citizens.

since every alien within our midst would be a potential enemy or spy in case of an invasion. To deport those who came here illegally or who entered legally and have remained here illegally.

If there is any objection to that, I should like to know it.

No. 5 objective:

To encourage and sponsor an adequate national defense by providing such armaments and implements of defense in numbers and quantity sufficient to provide the United States with an army and navy and an air force sufficiently large to protect its borders and its shores from a foreign invasion, and to command the respect of the nations of the world which are bent upon aggression and conquest—

And our destruction. Those are the five objectives.

Fourth, the corporation—

That is, the Vindicators Association of America—

the corporation shall be a nonprofit organization designed purely and simply for the purposes heretofore mentioned in paragraphs first, second, third, and fourth; and it is distinctly understood that any and all surplus funds that might be attained by the corporation shall be used for the purpose of publicizing the corporation itself and for the purpose of making distribution of literature, and carrying out the objects and principles of the corporation by any other modern methods or means, such as the radio, magazines, newspapers, etc.

That the corporation shall be privileged to conduct its affairs as a fraternal organization or association by organizing chapters, camps, lodges, nests, or similar designations, in each and every county of the United States, with the privilege of issuing booklets and pamphlets as to rules and regulations designating the hour and date of meetings, etc.

Seventh. That none of the officers of this association shall be permitted to receive any regular salaries or designated daily, weekly, or monthly compensation.

Mr. President, that is the charter. If there is anyone who can say I am a traitor, that I am untrue to my oath, let him say so now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am interested particularly in that part of the Senator's discussion which has to do with immigration. As a member of the Committee on Immigration and of the subcommittee which has the Senator's bill in charge, I have endeavored to ascertain the approximate number of aliens now in this country. As nearly as I can ascertain, 4,000,000 is about the correct number.

I remind the Senator that most of us do not know how many 4,000,000 people are. That is more people than the entire population of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, and Nevada. I agree with the Senator that it is time to prevent more aliens coming into this country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator. In reference to that matter, I am, unfortunately, unable to tell the Senator how many aliens there are in the country, because we are the only country in the world which does not have a registration act. I have claimed repeatedly that there are from 4,000,000 to 7,000,000. Those who are opposed to my idea about these things claim that there are 3,000,000. I cannot prove they are wrong and they cannot prove that I am wrong, because, unfortunately, we have no law requiring the registration of aliens, and we are the only nation in the world which does not keep track of them.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will recall that the recent relief bill did not provide sufficient money to employ all the people who are out of work; so, in order to make the money go as far as we could make it go, an amendment was inserted providing that only American citizens should be eligible to relief. As a result of that amendment I think about 30,000 to 40,000 were taken off the relief rolls because they were not citizens of the United States. In other words, those 40,000 aliens had been getting relief when there was not sufficient relief money to pay to all American citizens who had applied for it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to say in that connection, and before I forget it, that I have been attacked for not standing by President Roosevelt on this issue. Every Member of the Senate knows that since I have been in the United States Senate I have been classified as a new dealer, have been classified as a liberal. I believed in the things our great President was trying to do. I knew he was doing everything in the world that he could do for the suffering and the unfortunate in this country.

During my first 6 years in the United States Senate the President and I differed several times. I differed with the President in the case of the St. Lawrence treaty; I differed with the President on the question of the United States entering the World Court, and at that time I spoke for hours in this Chamber from this side, while on the other side was that eminent statesman and patriot who sits there now and listens to my words, the distinguished and able Senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I thank God we did not enter the World Court, because, as I stated then, it was the back door to the League of Nations, and if we had been in the League of Nations in 1935, when Great Britain wanted us to join them in oil sanctions against Italy, we would have been in war, and thousands upon thousands of American mothers would have been in mourning today. So much for that.

After Pearson and Allen began their underhanded attacks upon me, their left-handed attacks, in January, by stating that I sold out, virtually, when I was wined and dined and flattered in Berlin, I began to get the reaction from it. Things became so bad after their first statement, and after I had decided upon the organization of the Vindicators to help Americans, I had to issue the letter I hold in my hand to the newspapers of America. In order that my position may be plain, I shall read the letter I sent to the newspapers of America, asking them to print my letter in full in order that the people might know for once and all my position. Some of them printed it, some of them did not; but from the bottom of my heart I thank those newspapers which did print it. The letter, which was dated February 22, 1939, reads:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
February 22, 1939.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: In view of the fact that I have been grossly misrepresented in some quarters in connection with the Vindicators movement, which I started, I respectfully request that, in all fairness to me, you publish the contents of this letter.

I wish to briefly state the aims of this program:

1. Keep America out of war by enacting strict neutrality laws, staying clear of foreign political entanglements and embroilments, and stop meddling in the internal affairs of other nations.

2. Banish all foreign "isms" (nazi-ism, fascism, and communism).

3. Stop all immigration for the next 10 years, or until such time as all of our idle are reemployed.

4. Register and fingerprint all aliens in order that we may ascertain the number of aliens in the United States and where located.

5. Deport all criminals and undesirable aliens and expel those here illegally or those who arrived legally and have remained illegally.

The word "vindicators" merely designates those who are participating in this Nation-wide patriotic movement to bring about the enactment of legislation to carry out the objectives stated above. Any American citizen, regardless of race, political affiliations, or religious creed may become a member of the Vindicators. There is no initiation fee, nor are there any dues.

I am of the opinion that those who have bitterly condemned this movement have done so without having learned the facts. If there are any opponents to the above program, I would appreciate their advising me of their objections, and I would likewise appreciate those in sympathy with the program writing me so that I may have the benefit of their cooperation and encouragement.

Those endorsing this movement are striving to glorify Americanism and patriotism. We are endeavoring to arouse the American people to the realization of the dangers of these foreign "isms"—communism, nazi-ism, and fascism—that now infest our country and threaten to undermine the foundation of our Republic. The time has arrived when we must rekindle the flame of true American democracy, when we must rally and unite to preserve and strengthen the ideals, the doctrines, and the institutions that have made our Nation the world's greatest citadel of freedom and liberty. I do not conceive how any real American would object to these principles and objectives.

With the interest of all Americans in mind we have adopted the slogan "Our citizens, our country, first."

Respectfully yours,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, it is said that the Vindicator is a Fascist weekly. I will let my colleagues say whether or not the truth has been told in that respect. I desire to tell the Senate a little something about the organization.

Very few people interested in America have any money. I have not. All I have is my salary. I depend entirely upon that every month. Incidentally, in regard to that salary I may add that Mr. Pace, the financial clerk of the Senate, takes out of my salary of $833 per month $500 a month in payment of a home. I never owned a piece of property in my life, and I want to own a home sometime. I never owned a home in my life. I love America. I love our Capital City. So I found a place just a stone's throw from the dome of the Capitol, right down East Capitol Street, on the corner sandwiched in between the United States Supreme Court Building and the Folger Shakespearean Library. I wanted that place. I made up my mind I was going to buy it, because every day when I looked out of my bedroom window I could espy the dome of the Capitol of the greatest country in all the world. So I was successful in buying that place by means of making a down payment of $1,000, which I had saved, and then I made an arrangement to pay off the balance at the rate of $500 a month, and Mr. Pace has an order on my salary for $500 a month.

Perhaps I am too enthusiastic about Americanism, perhaps I am too much interested in trying to do my part to save America for Americans, but I did it. I have never been sorry that I did.

I have here the first copy of the American Vindicator. This week I am going to send to every Member of the Senate a copy of the American Vindicator. This is a copy of the first issue—April 1929. I wish to ask every Member of this body, when they find the time to do so, to read every line in this issue of the American Vindicator. If then they find one single word in it that is un-American, if they find one single word that is friendly to Germany, or Italy, or Rumania, or any totalitarian state, I declare to the Senate that I will submit myself to any punishment which may be prescribed.

I know what is in the Vindicator, because I do not have anyone to edit it. I pick out the material. I edit it myself, and with the exception of a few paragraphs it is all gleaned from other newspapers.

It is said it is a Fascist weekly. On the very front page of the American Vindicator, given a most prominent position, is the following paragraph:

NAZI UNIFORM BAN SOUGHT

Des'gned to drive all Nazi organizations in the United States out of existence, a bill prohibiting wearing of uniforms by persons engaging in foreign propaganda has been introduced in the House by Representative GAVAGAN, Democrat, of New York.

GAVAGAN assailed the appearance of "uniformed Nazis" at the recent rally of the German-American Bund at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

The bill imposes penalties up to 1 year imprisonment for violations.

Following is the editorial at the end of the paragraph I just read:

This bill will apply to all foreign "ism" organizations wearing uniforms and should go further—should go further in use of flags other than those of the nations themselves.

Here is another article on the front page:

Bring Them All Before Us.

That is the heading.

In a House speech Representative DICKSTEIN, Democrat, of New York, demanded that the Dies committee subpena Fritz Kuhn and other leaders of the German-American Bund.

Representative DICKSTEIN is the chairman of the Immigration Committee in the House. He is violently opposed to every one of my immigration bills. But regardless of that, I give him front-page space.

"If the committee would call them in and expose their activities, people would not have attended such meetings as that in New York the other night," DICKSTEIN said.

Declaring the committee "was organized for a year and didn't subpena a real Nazi leader," DICKSTEIN denounced Nazi and Fascist propaganda in demanding the committee subpena heads of hundreds of organizations alleged to be spreading subversive propaganda.

The very thing my organization seeks to do is to banish nazi-ism and fascism—and let us not forget communism. There is much talk against nazi-ism and fascism, but our people seem to have forgotten the evils of communism.

Let us see what else there is in the American Vindicator. Let us see whether the publication is un-American. On the editorial page appears the following:

The official organ of The Vindicators Association, Inc.
A national patriotic organization, the objectives of which are to—

That is carried in every issue—

1. Keep America out of war.
2. Register and fingerprint all aliens.
3. Stop all immigration for the next 10 years.
4. Deport all alien criminals and undesirables.
5. Banish all foreign "isms."

That means nazi-ism, fascism, and communism.

On the second page I publish an article from a minister of the gospel, who says:

Communism, fascism, and nazi-ism have no place here.

The article takes up nearly the whole page. In that article that minister of the gospel says, and that is included in the columns of the Vindicator:

To all united fronts of nazi-ism, fascism, and communism, let ring in patriotic hearts the language of the President of the United States: "If another form of government can present a united front in its attacks on democracy, the attack must be met by democracy. Such a democracy can and must exist in the United States."

To all these propagandists we say: If you believe that communism, nazi-ism, and fascism are better than Americanism, then go back to Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini; if you do not, then for the love of God's truth stop propagandizing about them and let us live in peace.

In the first issue I wrote a lead story of about seven columns which I dictated one afternoon. One of the paragraphs is entitled:

DISGRACEFUL DEMONSTRATIONS

The United States today is infested with "isms" of every description and from every corner of the globe.

No other country in the world would permit the disgraceful demonstrations by alien-minded groups that are taking place in the country today. Recently in the city of New York, in Madison Square Garden, 28,000 of the bund assembled, while without the walls of Madison Square Garden more thousands, opposed to nazi-ism, assembled. This is the political battleground of the "isms" of the world. Recently, in Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and other great metropolitan centers of the country huge demonstrations of foreign groups have been held.

Americanism has been shifted to the background. Foreign "isms" have gone to the front.

Every sort of "ism" on the face of the earth is being preached upon the virgin soil of America with the exception of Americanism.

And that is God's truth.

Senators, let me say something more about the Vindicator. I have read the charter. Pearson and Allen say it has been financed by "mysterious money." To begin with, I issued 17,000 copies of the American Vindicator. I paid for those 17,000 copies with my own savings. They were printed here in the city of Washington, and the masthead evidences the fact that it was printed by union labor. I mailed those 17,000 copies to 17,000 people who had written me only a few weeks prior thereto in regard to the program I had suggested. As a result of the distribution of the 17,000 copies there was a popular demand for an additional 20,000 copies. I had printed the additional 20,000 copies. As the result of the printing of the 20,000 and 17,000 issues there was a popular demand in the United States for 167,000 copies, every penny of the cost being paid for by the $1 per year subscription for the American Vindicator itself. If any Senator wishes to see that in the books in black and white, I shall be delighted to show him exactly where we stand. But nobody else can see them. The writers of the Merry-Go-Round column cannot see them. This is our business, for the American people. It is our business and not the business of those who would destroy men who are endeavoring to do something for the American people, as I am, by making sacrifices of every conceivable description.

I wish to say that, despite what Messrs. Pearson and Allen say, the American Vindicator within the next 12 months will be a powerful patriotic organization in the United States, because the American people have arrived at a realization of the fact that the time has come to perfect a united front against all the "isms"—nazi-ism, fascism, and communism. The time has come to save their country for their sons and daughters, who today cannot find employment, regardless of how hard they try.

Mr. President, I now wish to bring to the attention of the Senate a few letters and other documents.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I had just stated that in my opinion those boring from within are destroying the Government. I believe I know what I am talking about as well as any man in the United States, because I know that no one receives more letters than I do from every State in the United States on the subject of foreign affairs and on the subject of immigration. I know that no Member of the Senate has been over the country to a greater extent than I have been since the 1st of January, making speeches about our foreign policy and the question of immigration.

A moment ago I stated that right now America needs unity. Right now America needs a united front. Right now America is being called upon to prove that our kind of democracy is the best form of government in the world. In substantiation of that fact I wish to read an article which I mentioned earlier in my remarks, written by Mr. Mark Sullivan.

Mr. Mark Sullivan is right. I do not think Mr. Sullivan is a Nazi. I never heard anybody call him a Nazi. This is what he says. It is not Senator REYNOLDS speaking. It is Mr. Mark Sullivan speaking. This article was published in the Washington Post of today. It is headed, "Our Tepid Workers":

The most pregnant thought I have read in many weeks, the most full of meaning for America, if America can be made to understand, is contained in three short sentences by Columnist John T. Flynn. I quote:

"In the world today there is a great competition going on."

He is right.

"It is a contest between three economic systems"—

He is right—

"the Communist, the Fascist, and the democratic-capitalist systems."

He is right.

"The victory will go to the system which succeeds within its own borders."

Mark that, Mr. President, because that is the thing I have been eternally preaching.

By a system succeeding is meant succeeding in an economic sense.

That is why I want the United States to succeed in an economic sense. That is why I want the people in the United States to forget about the troubles, economic and otherwise, of the people abroad, and concentrate their attention upon the troubles at home, where we have plenty of them.

Mr. Sullivan continues:

As Mr. Flynn explains, that system will win which brings to its people the highest degree of economic contentment.

He is right.

This test of winning can be expressed briefly and roughly as the largest quantity of employment, the minimum of unemployment.

He is right. Let us make our form of government succeed in the face of all the problems with which we are confronted.

He continues:

Whichever of the three systems succeeds in doing this the best and the quickest within its own borders will probably overcome the other systems, will probably dominate the world.

He is right.

In this competition of economic systems, what do we see today?

Let us see what Mr. Mark Sullivan says:

In the Communist country, Russia, we see every government official striving desperately to make his country's system succeed. With passionate devotion he strives to make communism work. If he fails in energy or in faith, he is a traitor, and is shot. Men are executed, groups of them, for mere lack of diligence or zeal, which is regarded as sabotage.

In Russia, with everyone striving for the success of the Government, those who do not succeed are shot.

Mr. Sullivan continues:

In the Fascist countries—more comprehensively the Nazi-Fascist countries, Germany and Italy—we see the same. Every government official believes passionately in his country's system, drives himself with high dedication to make it work, to make it a success. If he fails in diligence he is sent to a concentration camp. If his failure goes to the extent of willful sabotage he would be shot as a traitor.

But turn to the leading democratic-capitalist country. In the United States what do we see? In the body of our Government officials, those in the level well toward the top, the level from which comes much of the spirit of the whole, what do we find?

We find many, a majority, who believe in our American system, believe in it in a tepid, taken-for-granted way.

That is all.

We find some who believe in our system with emotional fervor, a spirit born of realization that our system is in peril. These strive with real zeal to make our system work.

I am one of those, Mr. President, who believe that our system is dangerously imperiled.

Mr. Sullivan continues:

It is these officials who recognize the frictions and obstacles, governmental and otherwise, which tend to make the functioning of our system difficult or impossible. They try earnestly to get these obstacles removed.

MANY HALF-HEARTED WORKERS IN UNITED STATES

We see such men among our Government officials, and we see the larger group of men who, taking the American system for granted, assuming calmly that it will always be, do their work faithfully but calmly.

Millions of Americans are at this hour proceeding, as Mr. Sullivan says, calmly, undisturbed, believing that it will always be as it was when our Government was founded by our forefathers, but one of these days they will wake up to find that they are under the rule of Communists.

We see those. But we see something else.

If the whole body of American Government officials, below the highest but above the mass, the level from which initiative is supposed to be supplied and which should give color and spirit to the whole—if that level of Government service were carefully surveyed, we would find many officials who fall into one or another of the following categories:

1. Persons who are Communists—

He is referring to persons now employed by our Government. By the way, I may remark that if some of the things that take place in this country were to take place in Germany or Italy or Russia or even England, for that matter, or France, they would not be tolerated for a moment.

The No. 1 classification is:

1. Persons who are Communists or sympathize with Communist philosophy or look with tolerance on Communist activity, some of whom hold important positions in Federal agencies and projects.

2. A class who, sincerely disavowing communism, or even socialism, nevertheless wish to bring about in America something which one of this group describes as "twentieth century collectivism." Any form of collectivism would be, necessarily, such a handicapping of individualism that the latter would die.

3. A class whose attitude toward the American system is one of cynicism, or lackadaisical indifference. With intellectual detachment, they speculate on whether the American system will survive.

TEST OF SUCCESS IS ECONOMIC

As he said in the opening paragraph:

The aggregate of the groups enumerated here, it is tenable to say, prevails in influence over those who work with affirmative zeal to preserve the American system.

Let the reader ask himself: In a world competition in which the American system is supported by some only half-heartedly and in which the Communist and Nazi-Fascist systems are manned and supported by persons having fanatic zeal—in such a competition, can we have complete confidence that our system will win the competition?

That is the question. He concludes by saying:

The test of success is economic. Specifically, the test at this moment is whether America gets business recovery. But if America loses the competition, it loses much more than its economic system. We would lose our democratic institutions of government, with the individual rights and liberties they provide. And we would lose our whole spiritual life. We would lose not merely freedom of religion but religion itself. For if either of the other philosophies dominates the world, it will insist that religion be supplanted by worship of state or of race.

Mr. President, I desire now to bring to the attention of the Senate an editorial from the Evening Journal and New York American of Tuesday, May 9, 1939. The editorial is headed "Real Neutrality Is Only Path of Peace for America," and it reads:

The address of former Secretary of State Bainbridge Colby on neutrality before the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations is a veritable textbook for all Americans of today.

I quite agree with that statement. As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I had the pleasure and the honor of listening to Mr. Colby when he testified before the committee on May 4, according to my recollection. So thoroughly impressed was I by his statements of fact that yesterday I sought permission of the Senate to have published in the Appendix of the RECORD his statement before the committee. It has been published and may be found in yesterday's RECORD, which is on the desks of Senators. It will be recalled that Mr. Bainbridge Colby was Secretary of State under the administration of Woodrow Wilson.

The editorial continues:

It is the product of the matured judgment of a statesman, a diplomatist and a man who knows at first hand the damage the last war wrought to our well-being.

Mr. Colby did the country an added service when he drew from the files of our state papers the following masterly definition of what constitutes our proper position in a war, of Secretary of State John Hay, March 10, 1904, on the occasion of the breaking out of war between Japan and Russia:

"All officials, civil, military, and naval, are hereby directed not only to observe the President's proclamation of neutrality in the pending war between Russia and Japan, but also to abstain from either action or speech which can legitimately cause irritation to either of the combatants.

"A war inevitably increases and inflames the susceptibilities of the combatants to anything in the nature of an injury or slight by outsiders.

"It is always unfortunate to bring Old World antipathies or jealousies into our life, or by speech or conduct to incite anger and resentment toward our Nation in friendly foreign lands; but in a Government employee, whose official position makes him in some sense the representative of the people, the mischief of such actions is greatly increased."

Contrast this sound, traditional American position of the Secretary of State of Theodore Roosevelt and the position of the Secretary of State of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the President himself in the present European crisis.

It is the difference between real neutrality and a bogus neutrality, between a soothing attitude and a belligerent attitude, which by "notes" and threats inflames the very passions that the administration clumsily seeks to calm.

Moreover, other people than public officials and other instruments and agencies than Government agencies, if utterly intemperate, can also do great harm not only to this country but to themselves, not only to the American people but to their own kin and kind, by inciting to violence of sentiment if not of deed.

I wish to call particular attention of the Members of the Senate to this paragraph:

Obviously, many Fascists claim to be pro-American merely because they are anti-Communist, and many Communists masquerade as true Americans because they are anti-Fascist.

In other words, Mr. President, there is going on in this country today a fight between the Communists and the Fascists; the battle of the "isms" of the world has been transferred from Spain to the soil of the United States of America. The editorial continues:

These pretenders are not Americans at all.

They are aliens indulging in their alien hatreds and conflicts and trying to impose these bitter alien antagonisms on our peaceful people.

These propagandists, alien in spirit, are not pro-American or pro-liberal in any true respect.

They are anti-American, antidemocratic.

They are opposed to one form of tyranny but in favor of another.

They are against their enemies, not for the friends and the hosts of America—not for American institutions.

They abuse American liberties; they sacrifice American interests to their own prejudices; they violate American ideals of peace and isolation and of the wise and just enjoyment of our American privileges.

The mask of Americanism should be torn from the faces of such masqueraders, and they should stand revealed for what they actually are—alien agitators.

Alien agitators. Mr. President, I am doing my best by attempting to secure the enactment of legislation to rid this country of them. Until the Congress passes laws that will bring about the mandatory deportation of alien agitators, present chaotic conditions in the United States will continue.

Mr. Colby speaks of "the fashion which became prevalent after the Great War to encourage grandiose schemes for the creation and preservation of peace."

But, as Mr. Colby logically points out, this interference with the ages-long war tendencies of European nations, however well meant, is the very thing that will put us into war, for in the family rows of Europe the United States is now a third-party meddler.

Even efforts for pacification in matters that do not concern us may be looked on as "intervention," and, therefore, may be construed as an act of war, for, as Mr. Colby again points out, the administration has not been impartial in its effort to promote peace in Europe, but has, by inference, if not directly, already named the aggressor nations.

"The discretion already vested in the President under the Neutrality Act is excessive and dangerous. Instead of enlarging the discretion of the President I think it would be a wise step toward preserving the constitutional distribution of power to reaffirm congressional control of this great issue of war and to devise legislation to safeguard it.

"The unchecked discretion of a single man is not a sufficient guaranty of the Nation's peace amid the pitfalls of discretionary tariffs, embargoes, restrictions, options, and permission, such as are contained in some of the measures proposed.

This is particularly true of the Thomas amendment to the Neutrality Act, which allows the President to name an aggressor nation, even though we have no personal grievance against that nation.

That is tantamount to dictatorship and is in contravention, as Mr. Colby says, of the very spirit of our institutions.

The "will to keep out of war" is our salvation at present.

But I may add that whether or not we shall be able to keep out of war I am now unable to state because so much hatred is being engendered throughout the world by propaganda that shortly we may find ourselves in the same position that we were in prior to our entrance into the World War on April 6, 1917.

The "will to keep out of war" is our salvation at present.

That will lies in the hearts of the people and in their representatives, the Congress of the United States.

As Mr. Colby urges in his contained and reasoned speech, only three things are necessary to keep us out of Europe and its perpetual blood shambles:

1. Absolute neutrality as outlined by John Hay.

2. The war-making power must never slip from the hands of Congress.

3. The will of the people must always be ascertained, even by Congress, before we ever embark on a foreign war.

The destiny of the American people shall never pass into French, English, or Russian hands.

It must remain in the hands and hearts of our own people, who have repeatedly said: "Isolation, yes; defense, yes; but no participation in foreign wars."

Mr. President, in order that my colleagues may know the injustice done to me as the result of the articles in the columns of the Merry-Go-Round, charging left-handedly that I am in the pay of the Nazi government or the representatives of Germany, I desire to read one of a great many letters which I have received.

I have a letter here from one doctor, and I have a telegram from a group. This letter is from Dr. Carl W. Sawyer, White Oaks Farm, Marion, Ohio.

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of April 29, 1939, containing an article on the Migration of Members of the Medical Profession From Europe Into the United States, and asking me to write to the Senators and Members of Congress in this State asking them to approve your actions, I wish to reply that under present circumstances it is not possible for me to do that.

I do not know Dr. Sawyer. I sent him a speech that I made in regard to the invasion of professional men from Europe who were taking the practice of physicians in this country.

He continues:

Bob Allen and Drew Pearson, in the Washington Merry-Go-Round of May 7, 1939, state that the student-body publication of the University of North Carolina has attacked your Americanism and that they claim that you are a Fascist.

Evidently the writer of this letter reads the Merry-Go-Round columns.

Naturally, I would be loath to discuss or ask support for any measure dealing with any foreign-relation subject which you might present until sufficient evidence had been brought forth to prove that you were a true American and not allied with foreign organizations.

All of which goes to prove that those who read the columns of Allen and Pearson believe what they say to be the truth; but Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State, says they tell the truth only one-fourth of the time, and one-fourth of the truth only two-thirds of the time. I ask Dr. Sawyer to say whether or not they are telling the truth by listening to the words of Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State of the United States of America.

On the other hand, I happened to pick up this morning one of a number of telegrams on my desk in regard to my bill. This telegram is from La Fayette, Ind., under date of May 10:

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our medical society, 90 strong, solidly back of you, greatly appreciate your loyalty to our profession and devotion to our country. Are writing our Senators and Representatives to support your bill in its entirety.

This telegram is signed by Dr. J. W. Shaffer, chairman of the legislative committee, I assume, of the Medical Society of La Fayette, Ind.

Mr. President, I have here from my State of North Carolina several letters to which are attached the Merry-Go-Round column, in which I have been sandwiched in between all of this propaganda about the Nazis and the German Government, and so forth. I desire to read into the RECORD a letter I received the other day, before I knew I was going to talk on this matter. It is from Duke University, Durham, N. C., from Dr. J. Douglass Poteat:

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: The enclosed clipping appeared in the Durham Sun yesterday afternoon.

The clipping is, The Merry-Go-Round.

It is, of course, only the latest of a series of public references to your espousal of a political and social ideal which is the denial of the democracy which in your campaign for election to the Senate you so heartily proclaimed. In the face of these repeated references you have remained strangely silent.

I had to speak, Senators. I could not remain silent any longer when these enemies were telling the American people left-handedly, backhandedly, underhandedly, absolute falsehoods, which I am throwing back into their laps. If the American people who read the column would believe these enemies let them bring the proof. I dare them. I defy them.

Your only utterances which I have seen have served in fact to lend support to their validity.

For weeks I have gone along with this sort of thing. I talked to friends of mine, and they said, "Do not get into an argument with a newspaper man. Those fellows have a million readers a day. They will never say anything good about you, and the people who read their column will never see your denial of it, and half the people will believe it."

As a public servant representing the people of North Carolina and of the United States in the country's highest legislative hall, you have no right to ask that citizens back your hand without seeing what's in it. The people have a stake in that hand, and they have a right to know what you have in it and how you propose to play it.

In this clipping the authors of the Merry-Go-Round speak of some "mysterious financial backing." I repeat that the "mysterious financial backing" was the cost of a few thousand copies of the American Vindicator. I should like to show you, Mr. President, all that has been spent to date, and I should like further to show you that I have the backing of millions of the American people. I wish to say again that the American people are waking up to the fact that this country is "lousy" with propagandists; and we are coming to a showdown between the 100-percent Americans and those who are against America.

It seems to me (and to not a few others whom I have heard express themselves) that in the face of these charges which seriously question your fundamental loyalties, there is an obligation that you make your position unequivocally clear. I should greatly appreciate your letting me know what that position is.

Mr. President, my friends said that I must take the floor and deny these vicious, malicious untruths. The unfortunate feature is that the statements and allegations, underhanded, left-handed, and malicious, having been made, millions who read that column will believe them and only the 75,000 who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will ever see my denial. That is the only source of denial I have. But at least I have had the opportunity, thank God, to put myself on record and defy Pearson and Allen to prove what they have alleged. It will be remembered that they made those left-handed attacks not only against the Secretary of State but against the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

I have not answered Dr. Sawyer's letter. I shall send him a copy of today's RECORD, so that he may read my answer.

I received a letter from Mr. Roger Gant, a gentleman of very high character in North Carolina. I am sorry I have not the letter he wrote me. When I answered it I returned his letter to him, because in my answer I asked him to do me the favor of asking the editor of the Burlington Times-News to publish my entire answer in the columns of his newspaper.

I wrote Mr. Gant on May 8 as follows:

MAY 8, 1939.

Mr. ROGER GANT,
Care Glen Raven Cotton Mills, Glen Raven, N. C.

MY DEAR MR. GANT: I thank you so much for your letter of May 5 which I found awaiting me here at the office this morning, and am hastening a response by the earliest possible post.

I want to assure you of my appreciation of your having sent to me clipping from the Burlington (N. C.) Daily Times-News, issue of Thursday, May 4, 1939, in the form of an editorial entitled "Rambunctious Reynolds," which editorial I have read very carefully.

May I say that the editor of that newspaper has done me a very serious injustice. He would have you believe that I am pro-Nazi or pro-Fascist, when the truth of the matter is I am only pro-American.

As you have probably observed through the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from time to time, I have interested myself actively upon the floor of the Senate in an earnest endeavor to do my part toward keeping this country out of any foreign entanglements or embroilments that might lead us into another war. I believe that I can say without hesitation that any man who can read or write knows that this country today is being flooded with propaganda which would lead us into entanglements and eventually into war to again save the democracies of England and France. Our last participation in the World War, although brief, has to date cost this Nation more than $60,000,000,000, about sixty-eight billions, and before we will have liquidated finally the obligations incurred during that brief participation the taxpayers of America will have been called upon to pay around the one hundred billion mark. Today our veterans' hospitals are filled with ex-service men of the World War, and many thousands who are endeavoring to gain admission to these respective veterans' hospitals are denied admission on account of the fact that space is limited.

I should dislike very much to see England and France weakened but I am not willing to permit the United States to join forces with Great Britain, France, and perhaps the Soviet Union for the purpose of saving the democracy of those three countries at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States of America.

I have recognized British and French propaganda in this country and I have from time to time attacked those two nations on the ground that they are attempting to lead us into another massacre. I have repeatedly stated that we should attend to our own problems here at home and should cease giving so much time and attention to the troubles of those abroad, and because of these activities on my part to keep my country out of war I have been branded as a Fascist or a Nazi, and this is furthest from the truth.

Yes, I did organize the Vindicators' Association, Inc., of which I am the president. I have merely attempted to band together the Americans for the purpose of preserving America for Americans, and in so doing I am announcing by editorial in the next issue of the Vindicator, May issue, which will be off the press this week, that I am opposed to nazi-ism, fascism, communism, and all "isms," and that there is room in the United States today only for Americanism.

Because I have attacked Britain and France on the grounds that they are attempting to get us into war, and because I am condemning communism, I have been attacked and accused of being a Fascist or Nazi.

The Vindicator had its financial beginning by way of six or seven hundred dollars which I personally advanced to get it organized, and now it is carrying its own burden financially exclusively by way of the $1 per year subscriptions which we obtain for the Vindicator. It is published from month to month, and under separate cover I am asking my secretary to provide you with a copy of this paper, and I respectfully request you to read every line of it very carefully.

I asked him to read every line of it carefully, because Pearson and Allen referred to my paper as a Fascist weekly. Again I wish to say that I am sending every Member of the Senate and every Member of the House of Representatives the April issue and the May issue, and, in justice to myself, I ask every one of my colleagues to read every single line of them. I continue reading:

The Vindicators' Association, Inc., has objectives. They follow:
1. Keep America out of war.
2. Register and fingerprint all aliens.
3. Stop all immigration for the next 10 years.
4. Deport all criminal and undesirable aliens.
5. Banish all foreign "isms"—nazi-ism, fascism, and communism.

If that isn't a real 100-percent American program, I should like to hear of any objections. Well, there are objections. There are objections by minority groups in this country who would have us admit 20,000 refugee children from Germany—

I mention that because the Communist paper, which is constantly attacking me, puts that in the headlines. The Communists are attacking me because I do not see eye to eye with some of my colleagues upon the subject. They have the same right to reason in the matter that I have. I continue reading:

There are objections by minority groups in this country who would have us admit 20,000 refugee children from Germany; who would have us open wide the gates of immigration so that millions from abroad might enter here and usurp jobs which rightly belong to American citizens; and I am being persecuted by those who would have us provide security, collective security, that is to say, by joining Great Britain and France and perhaps Soviet Russia, because we learn through the columns of the press that Great Britain is doing her best to secure an alliance, military or otherwise, with Soviet Russia. I am opposed to uniforming American sons and arming them for the purpose of fighting side by side with the soldiers of Communist Russia, and I am sure that you would likewise oppose any such suggestion.

In particular reference to the editorial heretofore mentioned, I quote: "The Washington Merry-Go-Round, which steps on many toes, but never yet has had a suit for libel against it to stick, comes out with an open hint that the Vindicator, 'Fascist weekly recently launched by Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, with mysterious financial backing,' is financed by Nazi money. The charge is made that German-American Bund members of this country are urged by their higher-ups to subscribe to the publication and to distribute it in their campaign of propaganda to 'smear democracy.'" This is an absolute falsehood. Personally, I don't know a single member of the bund. I have never talked with any of them or corresponded with any of them to my knowledge, and further, to my knowledge the Vindicators' Association has never solicited a subscription from any member of the bund. This is just more propaganda for the purpose of smearing me on account of my attitude toward the administration's so-called foreign policy, which so-called foreign policy has been severely criticized from time to time as you have no doubt noted through the columns of the press.

I am for America for Americans alone. I am against any change in the form of government which we now enjoy. I am bitterly opposed to any minority groups in this country which stand for anything except 100-percent Americanism. I am against nazi-ism, fascism, and communism, as heretofore related. I deplore the persecution of the minorities in German territory and in Italian territory.

With assurances of my highest esteem and trusting that you will favor me by handing this letter to the editor of the Burlington newspaper with the request that he publish same in full, together with your letter to me under date of May 5, I beg to remain,

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, if I have ever seen a member of the bund in my life to know who he was and to recognize him, I am not aware of it. I have never seen or talked to or corresponded with a member of the bund to my knowledge. Many people write to us and want to subscribe to the American Vindicator. They say that it is really the only 100-percent American publication they have seen in the country, and they wish it were a daily instead of a monthly. We will accept a subscription from anyone, whether he is white or whether he is black, whether male or female, whether a Republican or a Democrat, whether a Communist, a Fascist, or a Nazi, a Chinaman, or what not.

When a subscription is sent to the Washington Post or to the Washington Times-Herald do the managers write back and say, "Tell us whether you are white or black, your age, whether you are Democratic or Republican, whether you are Catholic or Protestant. Tell us what your business is, and whether you are a Communist or a Nazi"? Certainly not. Perhaps we have had letters from persons who are members of the bund, but if we have, I do not know it, and no one in my organization knows it; and to my knowledge we have never written anyone concerning whom we had the information that they were members of any foreign "ism" or organization asking him to distribute copies. But those who are desirous of destroying us and those who are working with the group which wants to destroy the ones who are working for the American people and the American Government will grab at anything in order to bring about such destruction.

I have before me the letter which I received from Dr. Poteat, of Duke University. I shall now read my answer to Dr. Poteat:

MAY 8, 1939.

Mr. J. DOUGLAS POTEAT,
Care of School of Law, Duke University, Durham, N. C.

MY DEAR MR. POTEAT: I thank you very much for your letter of May 5, contents of which I have noted carefully.

I am very happy that you wrote me in reference to this matter, and I am pleased indeed to have the opportunity of responding so promptly. You enclosed a clipping from the Durham paper entitled "Nazi Bunds Under Orders to Smear United States Democracy," this article by Messrs. Pearson and Allen.

I have read this article, and I note particularly the paragraph which you had in mind, of course, when you wrote me. This paragraph reads as follows: "Bund members are urged to subscribe to and distribute copies of the Vindicator, Fascist weekly, recently launched by Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, with mysterious financial backing." If this weren't such a serious charge it would really be laughable. Fact is, I do not know personally a single member of the bund, nor have I personally ever seen a member of the bund. I was informed last Saturday, when I spoke in New York at the Astor Hotel, under the auspices of the American Defense Society, that Fritz Kuhn, who is the head of the bund, was among those present at the luncheon, but he was not pointed out to me, and if I saw him I didn't recognize him, and if I ran into him today I wouldn't know him.

Not to my knowledge have I ever written a single person who belongs to the bund in regard to the Vindicator. Of course, in soliciting subscriptions we have written a great many people who had written me, and everyone who wrote me in support of my objectives of the Vindicators was supplied with a copy of the April issue of the American Vindicator, together with the request that they subscribe and secure other subscriptions, but if any of these people to whom letters have been sent were members of the bund it was unknown to me or anyone connected with the organization itself, so that paragraph above referred to in regard to myself is without foundation of fact or truth. Just why the authors of this column should refer to the American Vindicator as a Fascist weekly is beyond my comprehension, because, in my opinion and the opinion of a great many people, this paper is an all-American publication, serving as the official organ of the Vindicators' Association, Inc. The Vindicators have as their five objectives the following:

1. Keep America out of war.
2. Register and fingerprint all aliens in the United States.
3 Stop all immigration for the next 10 years, or until such time as the millions of Americans now unemployed have been provided with employment.
4. Deport all alien criminals and undesirables.
5. Banish all "isms"—communism, nazi-ism, and fascism.

If that isn't an all-American program, I have never heard of one, and in order, my dear Mr. Poteat, that you may be properly informed in reference to the Vindicators, I am asking Miss Hoke, who takes this letter, to mail you, under separate cover, a copy of the April issue, and after you have read it I should like very much to have your ideas as to whether or not there is anything Fascist about it. I am against fascism, nazi-ism, and communism, and all "isms" foreign to the American form of government.

With assurances of my highest esteem, and again thanking you for having written me, I beg to be,

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

I merely bring this to the attention of the Members of the Senate in order that they may know that I have been done a very grave and great injustice, not only in my State, but throughout the entire Nation, in that I have been virtually charged with being a traitor. I repeat that if trying to do what one can best do in the small way that I have done it is to be a traitor, then I am happy to be labeled a traitor.

In regard to the bund, let me say, Mr. President, that from time to time I make speeches over the country. I have made a number of speeches. I am going to refer only to speeches I have made of recent date. I was invited by the Junior Order of American Mechanics to deliver a patriotic address upon Americanism at Newark, N. J., about 2 weeks ago, on a Saturday night, in a hotel where they were holding their annual State convention.

Lest some Senators may never have heard of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, I may advise them that it is one of the oldest patriotic organizations in America. It is over half a century old. The headquarters are in one of the most historic cities of America—Philadelphia. Its membership consists of approximately 450,000 paid-up patriotic Americans. They believe that an American flag should wave above every schoolhouse in the United States. They believe that the Bible, which is so despised by Stalin and others, should be in every home and in every schoolhouse of the United States. They believe that every child in America should be provided with an education at the expense of the taxpayers. In other words, they believe that the child of the poorest family should be provided the same educational opportunities that are provided the children of the richer families. That is the one thing which has made America the greatest country in all the world. Education of the masses in America has made us the strongest nation in the world; for, as we know, the strength of a nation is measured only by its intelligence, and not by its great numbers, as might be illustrated by bringing to the attention of the Senate the 450,000,000 people of China fighting against about 70,000,000 Japanese.

I went to Newark to make a speech under the auspices of the Junior Order of American Mechanics as the result of a suggestion made to the State councilor by Mr. James L. Wilmeth, who is the national secretary. When these patriots of New Jersey assembled there, the hotel in which I was speaking, and because I was speaking, was picketed by Communists, who walked up and down and distributed literature and said that I should not speak there, that I was opposed to communism. They had parades there. I think it is sad to contemplate that even today there are times when an American citizen is not permitted to express his views upon patriotism, to praise his flag, and to praise his country without being picketed by those who are alien-minded to our form of government.

The next time I spoke was, as I recall, last Friday in the city of New York. I received an invitation to go there from an incorporated society known as the American Defense Society. I do not know how many members the organization has. I know it is a very reputable organization, composed purely of Americans who are extremely desirous of keeping America out of war; and I have been told that most of its members are mothers who have sons of such an age that they would be subject to the draft in case something should happen and we were dragged into war.

I spoke for about an hour and a half. During 30 minutes I spoke over the radio in a national hook-up. I have before me a copy of my speech. Tomorrow I shall ask that it be printed in the RECORD. When I arrived at the hall, which I think was on the eighth floor of the Hotel Astor, a number of newspapermen were there, and one of them said, "Say, do you know this fellow Fritz Kuhn is here?" I said, "No. That is all right. I wish the world could hear my speech today on Americanism." I wish Hitler could have heard it; I wish Mussolini could have heard it; I wish every person within the confines of the United States who believes we should have some other form of government could have heard it.

So I took my seat at the banquet table. I was introduced by a Major Cross, former commander of the American Legion in the State of New York, who is now an assistant attorney general of the State of New York. I spoke for about an hour and a quarter or an hour and a half. I imagine I spoke for about an hour after I went off the radio.

After I had concluded, the Communist Sunday Worker published an article with reference to my speech. The Communists have both a Daily Worker and a Sunday Worker. They not only work every day in the week, but they work on Sunday. They not only work every day in the week and on Sunday, but they work night and day, and, believe it or not, they are making tremendous progress. They have succeeded in putting the Nazis and the Fascists out in front. They have succeeded in making the American people hate Hitler and Mussolini, the Nazis and the Fascists, so much so that we never hear anything more about communism. Communists are snickering up their sleeves because while we are asleep they are working.

This is what the Sunday Worker said:

Nazi bund cheers Senator REYNOLDS.

If I should see Fritz Kuhn in the middle of the street, I would not know him. When I was at the banquet I was not sufficiently interested in him to ask that he be pointed out to me. The meeting was open. So far as I know, anybody could come who would pay the cover charge. According to the National Defense Society's Banner, anybody could come. It did not make any difference whether he was a Communist, Nazi, Republican, Democrat, Independent, male, or female. Even an alien could have gone if he had the money. So the Communist Sunday Worker, which is after me every day, says:

Nazi bund cheers Senator REYNOLDS.

I did not invite Fritz Kuhn to be present. I do not know the man. I have never received a letter from the man. I have never spoken to him. I know nothing about him. But the Communists would have their reading public believe that he is a bosom friend of mine, and that I had invited him to be present. That is propaganda. Listen to what the Sunday Worker says:

Senator REYNOLDS "tickled to death" to see Fritz Kuhn in place of honor at American Defense Society luncheon.

"Tickled to death!" It will be noticed that that expression is in quotations. When I was told Kuhn was present, I said, "That is all right. I wish the world were here." I repeat that I wish Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, and everyone else could have been present, particularly Stalin, because in my address I think I said that in addition to stopping Hitler and Mussolini we ought to stop Stalin. Perhaps he will be stopped.

The article continues:

United States Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS of North Carolina, outspoken admirer of Adolf Hitler—

I never mentioned Hitler. It will be noted from every letter I have brought to the attention of the Senate that I have stated that I am against any such form of government. In every word in my newspaper which I have brought to the attention of the Senate I have denounced that form of government.

The article continues:

United States Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS of North Carolina, outspoken admirer of Adolf Hitler, declared here yesterday that he would "filibuster until the cows come home" to block passage of legislation to permit the children of victims of Nazi aggression from entering America.

I did say that, and that is what the Communists are sore about. I intend to vote against the bill. I intend to speak against it. I have received thousands upon thousands of letters from people, some of them even writing a prayer that the bill will be defeated, and stating that their own sons and daughters have never been provided employment, and their own children cannot find work. At that meeting I said, "My heart goes out in sympathy to little children, more so to orphans than refugees. We would like to take them into our arms, but my first duty is to my country."

Some of my colleagues, including the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] do not see eye-to-eye with me on that question. Nevertheless, I do not condemn the Senator from Utah because the Senator from Utah believes we ought to take in these children. On the other hand, I believe we ought not to take them in, because I think we ought to take care of our own children first.

The article continues:

The Senate's spokesmen for the Fascist axis made this declaration at a luncheon at Hotel Astor, given by the American Defense Society, after declaring to reporters in the lobby he was "tickled to death" to know that Fritz Kuhn, fuehrer of the Nazi-American Bund, had a place of honor in his audience.

I did not say any such thing, and the Communists are simply telling a falsehood.

REYNOLDS' tirade against aliens, democracy, Stalin, W. P. A., and defense appropriations was delivered to an audience which included fascism's elite in America.

Mr. President, when I mentioned the W. P. A., I mentioned the unfortunate men and women upon W. P. A. I voted for every W. P. A. appropriation. I have stood liberally by my President on every single proposal for the benefit of the unemployed in America. I did not vote for the $150,000,000 appropriation, because I thought the W. P. A. could probably get along with $100,000,000, and that that amount would be sufficient until after an investigation had been made. I have voted for everything that was possible for the farmers. I have voted for the unfortunate people of my land. I voted for labor, organized and unorganized. I propose to continue to do so. That is not all. I voted for a tremendous national-defense appropriation to appease the American people, who were afraid that Mussolini and Hitler were coming over here next week to destroy them. I intend to vote to appease the appetites of our unfortunate people; and I invite those who say I have not done everything in the world that I could do for the poor and for the laboring men of this country merely to look at my record.

It was preceded by an introduction by Jeremiah Cross, storm-troop-minded—

I do not know what is responsible for that expression. I had never met Mr. Cross until the day I was seated at the luncheon table—

Jeremiah Cross, storm-troop-minded former commander of the American Legion in New York, and at present assistant State attorney general.

When I read that, I was somewhat exercised. I thought perhaps Mr. Cross was connected with the bund. I had never met Mr. Cross until I took my seat at the table and was introduced to him. I was told that he was a former commander of the American Legion.

Yesterday afternoon I was walking downstairs on my way to a committee room and I met Mr. John Thomas Taylor, who is the legislative representative of the American Legion in Washington. Many Senators know him. I said: "John, tell me, do you know a Major Cross, who was a former commander of the American Legion in New York State?"

He said: "Certainly. There is no man of better character in America. He is now assistant attorney general of the State of New York. Why do you ask?"

I said that Major Cross had introduced me at a luncheon, and that the Communist newspaper called him a storm-troop-minded former commander of the American Legion, and I wanted to know what I had gotten into. Mr. Taylor said: "There is no finer man in America. He is 100 percent American. He is one of the most active men in the American Legion, and he is fighting for the same thing for which you are fighting."

Kuhn lends a hand.

In his introduction Cross made an unconvincing disclaimer of Kuhn's presence in the audience, but the Hitler's United States branch office manager blew this sky high after the luncheon, when he told reporters he liked Senator REYNOLDS' speech "very much."

That is what the Communist newspaper stated Kuhn had said. He liked my speech "very much."

"I underline every word he said," Kuhn declared.

As REYNOLDS spoke, Kuhn listened attentively from table No. 2, immediately in front of the speakers' table. Sitting with him were nine other members of nazidom's high command in America. They included James Wheeler-Hill, national secretary of the bund; Richard J. Mettin (in whose name the table was reserved), national bund treasurer; G. Wilhelm Kunze, national relations director of the bund; and Gustave J. Elmer, national organizer, and four bund office assistants.

Cross' disclaimer of Kuhn's presence was made doubly unconvincing because of the distribution of the following literature at the luncheon:

1. A handbill advertising "grand opening exercises" to be held at Camp Siegfried on May 21.

What that is, I do not know; I never heard of it.

2. Father Coughlin's Social Justice.

I have heard of that and read it.

3. The Vindicator, Senator REYNOLDS' openly Fascist sheet, published in North Carolina.

PRAISES HOOVER AIDE

Although Senator REYNOLDS' tirade against aliens lasted for the better part of an hour and a half, he put forward his theme at the outset: A plea for complete isolation for America. Kuhn, whose cue from Cross' introduction was to keep quiet, immediately forgot himself and burst into applause.

"I see sitting not far from this festive board," said the pro-Nazi Senator—

I am the "pro-Nazi" Senator, declared so to be by the Merry-Go-Round and by this Communist publication.

"I see sitting not far from this festive board," said the pro-Nazi Senator, "the Honorable Bainbridge Colby." He praised Colby, former President Hoover's Assistant Secretary of State, for his testimony in behalf of complete American isolation.

I thought that Bainbridge Colby was Secretary of State in the Cabinet of Woodrow Wilson. That was my recollection, but this Communist newspaper says that he was in the Cabinet of President Hoover.

A friend of the Senator's whispered to newspapermen later that REYNOLDS was having 300,000 copies of Colby's speech printed to be mailed to "professionals" at the Government's expense. It was Colby who virtually invited Hitler to invade Latin America.

I never heard of such a thing as that. Colby was Secretary of State under Wilson, was he not, I will ask the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GEORGE. He was.

Mr. REYNOLDS. This Communist newspaper says he was Assistant Secretary under President Hoover. That was years ago, before Hitler was ever heard of, was it not?

Mr. GEORGE. It was.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And this Communist newspaper says that Colby invited Hitler to invade Latin America.

REYNOLDS, who has voted against all W. P. A. appropriations—

I have voted for all W. P. A. appropriations; I have voted for every one of them. I failed to vote for the additional $50,000,000, but I will again state that if our President says that our people are suffering I am going to vote the necessary funds, because so long as we can vote billions of dollars for armament we can afford to provide money to appease the hunger of the people of America. I put America on guard to that effect. This Communist publication is just about as accurate as Pearson and Allen; they must be comrades—

REYNOLDS, who has voted against all W. P. A. appropriations, shed crocodile tears for the "millions of Christian Americans who are walking the streets without jobs" and was passionately applauded by the well-fed and well-dressed audience, including a portly white Russian with a double-barreled mustache.

I did not see that gentleman.

From the press table the Senator's sweating, ruddy face, twisting with feigned emotion, bobbed about above the beefy shoulders of Fritz Kuhn, who sat between the speaker's table and reporters.

"I wish the American people might be provided with sleeping powders so that they might not hear all this talk of war," the Senator said, chiding newspapers for printing "so much" foreign news.

I think that what is upsetting our people today and the reason why we cannot get down to hardtack and work is that we have got the war jitters. We are thinking so much about what is going on elsewhere in the world that we cannot get down to business here. I think the newspapers would do the American people a great service if they would not print so much of foreign news.

"I wish the American people would quit talking about war. In my humble opinion those who are injuring America are those who are frightening the American people.

"I regret that while the press seems to be against the President on domestic collective security, it supports him on collective security in foreign affairs."

There are so many mistakes in this article that it would take me some time to read all the article and to cover the mistakes. The hour is growing late, and I will merely hand the article to the Official Reporter and ask unanimous consent that it all be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Before doing that, however, I will refer to one more statement, as follows:

In attacking Senator WAGNER'S resolution to open America's doors to 20,000 child victims of Hitler, REYNOLDS referred to his "good friend, BOB WAGNER."

I told the Senate about that earlier today. I do not think I have a better friend in the Senate than the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The fact that he believes other than I do upon this subject is no reason why I should hate him. I have respect for his opinions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article to which the Senator has referred will be printed entire in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Sunday Worker of May 7, 1939]

NAZI BUND CHEERS SENATOR REYNOLDS; RAPS REFUGEE PLAN—SENATOR REYNOLDS "TICKLED TO DEATH" TO SEE FRITZ KUHN IN PLACE OF HONOR AT AMERICAN DEFENSE SOCIETY LUNCHEON

(By Ernest Moorer)

United States Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, outspoken admirer of Adolf Hitler, declared here yesterday that he would "filibuster until the cows come home" to block passage of legislation to permit the children of victims of Nazi aggression from entering America.

The Senate's spokesman for the Fascist axis made this declaration at a luncheon at Hotel Astor given by the American Defense Society after declaring to reporters in the lobby that he "was tickled to death" to know that Fritz Kuhn, fuehrer of the Nazi-American Bund, had a place of honor in his audience.

REYNOLDS' tirade against aliens, democracy, Stalin, W. P. A., and defense appropriations was delivered to an audience which included fascism's elite in America. It was preceded by an introduction by Jeremiah Cross, storm-troop-minded former commander of the American Legion in New York and at present assistant State attorney general.

KUHN LENDS A HAND

In his introduction Cross made an unconvincing disclaimer of Kuhn's presence in the audience, but Hitler's United States branch office manager blew this sky high after the luncheon when we told reporters he liked Senator REYNOLD'S speech "very much."

"I underline every word he said," Kuhn declared.

As REYNOLDS spoke, Kuhn listened attentively from table No. 2, immediately in front of the speakers' table. Sitting with him were nine other members of nazidom's high command in America. They included James Wheeler-Hill, national secretary of the bund; Richard J. Mettin (in whose name the table was reserved), national bund treasurer; G. Wilhelm Kunze, national relations director of the bund; and Gustave J. Elmer, national organizer, and four bund office assistants.

Cross' disclaimer of Kuhn's presence was made doubly unconvincing because of the distribution of the following literature at the luncheon:

1. A handbill advertising "grand opening exercises" to be held at Camp Siegfried on May 21.
2. Father Coughlin's Social Justice.
3. The Vindicator, Senator REYNOLDS' openly Fascist sheet published in North Carolina.

PRAISES HOOVER AIDE

Although Senator REYNOLDS' tirade against "aliens" lasted for the better part of an hour and a half he put forward his theme at the outset: A plea for complete isolation for America. Kuhn, whose cue from Cross' introduction was to keep quiet, immediately forgot himself and burst into applause.

"I see sitting not far from this festive board," said the pro-Nazi Senator, "the Honorable Bainbridge Colby." He praised Colby, former President Hoover's assistant Secretary of State, for his testimony in behalf of complete American isolation. A friend of the Senator's whispered to newspapermen later that REYNOLDS was having 300,000 copies of Colby's speech printed to be mailed to "professionals" at the Government's expense. It was Colby who virtually invited Hitler to invade Latin America.

REYNOLDS, who has voted against all W. P. A. appropriations, shed crocodile tears for "the millions of Christian Americans who are walking the streets without jobs" and was passionately applauded by the well-fed and well-dressed audience, including a portly white Russian with a double-barreled mustache.

From the press table the Senator's sweating, ruddy face, twisting with feigned emotion, bobbed about above the beefy shoulders of Fritz Kuhn who sat between the speaker's table and reporters.

BOWS TO HITLER

"I wish the American people might be provided with sleeping powders so that they might not hear all this talk of war," the Senator said, chiding newspapers for printing "so much" foreign news. He wished Americans had never heard about Czechoslovakia, Austria, or Albania.

"I wish the American people would quite talking about war. In my humble opinion, those who are injuring America are those who are frightening the American people.

"I regret that while the press seems to be against the President on domestic collective security it supports him on collective security in foreign affairs." As proof of this "support" he exhibited a copy of the isolationist New York Post and complained that it had "five columns of its first page devoted to foreign news."

"Have they no care for the millions of Christians who are walking the streets hungry?" he cried.

Egging Hitler into an attack on the Soviet Union, he shouted, "As long as Hitler continues to go east, I'm satisfied. I tell you, it's not Hitler we have got to stop. It's Stalin!"

The Belvedere Roof Garden of Hotel Astor shook with applause. Fritz Kuhn and Wheeler-Hill seemed to be in ectasies, and the white Russian mustaches fairly danced.

But to make it plain that he was referring to other things than Stalin, he followed up with a right jab at American democracy. Quoting Bainbridge Colby, he said, "There's no such thing as American democracy or American republicanism. There's just Americanism.

ASKS IMMIGRATION BAN

"I observe that an effort is being made to bring the Soviet Union into an alliance for the protection of a certain section of the world. The mothers of America will never permit their sons to don a uniform to save the democracy of the Soviet Union."

Thus, curiously, this devoted disciple of Hitler made the one admission that is most difficult for them: that the Soviet Union is a democracy in the truest sense of the word; and with this admission he coupled an attack upon American democracy.

"Now I come to immigration," he said. "If these bills" (the Wagner and other bills to permit limited numbers of victims of Nazi aggression to come to America) "pass, you will find in our midst four to seven million spies—aliens.

"You wouldn't know how to locate them—that's why I introduced my bill to require mandatory registration and fingerprinting of all aliens upon our soil. I have also introduced a bill to bar all immigration for 10 years. I insist upon the passage of that bill."

In attacking Senator WAGNER'S resolution to open America's doors to 20,000 child victims of Hitler, REYNOLDS referred to his "good friend" BOB WAGNER.

"When Bob is away," he said, "and delegations of school children come to visit his office—the children love him, you know—I always invite them over to my office and give them some of my literature and little cards with my name signed on it giving them the right to sit in the Senate visitor's gallery.

"Don't misunderstand me. There's nothing I love more than homeless little children. But before I will let BOB WAGNER'S resolution pass I will filibuster till the cows come home."

After the luncheon was over the Daily's reporter happened to be in the washroom when Fritz Kuhn entered.

A gray-haired little man of about 65 somewhat timidly approached the Nazi fuehrer and said, "Mr. Kuhn, I have always wanted to shake your hand." Kuhn disposed of a towel and obliged. "I," said the little man, "am August Kupka, president of the Federal Grand Jurors Association."

Later, in reply to a question, Mr. Kupka somewhat deflated his position. He was, he told reporters, honorary vice president of the eastern district of the Federal Grand Jurors Association. He lives in Flushing.

Leslie J. Thompson, chairman of the society's committee on immigration which sponsored the luncheon, was a bit jittery when asked about Kuhn's presence.

Two thousand invitations had been given to John J. Cecil, an insurance man, and it was Cecil who invited Kuhn, he said. Anyway, Kuhn's treasurer was listed on the official table list.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am now going to close by bringing to the attention of the Senate an editorial from Liberty magazine. I wish to thank the writer of this editorial for his contribution. I recognize that grave, serious, and injurious charges have been made against me. I recognize that half the people who read those charges in the columns of the Merry-Go-Round will believe them because the honest men of integrity representing the press of the country here at the Capitol have educated the American people to believe that they send out the truth in fact, and my denial, of course, will never reach the ears or the eyes of many of the American people. I have spoken today, however, merely that I might challenge the men to whom I have referred who attack character. I have spoken today in order that I might challenge them and defy them to prove the truth of a single statement made by them which I have read here today—one single, left-handed, underhanded charge that they have made. Thank God, the American people will certainly know, and I hope the press at least will state, that our Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, says that Drew and Pearson tell the truth only one-fourth of the time and only one-fourth of the truth two-thirds of the time. The Secretary of State is a man in whom we all have faith.

I close Mr. President, by reading a portion of an editorial from Liberty Magazine, which, I am informed, has a circulation of between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000. The editorial is entitled "Immigration Adds to Unemployment." I will merely read one paragraph and then will ask that the entire editorial be printed in the RECORD. The paragraph I desire to read is as follows:

In a recent speech in Congress Senator REYNOLDS stated:

"We have expended billions of dollars in an effort to provide employment for the unfortunate men and women. Unemployment, therefore, is indeed a mammoth problem, and our huge unemployment record exists despite the fact that 3,000,000 of our people are on the relief rolls, and that 4,000,000 people in the United States are working either for the Government of the United States or for the respective State governments. The statement has been made that 80 percent of all the unemployed in the entire world are to be found in the confines of the United States."

Of course, Senator REYNOLDS is branded as a Fascist by the foreign recipients of our beneficence; but if fighting for Americanism of the Washington and Lincoln type subjects him to this libel, he "can take it."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial referred to by the Senator from North Carolina will be printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

The editorial entire is as follows:

[From Liberty of May 20, 1939]

IMMIGRATION ADDS TO UNEMPLOYMENT

It will be everywhere admitted that the unemployment roll in this country is an unspeakable scandal, a disgrace that we will probably never entirely efface; the disastrous situation brought into being largely by the attitude of this administration toward industry.

Capitalists, industrialists, investors, employers, or whatever they might be termed, are all human, although in some instances they are greedy and grasping; but they naturally want to protect their interests.

A business that does not make a profit soon disappears. Throughout the entire history of this country business has been encouraged and stimulated. Government officials have recognized that the more business we have, the more profit earned, the greater will be the rewards of all concerned.

This administration furnishes the first example of officials attacking this source of prosperity.

The great problem we are facing at the present time is the making of more jobs. But notwithstanding the unemployment emergency, we find a desire on the part of many of our officials to open our ports to an increased number of immigrants. This addition to our population should be denounced. Immigration should be stopped altogether.

Suppose these immigrants do secure jobs upon arrival. They put an American citizen out of a job * * * they make one job less for our own people.

If the father of a family was heavily in debt and had to provide for a number of children, and had to borrow money or accept charity to support them, would it be wisdom on his part to accept a few more dependents to add to his burdens?

Well, this accurately represents the situation that exists in this country at the present time. Here we are, with almost a third of our wage earners unemployed, billions required to keep people on the dole or in charity jobs, and what earthly reason have we for adding to our unemployment burdens by allowing immigrants to land on our shores? They are strangers and should be barred out absolutely. Why should we assume the responsibility of their support? Why should we rob our own citizens of employment?

Senator ROBERT REYNOLDS has introduced a bill, No. S. 409, that will stop immigration in the United States for those desiring permanent residence for a period of 10 years, or until such a time as the Department of Labor can certify that unemployment in the United States does not exceed 3,000,000.

The Senator doubtless has in mind Mme. Perkins, who failed to deport immigrants who were unlawfully in this country, for in this bill he has made it a felony for any official who tries to defeat the purpose of this act by failing to enforce it.

It is indeed a sad commentary when we have to make a law to compel an official to respect his oath of office and enforce the law.

In a recent speech in Congress, Senator REYNOLDS stated: "We have expended billions of dollars in an effort to provide employment for the unfortunate men and women. Unemployment, therefore, is indeed a mammoth problem, and our huge unemployment record exists despite the fact that 3,000,000 of our people are on the relief rolls, and that 4,000,000 people in the United States are working either for the Government of the United States or for the respective State governments. The statement has been made that 80 percent of all the unemployed in the entire world are to be found in the confines of the United States."

Of course, Senator REYNOLDS is branded as a Fascist by the foreign recipients of our beneficence; but if fighting for Americanism of the Washington and Lincoln type subjects him to this libel, he "can take it." He has apparently recognized the deplorable need of protecting our own home folks. When foreigners are given jobs and native-born American citizens are denied them, this is indeed cause for caustic criticism. As long as there is a good American citizen on the unemployed list there is no earthly reason why we should be accepting prospective job-seeking citizens from other countries. We should protect our own homes first of all, and after that duty has been properly assumed, humanitarian motives can rightly be encouraged.

BERNARR MACFADDEN.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in closing I ask unanimous consent that a radio address delivered by me in April 1938 on the subject of eliminating the profits of war be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks in order that the readers of the RECORD may know what my position was more than a year ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the address will be printed in the RECORD.

The address referred to is as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, in discussing a subject as perplexing and vital as eliminating the profits of war, the subject on which I have been invited to speak this evening, it will be helpful to picture in our minds the striking contrast between the United States and other countries.

The United States is a peace-loving nation. Most of the other large countries across the seas are militaristic. Those countries through centuries past have lived, existed, and even thrived on wars. History teaches that the rulers of those countries exploit their own people, keeping them in fear of the iron hand, and from time to time conquer and annex weaker countries.

Today the affairs in foreign countries continue to hold the center of the stage in America.

From all accounts, chaos is spreading among the nations across the seas, playing havoc with commerce and living conditions.

Fear is growing that at any hour a general war may burst on Europe and move in Asia, sweeping defenseless countries in its wake. The rule of reason over there has disappeared—the rule of might prevails in those countries.

And that fear of war has spread to and invaded our shores. Everywhere I go—in Washington or in North Carolina—I am greeted with the similar question, "Senator, do you think we are going to have war?" Our people realize what is taking place "over there."

with radio and telegraphic communications, newspaper and air-mail reports, and shipping transportation facilities as perfect as they are, it is but natural that America is well informed as to European and Asiatic developments. True, a large percentage of the news that reaches here from abroad is strictly censored, but sufficient facts are revealed to warn the United States of the war conditions prevalent all over the world.

The rash boasts and the dire threats of arrogant dictators hurled at peace-loving nations is a manifestation of the ugly temper of the power-crazed rulers.

It is for this reason that the American people are gravely concerned, yes, fearful, and justly so, over the foreign situation.

For the wounds experienced by thousands of our youth in the Great World War have not as yet healed. The scars are still fresh in memory.

The twenty-odd billions of dollars that we loaned to the Allies remains unpaid. These debtor nations have defaulted not only on the principal but scornfully have refused to pay Uncle Sam any interest. And the war that was to make the world safe for democracy cost the people of the United States around $65,000,000,000 to date.

Conservative estimators vouchsafe the opinion that ere the last United States war bond is redeemed and the last surviving veteran goes to his final reward the World War will cost this country $100,000,000,000.

As referred to a moment ago, the wounds inflicted on our soldiers have not as yet healed—the American mothers and fathers are still mourning for their loved ones who lost their lives in that conflict.

So it is no wonder—it is no surprise—that America as a whole is determined to stay out of war. America is not now nor has it ever been an aggressor nation—America has never fought a war of conquest.

But it is regrettable that unless we pursue a most cautious course we may be drawn into other people's wars. In a free country like ours—and may I point out at this juncture that our people should be thankful for living in a democracy like this and should do everything in their power to cherish and preserve America—it is to be expected that there would be a diversity of opinion as to objectives and methods in trying to avoid war. But when a crisis faces the Nation, then all groups should and must work in harmony for the ultimate benefit of the Nation as a whole—yes, for the saving of the Nation from being destroyed, whether from sinister forces from the outside or from preying influences on the inside. So, as I stated, it is but natural that we have in this country groups of people known as internationalists, others are isolationists, others favoring the adoption of a middle-of-the-road course, while others are munition manufacturers.

Among the latter class are some selfish interests who would lead us to war. However, every thinking person knows that America does not want to engage in any war. When in a recent speech our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, acclaimed, "I hate war," he voiced the sentiment of every true American patriot. Awakened to this fact, Congress has written laws that are intended to prevent these first fatal steps and incidents which bring about war and make more difficult the task of selfish war lords who would involve us in war.

These laws are referred to as the neutrality laws of the United States. These laws provide that Americans in war zones enter or remain in same at their own risk. Why should an entire Nation be placed in jeopardy because of the whim of an individual or because of a small group desiring to feather its own nest? These laws discourage trade relations with nations engaged in war. These laws forbid the shipment of American-made munitions to belligerent countries. The law would constitute for this country, a "mind our own business" policy, while other nations bombed, burned, and bled.

The law gives the President broad discretionary powers and frees him from pressure programs similar to the ones that some assert tended to engulf this country into the war 3,000 miles away from home in 1917.

Today certain groups are applauding the President for the course he is pursuing in the carrying out of the congressional mandate, while others bitterly assail him for the policy that we are following in the frightful struggle between China and Japan. Still others hail the President for his neutral attitude in the terrible Spanish situation, while others are caustic in their criticism over the refusal to permit the shipment of war implements and accessories to the loyalists in Spain. And so it is—contrasting schools of thought—various ideas and ideals as to how to keep America out of war—how the Nation should best proceed in these exasperating and nerve-testing days while shells and bombs drop on unprotected humans and innocent women and children drop like stricken animals in shattered streets.

For the past few years I have advocated a definite policy that I hope will keep America out of war. In Congress and out of Congress by Nation-wide radio addresses and addresses before patriotic societies and organizations, I have warned the Nation against any foreign entanglements. I maintain that with the existing unemployment situation here in this country Uncle Sam has sufficient troubles of his own without attempting to meddle in the political affairs of other nations. If by the wave of a magic wand or some occult power we could stop the frightful conflicts in Europe thereby restoring peace into a war-torn world, then I say there would be few Americans who would not be willing, yes, gladly, to lend the helping hand.

Our dipping into these boiling foreign political pots would complicate more an already strained situation, and we would only get our hands scalded. If we had been embroiled in their political set-ups for the past few years I believe that we would now be at war. Only the fact that the United States has remained aloof from these foreign involvements do I attribute the fact that no general war has broken out in continental Europe.

The recent announcement by the able Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, that outlined the United States' policy in foreign affairs brought reassurance to the country that the administration is trying to do everything humanly possible to avert any war. Especially pleasing was the emphasis that the notable Cabinet member placed on the determination to avoid any foreign political alliances—alliances that would prevent this Nation from pursuing an independent course thereby not being compelled to pull other countries' chestnuts out of the fire. Secretary Hull has handled a most deplorable situation in a most masterful manner.

Another vital step in the direction of peace is the new naval program outlined by our President and concurred in by the House. A strong naval, military, and air defense is the best insurance we can have against war. No country will dare to attack another country when it knows that its opponent is amply fortified and better equipped.

I am a firm believer that a death blow would be delivered at least to propaganda that leads to war if the profits were taken out of war. If the time comes when this Nation must go to war—if the time ever arrives when our Nation must fight to defend itself from an invading enemy—then Uncle Sam should conscript money as well as men for war purposes. Let us draft the munition makers as well as soldiers and sailors—why permit a small clique of manufacturers of war implements to grow fabulously wealthy while millions of our youth forfeit their lives in defense of the Republic. Let the Government draft the owners of factories and their factories in the next war and the next war will be long delayed in arriving.

Greed and selfishness, tyranny and a desire for added power cause most wars. Let us outlaw all profits in wartime—so that the heavy burdens of war be shared by all classes of our citizens alike and then some would not be so hasty in plunging us into a devastating catastrophe.

Of course, I do not expect everybody to agree with me in this opinion. When the Nation is in peril all good citizens will subordinate their views to the welfare of the country. That is particularly true in the United States. When our Nation is not in peril the main distinction between us and a dictator is the ability and right of the people to express their thoughts. Therefore the time to comment is before the war breaks out.

Those interested in this important subject may write me here at the Nation's capital, address Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS, United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

It is a sad commentary on our civilization that a few misguided leaders have set the world aflame and that a crazed-stricken world has driven this peaceful Nation into the necessity of expending billions of dollars for armaments in order that we might keep abreast with the other powerful countries.

Our sound advice and fervent appeals have gone unheeded. Our treaties were thrown in the discard by one foreign nation after the other.

Hence to delay our program for defense might result in attack or invasion of our country. Despite the ravages of war in other parts, America must march on—America will march on, true to its principles and doctrines as set forth by the founding fathers. America must serve as a beacon light for the darkened countries. We must be prepared. Our democracy must survive. Our democracy will survive.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. President, one of the local Washington newspapers of this morning's issue carries a story concerning an alleged investigation of my conduct while chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, an office which I resigned when appointed to my place in this honorable body. A similar story also appeared in some of the Chicago newspapers.

My natural inclination would be to ignore such false and malicious charges. However, I feel that in justice to myself, and in fairness to my colleagues in the Senate of the United States and to the Governor of the State of Illinois, who appointed me, I should state briefly my attitude toward this obvious attempt to besmirch my name by baseless innuendo and unfounded charges.

I welcome a complete and thorough investigation by any proper authority of my conduct while chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission. I have nothing to conceal. My conscience is clear.

If any investigation is made, it will show clearly that no misconduct occurred while I held office as chairman of the Illinois Commerce Commission, or at any time during my service as a public official. Such an investigation into these charges of impropriety also will disclose that they are motivated only by unfair political tactics.

The charges stand refuted by the record, which shows that during my tenure of office in Illinois as chairman of the commerce commission I ordered rate reductions against the Commonwealth Edison Co. and its affiliates, the utility mentioned in the stories, which now result in a savings to the utility consumers of the metropolitan area of Chicago of more than $6,000,000 per year. The record also will show that while chairman of the commission I consistently ordered utility rate reductions affecting all types of service in an amount exceeding $10,000,000 a year.

I deeply regret that the first time I should speak before this distinguished body should be in reference to a matter of this kind. My remarks are made solely to explain my position, not only to you with whom I serve, but to the Governor and the people of Illinois, who have every right to demand a complete examination of the records of their public servants.

My purpose in making this statement at this time is to remove at once the unpleasant stigma which has been so unjustly attached to my name.

WHAT IS NAZI-ISM?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a baneful and dangerous philosophy has been thrust upon the world during the past few years by the Nazi regime in Germany. Its philosophy is aimed at the destruction of democratic governments and the religious and moral forces which have brought peoples in many lands to a high degree of civilization. Nazi-ism is the foe of religion—an enemy of those principles which have found expression in the lives and conduct of hundreds of millions of human beings. The philosophy of world peace and world unity, of a common brotherhood of man, and the dignity and the right of the individual—the reign of law and of justice—are to yield to the reign of dictators enforced by military power. The rights of minorities are to be ignored and the will of the dictator is to control in all of the activities of individuals and community life.

Following the World War, throughout the world the great mass of the people of all lands, dedicated their efforts to the rehabilitation of a shattered world and the establishment of peace and international fellowship. Democratic forces were operating in nearly all lands and democratic States were growing in influence, and bringing peace and order and good will under a reign of law. In the midst of this rehabilitation of peoples and nations, sinister forces made their appearance, particularly in Germany. Nazi-ism was born and an evil force let loose in the world. Adolf Hitler attacked the rising tide of democracy in Germany and superimposed upon the German people a dangerous and deadly system which attacked the moral, religious, economic, and political life of Germany. He organized a powerful military force and directed the energies and activities of the people toward the erection of a powerful military dictatorship. He destroyed Austria—an independent state; invaded Czechoslovakia—a liberal, progressive, and democratic Republic—and brought, by devious ways, Yugoslavia and Hungary within the circle of his economic and, indeed, political influence. Nazi-ism is now threatening Poland, a progressive, liberal commonwealth. The dread figure of Hitler hangs like a pall over many countries in Europe, and millions of people, who are devoting their lives to the useful arts and to the promotion of peace and good will, are compelled to direct their energies into channels required to resist the invading forces of dictators. Italy, which has made such important contributions to the arts and to literature and science, and which has played such an important part for centuries in the world's development, is now a Fascist state and an important factor in what is known as the "axis." She is bound, together with the Japanese Government, in this axis, and this compels the people in many countries to reexamine their situation with a view to determining whether they must, for their own safety, protect themselves by diverting their resources and energies into military channels.

The world longs for peace and the great mass of the people everywhere regard nazi-ism and fascism not only as disturbers of the peace but as enemies of the moral, economic, and religious regeneration of the world. The creed of nazi-ism is found in Mein Kampf—the Bible of nazi-ism. It is a challenge to Christianity and to the moral and spiritual forces which have led the march of civilization throughout the world.

As I have indicated, nazi-ism is the enemy of every form of religion. It seeks the destruction of the Jews and other religious elements. Catholics and Catholicism are feeling the heavy hand of nazi-ism, and all organizations, moral and religious, which do not accept the philosophy of nazi-ism, meet the most bitter and relentless form of persecution.

In Mein Kampf Hitler has declared that—

> What the Germans want is not a peace brought about by olive branches in the hands of sniveling pacifists and sobbing old women, but a peace guaranteed by the victory-rich sword of a people of lords and masters, which sword brings the world into the service of [our] higher kultur.

He regards the Germans as a super-race and declares that—

> The time will come when problems will arise which only a highest race of lords, having at their command the means and resources of the whole planet, can solve.

The philosophy of nazi-ism is concretely revealed in the activities of the Nazi regime. Not only are the Jews the victims of cruel persecutions, but other religious groups are feeling the oppressive hand of nazi-ism.

We are familiar with the report submitted by Mr. James G. McDonald, an American citizen of high standing, who was appointed by the League of Nations to investigate conditions in Germany and particularly to ascertain the extent of the persecutions to which German nationals were subjected. His report, after 2 years of investigation, is a factual presentation of the frightful and indeed horrible treatment to which Jews, Catholics, and Protestants were subjected by the Nazi regime. Proof is incontestable that the most frightful persecutions were inflicted upon not only Jews but Catholics and Protestants. Mr. McDonald states that—

> Relentlessly, the Jews and "non-Aryans" are excluded from all public offices, from the exercise of the liberal professions, and from any part of the cultural and intellectual life of Germany. Ostracized from social relations with "Aryans," they are subjected to every kind of humiliation.

He further states that—

> Outstanding thinkers of the two great Christian communities in Germany and abroad raise their voices and protest against this attack which threatens to increase the number of refugees.

He also declares that—

> When domestic policies threaten the demoralization and exile of hundreds of thousands of human beings, he cannot remain silent.

And he adds that—

> He would be recreant if he did not call attention to the actual situation and plead that world opinion, acting through the League and its member states and other countries, move to avert the existing and impending tragedies.

A report by the Committee for Catholic Refugees submitted a year ago bears evidence of the cruel and criminal policies being pursued by the Nazi government. The report refers to the oppression and the various forms of persecution and to the fact that priests in large numbers have been placed in concentration camps and otherwise severely persecuted.

The Nazi leader, in his efforts to undermine and destroy governments, has not confined his efforts to force. He bases some of his policies upon what some denominate as peaceful methods; that is, where action is taken without the firing of guns. It is analogous to the placing of a gun at the head of a person and demanding his money. If the money is surrendered, no shot is fired. And so the Chancelor contends that a peaceful method has been pursued. It is not aggression if he does not shoot, though by threats he accomplishes his designs.

We are familiar with the fact that one of Mr. Hitler's earliest policies was, after trade-unions had been destroyed and all liberal opposition silenced, artfully to manipulate the use of the words "Aryan" and "non-Aryan." Without the slightest historical or scientific justification, certain German citizens—born in Germany and whose ancestors had inhabited German territory for centuries—were characterized as non-Aryans, by which it was pretty largely meant "Semites."

However, the Semitic race includes many eastern peoples, among them Arabs; and it was, therefore, more suited to Hitler's purpose to call these victims, whom he was to despoil and denationalize, non-Aryans, thereby placing all citizens of German "blood and soil" into the class of Aryans, and all other citizens, including especially those that had at least one Jewish grandparent—that is, had one-eighth Jewish blood—as non-Aryan. This, of course, furnished the basis for disfranchising them, depriving them of all civil rights, despoiling them of their property, and ultimately driving them forth into other lands without means of subsistence.

Obviously, the real motives in the cruel and relentless persecution of the Jews were, first, to rid nazi-ism of people historically and spiritually seekers of peace, and who created or developed the idea, and believed with unalterable devotion in the conception of one God and in a religion based upon the love of God; second, to rob them of their property, real and personal, including their business enterprises, plants, and houses, and give it to Nazi followers as a reward for their barbarous actions, and, of course, to add to the revenues of the Nazi state; and, third, to establish a precedent for the exploitation and confiscation of Catholic and, later, Protestant church property and to make the state completely totalitarian in religious as well as in political power.

It should be added, however, that the Nazi religion, if it may be so denominated, is paganistic. It is the philosophy of Nietzsche and is the apotheosis of the state. In nazi-ism the state is supreme and the individual is unimportant. His loyalty is only to Hitler, who embodies the power and authority of the state itself.

I fear that Mr. Hitler succeeded in convincing Mr. Chamberlain in his Munich Conference that his purpose was to gather into one nation or empire those of purely German blood. It is known that in Germany and Austria there were hundreds of thousands of citizens who were the result of intermarriages between Jewish and German and other so-called Aryan races. There are some persons who think of the Jews as a homogeneous group, of a uniform racial type in all parts of the world.

Dr. Joseph N. Moody, in his pamphlet, declares that "nothing could be further from the truth." He adds that there is no such thing as a Jewish race in the biological sense of the term. He states that anthropological studies have revealed that from the beginning Jews were not a single people of a like origin, but were composed of Semitic elements, to which had been added large numbers of non-Semitic types. All know that there were many Greeks, Romans, and other nationals who connected themselves with the Jewish faith, particularly during the last two centuries before the beginning of the Christian era. And it is a fact that, in every period since, individuals of different races have attached themselves to the Jewish religious community.

The theory of the purely "German blood" was automatically to include all peoples and groups speaking the German language. However, Hitler did not limit himself to retaking from the Allies of the World War territory that had been taken in that war from Germany. He reached out for the peoples that had been under the dominion of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and had not ever been a part of Germany as such.

Thus we have seen a pseudo knight-errant claiming to rescue persecuted minorities in other lands—Czechoslovakia, Lithuania, and Austria, for example—while at the same time persecuting, in the cruelest ways known in modern times, hundreds of thousands of persons in his own Nazi Germany. Under the coercion of spurious plebiscites, Hitler has succeeded in turning foreign minorities into so-called majorities, and then converting each country into totalitarianisms, thus blotting out all minorities and crushing minority rights. After having, I fear, deluded Prime Minister Chamberlain into crediting the limited theory of strictly "German blood," Hitler proceeded to take by force Czechs, Slavs, and other races under his domination, thus giving the lie to every statement and pledge he made at Munich and at preceding conferences. It would seem that his ambitions for power know no bounds.

I quote as significant on this subject an excerpt from an editorial of the London Observer of Sunday, March 26, 1939:

> A full English translation of Mein Kampf is at last available. Any reader among the 200,000,000 of the English-speaking world can at last realize that Herr Hitler's book is the soul of the man and the creed. In this Bible, or Koran, of embattled fanaticism and unbounded ambition there is one towering idea. Herr Hitler not only aims at the most powerful empire yet seen in history, he says plainly that this world domination by a superior race must be impregnably established; and that all powers and forces which might seriously compete with it must be struck down or otherwise disabled.

There has been some criticism of the Versailles Treaty, and undoubtedly some of its terms were unjust, but in the light of the oppressive acts of Hitler and the so-called treaties imposed by him upon Austria and Czechoslovakia, may we not infer what kind of a peace treaty Germany would have imposed on the allied nations if she had won the World War? We recall the oppressive terms which she imposed upon Rumania during that great contest. Does anyone now believe that such a treaty would not have been far worse than the Treaty of Versailles? It is about time we were aroused to a realizing sense of the "brutalitarian" government that holds not only its German citizens in political and military servitude, but pursues this same course with any and every country that has been in process of conquest, thus making the Treaty of Versailles moderate in comparison. As a matter of fact, under the Versailles Treaty, peoples were allowed to move about from country to country and to take their property and effects with them, and to enjoy civic and other advantages, none of which are allowed to the oppressed and persecuted Nazi citizens, and those of other countries as rapidly as Hitler can obtain dominion over them.

While we recognize the right of the people of a country to establish such government as they deem best to meet their needs, a proper regard should be had for the principles of justice and morality, and it should be recognized that a government so established should be promotive of the happiness and welfare of those owing it allegiance.

As civilization advances nations are drawn into closer relationship and constitute what is called the "family of nations."

We recognize the rights of individuals, our neighbors, but we are not forbidden to protest against brutal and inhuman treatment of the children of our neighbors. It is assumed that in this age nations will treat their nationals in a spirit of justice, and certainly in a spirit of humanity.

I do not subscribe to the view that American citizens or our Government may not take cognizance of the conduct of other nations, particularly where such conduct will manifestly bring repercussions in our country as well as in other countries. Our Government has frequently raised its voice in protest against brutal and inhuman treatment by governments of their own nationals. Because of our traditions and our desire to live at peace with all men and nations, we are told by some that no matter what cruel forms of persecution and brutality are practiced in other lands against defenseless human beings, our Government must remain silent and American citizens must express no condemnation.

The editor of Mr. Mussolini's newspaper a short time ago took occasion to tell the United States "to mind its own business"; and undoubtedly there are some Americans who believe that we have no right to raise our voices against the slaughter of innocent Chinese—men, women, and children—or the expulsion from Germany and other European countries of several million people, and the subjection of many of them to the most brutal and cowardly treatment, including robbing them of their properties.

I do not accept the view that our Government must remain absolutely silent, and that the American people shall express no opinion when great wrongs are being done, when hundreds of thousands of people are being driven from their homes, and thousands placed in concentration camps and subjected to such brutalities as to cause the death of many. The view has been expressed by some that our Government has remained silent when other governments have subjected their nationals to cruel and barbarous persecution. In my opinion, the reverse has been the case. And, because this is a historical fact which should be recognized by American citizens, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to a recent study of the course pursued by our Government when citizens of other countries have been subjected to cruel and barbarous treatment.

The study was made by Mr. Salmon O. Levinson, a distinguished Chicago lawyer, who gained international fame as a result of his pioneering work in developing what has been called the "outlawry of war" doctrine as a basis of international law. Mr. Levinson has been not infrequently called the "Father of the Kellogg Pact."

He has divided his study into two parts:

In the first, he shows what precedents have been created when, in years passed, our Government has been confronted by persecutions for racial, religious, or political reasons in other lands.

In the second, he indicates the bearing of these precedents on our present situation.

Mr. President, I regard this study as particularly important at this time, in view of what is occurring in Germany, as well as some other countries in Europe. I therefore ask to have it incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

AMERICA

We are living in a period of seismic and kaleidoscopic changes. Some are surely of the earthquake variety, and most are so rapid as to make the world gasp for breath. Let us deal with this revolutionary history as it bears upon two vital aspects of our national life.

First, what duty does America owe to outrageous violations of the laws of humanity and what guide do our governmental precedents furnish us?

Secondly, what are our duties and obligations in the protection of our American representative democracy, of our own matchless individual liberties established and cherished for 150 years?

Both these questions need clarification and emphasis in the light of present world conditions and of our own historic past. In some respects they dovetail.

AMERICAN BACKGROUND

Gladstone, the greatest liberal British statesman of modern times, not only paid a superlative tribute to our Constitution but to him is also ascribed the following significant warning:

"The Government of the United States represents what is on a large scale the last experiment in establishing and maintaining free political institutions. Should that experiment fail, the world may well despair of the character and processes of government for an indefinite future."

This is a grave and timely warning. We need to defend our national inheritances not only with battleships and airplanes but with those heroic moral and spiritual qualities which have marked the evolution of the American people. This is not lackadaisical nationalism. For we are composed of all the peoples of Europe, and all who came here craved liberty and freedom of opportunity.

By reason of certain recent developments across the Atlantic it has been said that we are back to the old order—the old order of military alliances, secret diplomacy, imperialistic deals, plots, and counterplots. But America has never belonged to or been a part of the old order. Washington and Jefferson established a new order in a new world. The base of this new order is liberty, security, and peace. In his farewell address, Washington says: "'Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances. * * * Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand." And it is but the natural and evolutionary development from "no military alliances" to "no war" which latter is the gist of the Briand-Kellogg Pact, a purely American idea, and the first universal treaty against war between nations in the history of civilization. This Pact of Paris is the law of the world and the cornerstone of the administration's foreign policy. We cannot here refrain from doing honor to one of the leading statesmen of our generation, the senior Senator from Idaho, whose name and devotion are imperishably identified with this fundamental law against war. The Kellogg Pact, which came into effect on July 24, 1929, has continued to be the cardinal foreign policy of three administrations. The nonrecognition of territory seized or annexed by or under the brazen threat of force is an indispensable corollary to that pact.

Washington's Farewell Address furnishes us another vital American principle so pertinent to present-day problems. It should be written in letters of gold in every church, schoolroom, and legislative hall of our country. We quote the entire paragraph:

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure—reason and experience doth forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Dr. Arthur H. Compton, famous physicist of the University of Chicago, some months ago put our religious history thus: "Civilization, as we know it in America, has been built up by the inspiration and energy of religious-minded people."

The European scene today emphasizes the enduring wisdom of Washington's political last will and testament. His words of advice shine like stars in the American firmament. Indeed, Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Madison, and Hamilton are recognized as the greatest government geniuses in history. As Ben Jonson said of Shakespeare, they are "not of an age but for all time."

Let us consider together the position the United States occupies in present world complications: What are our duties, our rights, and what precedents our own political history provide for our guidance. First of all, permit us to make it clear that we hold in our hearts no hostility, no enmity, to any nation, to any peoples on the face of the earth. Our America covets no territory; is, in fact, moving in the other direction in the Philippines; has no traditional or war grudge against any country. On the contrary, our people, comprising naturalized citizens and their descendants from practically every nation of the globe, are deeply interested, spiritually and materially, in the welfare and security of all peoples. To this end America would gladly join in or lead any movement that has for its prime objective a reuniting of the family of nations, the readjustment of the maladjustments—financial, economic, and territorial—resulting from the Great War and its turbulent aftermath, which, without creating new and dangerous problems and precedents, would reasonably serve to promote justice and contentment among all peoples. Our international diplomacy has sometimes been criticized as weak and ineffective. This criticism largely arises from its openness and freedom from intrigue. For example, in the matter of war: In 1898 President McKinley announced as an American policy that we will fight no wars of aggression or conquest and will accept no spoils of war. In 1917 President Wilson reiterated this policy in even broader and more generous terms. On this unprecedented policy, proclaimed by a Republican as well as by a Democratic President, the American people stand firm as a rock.

Consider also our position and conduct in the World War. We were a belligerent in that conflict only 19 months. Yet in that short time we invested a sum far greater than any other participant did in the 4 years of its duration, namely, the colossal amount of $45,000,000,000. Likewise we organized and equipped an army of 4,000,000 boys, who, despite necessarily scant training, won the admiration of the world for their bravery and patriotism. Unquestionably American participation tipped the scales to an allied victory. But when the victors sat around the peace table the United States alone among the victors refused to touch a dollar of the huge German reparations or a foot of conquered territory. Thus by our deeds did we immortalize the American policy announced by Presidents McKinley and Wilson.

No other nation in the history of mankind ever pursued such an unselfish and generous course in war or peace. And though we have suffered the severest economic and financial losses as a part of the shattering effects of the World War, we have since the armistice not only borne no malice nor hostility toward our former enemies, but both our Government and our people have made generous loans for rehabilitation purposes to Germany, to Austria, and to Hungary aggregating billions of dollars. Where can history furnish a parallel to this conduct?

AMERICA'S RIGHT AND DUTY WHEN LAWS OF HUMANITY ARE VIOLATED

In view of these things it is not only the right under the comity of nations but also the moral duty of the United States to make its voice heard in Europe, to protest the inhumane outrages that, to the shame of civilization and Christianity, are being perpetrated on innocent people by the most brutal methods known to modern times. These outrages include persecution of religion and race, denial of freedom of conscience (which is and must always be accompanied by loss of freedom of the press), the destruction of the very texture of Christian civilization, the tortures of concentration camps, the illegal confiscation of property of the persecuted, the denial of all protection of law by making their victims outlaws by sovereign decree, and finally the expulsion of these despoiled and helpless victims, thereby creating hundreds of thousands of homeless refugees who must either starve and die or be foisted without moral or legal right upon the governmental and private charity of other nations.

All these outrages are typified and unbelievably perpetrated by and in Nazi Germany, although some other nations are brazenly violating treaties freely entered into and using violence and inhumane methods to secure imperialistic and dictatorial objectives, other nations are throttling liberty of conscience, of speech, and of the press. And to avoid any possible misunderstanding the fact is, and almost every American knows, that we have no finer quality of patriotic, peace-loving, industrious, and educated citizens than the many millions of our own Germans, both naturalized and native born. If a poll should be taken of all Americans of German descent it would come as near showing unanimous opposition to religious and racial persecutions, denial of due process of law, and lawless confiscations of property as would any other group of our American citizenry.

From Von Steuben, in our Revolutionary struggle, who deservedly stands on a parity with Lafayette as a foreign friend of American liberty, through the great Carl Schurz to the present time, no right-thinking person has ever questioned the marvelous contribution to freedom, culture, art, science, and religion with which the Germans have enriched American soil. But facts inside Nazi Germany, though kept from their own people, are shockingly known here and must be faced and dealt with as a menace to our own country, to the very foundations of religion, and hence to civilization itself.

The persecution of minority groups began in Nazi Germany shortly after the advent of Hitler as Chancelor in January 1933. Spoliation and expulsion of the Jews had been in Hitler's original National Socialist platform. But soon after assuming power he crushed and oppressed labor unions, the social democrats, and all political opposition. It is estimated that labor unions' property to the extent of $50,000,000 was confiscated and the unions destroyed.

In order to give color of justification to the developing cruelties of anti-Semitism and to furnish a basis for excruciating laws, the spurious theory of "Aryanism" was devised for the purpose. If anyone will look into the Encyclopedia Britannica, or the very recent discussion at Cambridge, England, he will find that the word "Aryan" refers only to language or speech. It does not relate to blood or soil or race or color of eyes or hair—solely to language and speech. But the Nazis have corrupted the word to their own uses to mean "Nordic," or, as formerly known, "Norman." A couplet of Tennyson might enlighten the Nazis on their own theory of "Aryanism":

"Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

In order to bring into clearer vision to everyone, and particularly to bring home to the Germans how outrageous these "non-Aryan" persecutions and oppressions are, let us make the following suppositions:

1. Suppose that the United States literally adopted and accepted the Nazi definition of "Aryanism," namely, those of 100-percent pure "Aryan" blood under the present Nazi laws.

2. Then suppose our Government enacted identic punitive laws against all our German "Aryan" citizens. In other words, suppose America should suddenly rise up against German so-called Aryans, deprive them of all political and civic rights, despoil them of their property, put them in concentration camps at the will of our President, and, finally, having drained them dry of money and property, exile them as refugees to wither and die unless these millions of innocent and helpless people were voluntarily befriended by other nations. For we would merely be doing exactly the same thing, only in reverse, that the Nazis have done to their so-called non-Aryan citizens. And we would be doing it with the same moral right, to wit, none, and with the same legal right, if we can imagine the American people enacting such inhumane laws.

3. What is not supposition is that if we did such things, America would rightly be called the pariah of nations; we would surely have lost all sense of morality, humanity, and international honor.

These religious and racial persecutions are so well known to the American people through our most dependable newspapers and international press that it is wholly unnecessary to harrow again our feelings of shame and pity by their recital. But if Herr Hitler challenges the truth of these charges of inhumane conduct the United States will gladly join in the appointment of an independent high-class committee to ascertain and report the real facts. Indeed, we would personally welcome an open and full investigation.

Before calling the roll of great Englishmen and Americans, official and lay, who have protested and condemned acts of inhumanity and religious persecution, we set forth a few of the Nazi persecutions of other religious denominations, Protestant and Catholic.

THE CASE OF DR. NIEMOELLER

Consider the case of Rev. Dr. Martin Niemoeller, the great Lutheran Protestant pastor. He was the minister of the Jesus Christ Evangelical Lutheran Church of Dahlhem, Berlin. During the war he won fame as a patriotic German naval officer, commanding U-boats in the Mediterranean and being decorated over and over again for exceptional bravery. Entering the Christian ministry after the war he had risen swiftly to the pastorate of this famous Berlin church. He had carefully refrained from taking any part in politics, holding that to be out of accord with his position as a Christian minister. He had, however, as an individual German citizen, joined the National Socialist Party and voted the Nazi ticket in the election of 1933, which placed Hitler securely in power.

Pastor Niemoeller, in other words, was ready to support the Nazi government in all its political and social policies. It was only when that Government overstepped the bounds to dictate to the church what it must preach, whom it must elect and obey as its bishops, and to set up a vast bureaucracy of Nazi politicians in charge of church affairs—it was only then that Pastor Niemoeller protested. For nearly 4 years, as head of a company of fearless Protestant ministers, he insisted on freedom for the church from state control. He was warned, he was threatened, his home was constantly entered and searched by the secret police.

In July 1937 Martin Niemoeller was arrested. Taken to prison, he was held incommunicado for 7 months, never being brought into court to find out the charges against him, never even having a copy of any formal indictment served on him in prison. He was simply left there alone behind the bars of his prison, while all that his friends inside and outside Germany could do was to agitate that he at least be tried. Finally he was tried in February and March 1938, in proceedings from which the public, including Niemoeller's own wife, was excluded, proceedings so farcical that Niemoeller's lawyers at one point withdrew from the case, insisting that it was a travesty on justice. The sentence passed on Niemoeller was for 7 months of incarceration and a fine of 1,500 marks ($600). The fine was immediately paid and the court held that Niemoeller, having already spent 8 months in prison, could go free. Yet when this world-famous Christian minister stepped outside the doors of the courtroom, before he could so much as greet the wife and children who were waiting there for his release, he was immediately rearrested by the Nazi secret police and rushed off to a concentration camp, where he is held to this day. That is an almost unbelievable example of religious persecution of Protestant Christians in Germany.

The Niemoeller case is only one of many, but, because of his standing, his ability, his courageous conduct during the war, and his acceptance in very large measure of national-socialist principles, his case is historic and revolting to all sense of governmental decency.

PERSECUTION OF CATHOLICS

The Nazi persecution of Catholics has been shrewdly camouflaged, first by the Concordat with the Pope, which somewhat lulled all suspicion, and then by official denials, and where these would be too obviously false, by reckless and unscrupulous charges of immoral conduct against priests and other Catholics. Here are quoted a few extracts from the reliable London Catholic Herald and the Commonweal.

On December 31, 1937, the Herald contains the following:

"His Holiness has referred in very serious terms to Germany, stating that things must be called by their real names. 'We wish to speak of the very sad fact of persecution in Germany, because we want to give things their proper name.'

"'In Germany,' the Pope went on, 'there is a religious persecution. It is being said and has been said for a long time that that is not true. We know, however, that it is a persecution and a grave one. Seldom there has been a persecution which was so serious, so terrible, so painful, and so sad in its deepest consequences. It is a persecution where neither the use of violence, nor the pressure of menaces, nor the deceptions of cunning and lie are missing.'"

The Commonweal, July 2, 1937, carries an article on Nazi Persecution of Catholics, by Waldemar Curian:

"Waves of filth and fury have swirled up about Germany's priests and religious—waves that have their wellspring in the inner chambers that determine the press policy of the Third Reich. You cannot open a German newspaper without finding at least one account of a trial on statutory charges involving priests or religious as defendants. A newspaper has no choice in the matter of printing these reports. The Nazi policy intends that even the tiniest village should regard rectory and convent alike as dens of abomination. The radio, too, plays its part, and Nazi party organs carry news stories with such headlines as "Can the Church Stand the Truth?" "Incredible Patience of the Hierarchy," "Children Outraged in Convent Schools," "Corruptors of Youth Clad in Cassocks," "Spotless at the Altar but Scandalous as Educators," "A Devil in a Surplice."

"Der Schwarze Korps has a circulation of over 500,000. This is the official journal of the S. S., the 'Black Bodyguard,' whose leader, Himmler, is chief of the coordinated German police. This sheet unfailingly launches most devastating attacks against church and cloister, with respect for neither Pope nor Bishops. A few examples will serve. It carries a caricature of high church dignitaries and creates the impression through the caption that a priest who has not run afoul of decency is 'the individual case.' Another cartoon is directed against the Bishop as follows: 'How will I clean up this pigsty? Can't be done. So the dung stinks to high heaven. That will bring the police, and they'll take care of it.' And the police closed an Episcopal convent with the contention that regulations there were of a sort that 'represented a serious threat to morals.'"

Owing to the complete domination of the press and the courts by the Nazi government it is impossible effectively to refute these degrading charges.

Recent outbreaks against Cardinals Innitzer and Faulhaber and stern condemnation by the Pope of both anti-Catholicism and anti-Semitism show that these persecutions are growing progressively worse and are part and parcel of the Nazi philosophy of totalitarianism.

Under cover of these religious persecutions the Nazi government is not overlooking the vast monetary advantage that is thus offered. The step from oppression, persecution, and "protective imprisonment" in concentration camps to confiscation, baldly or under legal devices, of the victims' property is a small and diabolically logical one. No one outside the Nazi chieftans can possibly estimate the vast total amount of this ingenious sovereign racketeering. But even a rough guess shows it to run into billions of marks. The recent "Baron Munchhausen" fine extored from German and Austrian Jews when an exiled and half-distracted 17-year-old Polish boy shot a German third secretary in Paris shocked the world as the acme of senseless brutal governmental injustice. And, of course, when these innocent victims are completely cowed and despoiled of all means of subsistence, the stage is set for their exile, leaving their fate of life or death to the mercy of other nations. "Other nations!" What cares the Nazi master of propaganda, Herr Goebbles, about "other nations"? A recent Associated Press dispatch from Berlin reads:

"If the foreign press invokes our human feelings, why we will be glad to present the Jews to them. If people say, 'Why, the Jews aren't doing anything,' I say they provoke us by their very presence. What do we care about foreign countries anyway? The world should leave us alone. We are not harming anybody."

We now quote from state papers and addresses on what rights and duties arise to other nations in the face of persecution and oppression by one nation that violates the laws of humanity and of God, and that also foists heavy and unjust burdens upon other nations. And especially we cite the inspiring words and acts of our own Government, which, in times past, has had the courage and humanitarian impulse and has exercised the right to protest and condemn these inhumane practices.

This right is well recognized and is based on—

(a) The laws of humanity, of Nature, and of God which transcend all man-made laws which violate them;

(b) The right to protection against the inevitable effect of despoiling and banishing by direct or indirect methods large numbers of men and women, who are thereby forced to seek life and home in other countries, thus making the question not a local but an international one; and

(c) The friendly moral right of every nation under the comity of nations to protest against outrages and inhumane conduct occurring in any country. The manner of protest may sometimes be open to criticism but the right of protest is undeniable.

PRECEDENTS OF SOVEREIGN PROTESTS AGAINST OUTRAGES IN OTHER NATIONS

Stowell, in his work in Intervention in International Law (p. 52), says that there are many instances of firm diplomatic protests in both hemispheres on different grounds, including governmental persecutions amounting to inhumane conduct.

Stowell says, on page 63:

"Governmental persecution may be sufficiently gross to amount to inhumane conduct. Particularly frequent have been the instances of intolerance; that is, the denial to large numbers of persons of the liberty to profess their religion."

Both our Government and our people have the proud record of expressing their moral protests against and condemnation of outrages on liberty, religion, and race emphatically and frequently.

In the early days of this Republic President John Quincy Adams wrote:

"This principle, that a whole nation has a right to do whatever it pleases, cannot in any sense whatever be admitted as true. The eternal and immutable laws of justice and of morality are paramount to all human legislation."

The name Kossuth is loved by all who prize liberty. Austria and Russia combined to defeat Kossuth, and after he had taken refuge in Turkey they demanded his surrender. Here was a matter with which our country had no direct concern. Hungary, Austria, Russia, Turkey, all undoubtedly considered that the crushing of the Kossuth forces and whatever punitive action any of them desired to take, were matters altogether of internal policy with which the United States had rightfully nothing to do.

That was not the view of Americans of that day. They did not invite war nor threaten a disruption of friendly relations by voicing the moral indignation of this civilized Nation. Daniel Webster, then a Member of the United States Senate, declared in a speech in Boston:

"We have all had our sympathies enlisted in the Hungarian effort for liberty. We have all wept at its failure. Despotic power from abroad intervened to suppress the hope of free government in Hungary. Gentlemen, there is something on earth greater than arbitrary or despotic power, and that is the aroused indignation of the civilized world."

Thereafter, having in the meantime become Secretary of State, Webster set forth the views of this Government:

"While performing with strict and exact fidelity all their neutral duties, nothing shall deter either the Government or the people of the United States from exercising at their own discretion, the rights belonging to them as an independent nation, and of forming and expressing their own opinions, freely and at all times, upon the great political events which may transpire among the civilized nations of the earth."

Kossuth was not put to death. He was brought to this country on an American public vessel, after a resolution to that effect had been passed by Congress. He was presented to the Chief Executive, to both Houses of Congress, and was honored throughout the land.

Czarist Russia seems to have been the model or prototype which is being followed in persecuting Jews, although the present government of Germany has broadened it to include Catholics and Protestants. On April 15, 1882, Secretary of State Frelinghuysen, dealing with the Russian outrages on Jews, gave instructions to our Ambassador to Russia "to express the hope that the Imperial Government would find means to cause the persecution of these unfortunate fellow beings to cease."

These Russian persecutions called forth two notable meetings, one at the Mansion House in London on February 1, 1882, and the other in New York City, at Chickering Hall, held on the same day.

We quote excerpts from the London speeches of some of the greatest men of England of that day. Resolutions were passed and sent to Prime Minister Gladstone to use his diplomatic influence to stop the outrages.

At this meeting the Earl of Shaftesbury, distinguished philanthropist and statesman, said in part:

"There may be, or there may not be, a precedent for such a meeting; but I hold that in these days of what is called the 'solidarity of nations,' of enlarged responsibilities and greatly increased force of public opinion—if there is not a precedent, it ought to be established on this very day. I am glad that the people of England have come forward to make a solemn declaration that, in their belief, there are moral as well as material weapons; that the moral weapons in the long run are the more effectual and the more permanent; and that it is our duty to resort to those moral weapons when for use of the material we have neither the right nor the power * * *."

Lord Shaftesbury offered the following resolution:

"That in the opinion of this meeting the persecutions and the outrages which the Jews in many parts of the Russian dominion have for several months past suffered, are an offense to civilization to be deeply deplored."

The Bishop of London said:

"A few years back our country was horrified with accounts of atrocities committed in what were then provinces of the Turkish Empire. The country was moved, but it had the consolation of knowing that though the sufferers were Christians, the perpetrators were almost all of another creed. Now, alas, the case is the reverse. Those who have perpetrated these atrocities are men who bear the name of Christians; so that the persecutions of the Middle Ages, on which history has long set the stamp of reprobation, have been reproduced in the latter part of the nineteenth century. * * * Speaking here from this platform, I may without presumption, in the name of every member of the Church of England, second the resolutions which Lord Shaftesbury has proposed."

Cardinal Manning, on behalf of the Catholics, said:

"It is because I believe that we are high above the tumults and conflicts of party politics, that we are in the serene region of human justice, that I am here today. * * * Further, I may say, that while we do not intend to touch upon any question in the internal legislation of Russia, still there are laws larger than any Russian legislation, laws which are equally binding in London, in St. Petersburg, and in Moscow—the laws of humanity, of nature, and of God—which are the foundation of all other laws; and if in any legislation these are violated, all nations of Christian Europe, the whole commonwealth of civilized and Christian men, would instantly acquire a right to speak out loud. * * * Is there any career of public utility, any path of honor, civil or military, in which the Jews have not stood side by side with their countrymen? * * * For uprightness, for refinement, for generosity, for charity, for all the graces and virtues that adorn humanity, where, I ask, will be found examples brighter, or more full of true human excellence, than in this branch of the Hebrew race. * * *

"There is but one word more I have to say, * * * There is a Book, my Lord, which is common to the race of Israel and to us Christians. That Book is a bond between us, and in that Book I read that the people of Israel are the oldest people upon the earth. Russias and Austrias and Englands are but of yesterday compared with the imperishable people, which—with an inextinguishable life and immutable traditions, and faith in God and the laws of God, scattered as it is all over the world, passing through the fires unscathed, trampled into the dust and yet never combining with the dust into which it is trampled—lives on, still a witness to us, a witness and a warning. We are in the bonds of brotherhood with it. The New Testament rests upon the Old. They believe in half of that for which we would give our lives. Let us, then, acknowledge that they are united with us in a common sympathy."

Canon Farrar, at the same meeting, said:

"The Jews are at once the noblest and the most trampled-upon nationality in the world. Their religion was the cradle of Christianity. The Jews have among them names which, as Sir Walter Scott says, as compared with any of our names, are like the gourd to the cedar, and which go back to the time when the voice of God shook the mercy seat between the Cherubim. It is the Jewish nation that humanity owes the deepest debt of gratitude, and it is on that nation that humanity has inflicted the deepest wrongs."

James Bryce also addressed this meeting and said in part:

"I feel honored in being asked to address this meeting * * * to confirm the testimony already given, that those who then spoke out so strongly against atrocities committed by Mohammedans against Christians feel now similar indignation against the attacks made by Christians upon Jews. * * *

"The resolution which I have to propose is as follows: 'That the lord mayor be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to the Right Honorable W. E. Gladstone and the Right Honorable Earl Granville, in the hope that Her Majesty's Government may be able, when an opportunity arises, to exercise a friendly influence with the Russian Government in accordance with the spirit of the preceding resolutions.' * * * It is, indeed, enough to make one blush for modern civilization to think that a people like the Jews—a people whose ancient literature is so sacred in our eyes, on whose ancient religion our own is based, who have rendered such eminent services to learning and science—in the nineteenth century should be subjected to such terrible persecution."

A mass meeting in New York City February 1, 1882, at Chickering Hall, was called at the request of ex-President U. S. Grant, Roscoe Conkling, and other distinguished American citizens. Mayor Grace, of New York, presided and made the following brief address:

"In the name of freedom of thought, of religious liberty, I feel that we are called upon to protest against the tyrannical illiberality of a government which permits the persecution of an entire people for the simple reason that they are of a peculiar race and peculiar faith. * * * I am strongly reminded of the words of Pope Innocent IV, in a letter which he wrote in defense of the Jews in 1247, where he says: 'What a shame it is they should be more miserable under Christian princes than their ancestors were under Pharaoh.'"

The chief address was delivered by ex-Secretary of State William H. Evarts, who in part said:

"But it is said, Do not nations correspond only through governments, and are not governments clothed with complete authority within the territories over which they rule, and are they not jealous of any intimations or suggestions made by friendly governments, however close their amity may be? Well, gentlemen, the time has gone when kings, couriers, and ships of war were the only messengers between nations, and when state proclamations and announcements of ambassadors were the only messages that passed between nation and nation. All this wonderful apparatus of communication which the world rejoices in and uses every day, all this vast apparatus was not made for men and the transfusion of people with people, but the common diffusion of the world's common property in the interchange of thought, of feeling, and of purpose. All nations now speak directly to nations, under no constraint or formality, and under no difficulty of making themselves understood."

In 1891 the United States complained to the Russian Government of its harsh treatment of the Jews, which forced them to emigrate in large numbers to this country. On his instructions to the American ministry, February 18, 1891, Secretary of State James G. Blaine spoke of the action taken by the Russian Government as a step which "would not only wound the universal and innate sentiment of humanity but would suggest the difficult problem of affording an immediate asylum to a million or more of exiles without seriously deranging the conditions of labor and social organization in other communities."

Mr. Blaine further observed: "The Government of the United States does not assume to dictate the internal policy of other nations, or to make suggestions as to what their municipal laws should be or as to the manner in which they should be administered. Nevertheless, the mutual duties of nations require that each should use its power with a due regard for the results which its exercise produces on the rest of the world."

The American representative was directed to read this instruction to the Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs. President Benjamin Harrison, in his annual message, December 9, 1891, said:

"This Government has found occasion to express, in a friendly spirit but with much earnestness, to the Government of the Tsar its serious concern because of the harsh measures now being enforced against the Hebrews in Russia. By the revival of anti-Semitic laws, long in abeyance, great numbers of those unfortunate people have been constrained to abandon their homes and leave the empire by reason of the impossibility of finding subsistence within the pale to which it is sought to confine them. The emigration of these to the United States—many other countries being closed to them—is largely increasing and is likely to assume proportions which may make it difficult to find homes and employment for them here and to seriously affect the labor market. It is estimated that over 1,000,000 will be forced from Russia within a few years. The Hebrew is never a beggar; he has always kept the law—life by toil—often under severe and oppressive civil restrictions. It is also true that no race, sect, or class has more fully cared for its own than the Hebrew race. But the sudden transfer of such a multitude, under conditions that tend to strip them of their small accumulations and to depress their energies and courage is neither good for them nor for us. The banishment, whether by direct decree or by not less certain indirect methods, of so large a number of men and women is not a local question. A decree to leave one country is, in the nature of things, an order to enter another—some other. This consideration, as well as the suggestions of humanity, furnishes ample ground for the remonstrances which we have presented to Russia, while our historic friendship for that Government cannot fail to give assurance that our representations are those of a sincere well-wisher."

In 1902 Secretary of State Hay called the attention of the powers to Rumania's violation of the Treaty of Berlin and her unjustifiable oppression of the Jews. Stowell, page 69, comments:

"As the correspondence indicates, Secretary Hay's intention was to demand justice for the oppressed Jews in conformity with the principles of international law and the dictates of humanity. This action was taken, as he said in his dispatch of August 11, 1902, to Mr. McCormick, 'not alone because it (the United States) has unimpeachable grounds to remonstrate against the resulting injury to itself, but in the name of humanity.'"

The French Government also took a hand in this protest. Stowell says, page 67:

"From Paris the French consulate at Jassy had received the following telegram of instructions: 'The persecutions begun against the Jews at Jassy cause here a just and general indignation. Take prompt and energetic steps to put a stop to an iniquity which is a dishonor to the Rumanian Government.'"

The Kishineff massacre in Russia of 1903 led to other meetings of protest in the United States, notably one at Carnegie Hall, New York, May 27, 1903, over which Mayor Seth Low presided. Carl Schurz at this meeting spoke these memorable words:

"The persecution and maltreatment of human beings on account of their race or their religious belief is always an offense not only unjust to the victim, but also degrading to the offender. But the persecution and maltreatment of the Jews, as mankind has witnessed it, and is now witnessing it in several countries, has been not only especially barbarous in the ferocity of its excesses, but in a singular degree self-debasing and cowardly in the invention of the reasons adduced for its justification. These horrors are not only one more revelation of the ulterior tendency of a movement which here and there even assumes the mask of superior respectability. Here is the whole question again brought before the tribunal of the conscience of mankind. May this event serve to put in clearer light the fact that the history of the world exhibits no more monumental record of monstrous injustice than the persecutions inflicted upon the Jews during so many centuries. We may then also hope to see the other fact universally recognized that wherever the Jewish race, with its wonderful vitality and its remarkable productiveness of talent and energy, enjoys the equal protection of just laws and a due appreciation of its self-respect, it will, far from remaining a race of aliens, furnish its full contingent of law-abiding, peaceable, industrious, public-spirited, and patriotic citizenship, vieing with the best."

Ex-President Grover Cleveland, at this meeting, made this notable contribution:

"The influences which have called us together tonight grow out of our recognition of the promptings of Christian civilization and our dutiful devotion to the best and deepest of our national characteristics. This demonstration furnishes cheering and reassuring evidence that our American sympathy for the oppressed and abused, wherever they may be, our American love of humanity, and our attachment to justice and right, are still active and unimpaired. There is another American trait inwoven with the warp and woof of our national character, which is here exhibited in most gratifying freshness and strength. Our people, when their sympathies are touched, when their humane instincts are challenged, and when their hatred of oppression is aroused, are not afraid to speak, and in such circumstances it is not their habits to smother or cautiously soften their words.

"Every American humane sentiment has been shocked by a late attack on the Jews in Russia—an attack murderous, atrocious, and in every way revolting. As members of the family of mankind, and as citizens of a free nation, we are here to give voice to the feeling that should stir every true man, and every American worthy of the name. There is something intensely horrible in the wholesale murder of unoffending, defenseless men, women, and children who have been tacitly, if not expressly, assured of safety under the protection of a professedly civilized government. Such things give rise to a distressing fear that even the enlightenment of the twentieth century has neither destroyed nor subdued the barbarity of human nature, nor wholly redeemed the civilized world from 'man's inhumanity to man.' * * *

"Let the people of the United States, gathered together in such assemblages as this, in every part of the land, fearlessly speak to the civilized world, protesting against every pretense of civilization that permits medieval persecution, against every bigoted creed that forbids religious toleration and freedom of conscience, against all false enlightenment that excuses hatred and cruelty toward any race of men, and against all spurious forms of government protection that withhold from any human being the right to live in safety and toil in peace."

At a Chicago meeting on May 18, 1903, a petition was approved and delivered to Secretary of State John Hay, under President Theodore Roosevelt. Whereupon Secretary Hay said:

"No person of ordinary humanity can have heard without deep emotion the story of the cruel outrages inflicted upon the Jews of Kishineff. These lamentable events have caused the profoundest impression throughout the world, but most especially in this country where there are so many of your coreligionists who form such a desirable element of our population in industry, thrift, public spirit, and commercial morality. Nobody can ever make the Americans think ill of the Jews as a class or as a race * * *. We know them too well. In the painful crisis through which we are now passing the Jews of the United States have given evidence of the highest qualities—generosity, love of justice, and power of self-restraint."

President Theodore Roosevelt took a firm stand in this matter and, as might be expected, was not afraid to deliver a resounding moral protest to the Russian Government in the face of these brutal outrages. Quoting from Thayer's Life of Roosevelt, pages 229, 230:

"Russian mobs ran amuck and massacred many Jews in the city of Kishineff. The news of this atrocity reached the outside world slowly; when it came the Jews of western Europe, and especially those of the United States, cried out in horror, held meetings, drew up protests, and framed petitions asking the Czar to punish the criminals. Leading American Jews besought Roosevelt to plead their cause before the Czar. As it was well known that the Czar would refuse to receive such petitions and would regard himself as insulted by whatever nation should lay them before him by official diplomatic means, the world wondered what Roosevelt would do. He took one of his short cuts. He sent the petitions to our Ambassador at Petrograd, accompanying them with a letter which recited the atrocities and grievances. In this letter, which was handed to the Russian Secretary of State, our Government asked whether His Majesty the Czar would condescend to receive the petitions. Of course, the reply was 'No,' but the letter was published in all countries, so that the Czar also knew of the petitions and of the horrors which called them out. In this fashion the former ranchman and Rough Rider outwitted, by what I may call his straightforward guile, the crafty diplomats of the Romanoffs."

Commenting on this, Stowell says:

"Finally, public opinion in America became thoroughly aroused, and on December 17, 1911, the American Ambassador officially notified the Russian Government of the termination of the treaty of 1832."

In 1915, in the early stages of the World War, there occurred the Turkish persecution of Armenian Christians, and the United States, despite the inherent dangers involved, intervened diplomatically on the dictate of common humanity. Stowell (p. 80) comments as follows on this action:

"This action is of especial interest since it took place at a critical moment of the war (1915). The New York Evening Post, October 5, 1915, prints the following report from Washington: 'The Turkish Government will be formally notified that unless the massacre of Armenians ceases, friendly relations between the American people and the people of Turkey will be threatened. Instructions to that effect had gone today to Ambassador Morgenthau at Constantinople for presentation to the foreign office.' "

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION OF CATHOLICS IN MEXICO IN 1935

On January 31, 1935, there was submitted to the Senate by the senior Senator from Idaho, former head of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, a resolution protesting against the persecution of "Christians of all faiths" in Mexico, but relating mainly to the persecution of Catholics at the time, and calling for the appointment of a senatorial investigating committee. The Borah resolution provides:

"Whereas serious antireligious outbreaks have occurred in Mexico under the regime of the National Revolutionary Party now in control of the government of Mexico; and

"Whereas the persecutions of Christians of all faiths now being practiced in Mexico have aroused indignation and protest throughout the civilized world; and

"Whereas it has been the national policy of the Government and the dominant Revolutionary Party of Mexico to discourage religious profession and obliterate religious worship; and

"Whereas the present Mexican Government prohibits the time-honored practice of private religious instruction and education of children and compels parents as an only alternative to ignorance to educate their children in schools teaching hostility to orthodox religion; and

"Whereas Christian residents of Mexico who complain of such intolerance are flagrantly mistreated and abused: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the United States deems it fitting and proper to protest the antireligious campaign and practices of the present rulers of Mexico; and that it views with the gravest concern such ruthless persecution of helpless men and women who have become the innocent victims of antireligious persecutions; be it further

"Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate, or a subcommittee thereof, be authorized to conduct hearings and receive such evidence as may be presented relating to religious persecution and antireligious compulsion and agitation in Mexico for the purpose of determining the policy of the United States in reference to this vital problem and in what way we may best serve the cause of tolerance and religious freedom."

CONCLUSION OF QUESTION 1

Thus we see in the actions and precedents of our past Executives and Secretaries of State, and of our past and present statesmen and publicists, a clear path of duty which we owe to the laws of nature, of God, and humanity. Protests by any nation against the infractions of these sacred highest laws are both permissible and laudable and should be received in a friendly spirit as a part of the comity of nations. Every effort should be made, just as between personal friends, to induce their assuagement and cessation on the basis of good will and mutual cooperation. Under our Constitution and Bill of Rights, America permits no invasion of freedom of religion, no laws of persecution against minorities, and hence is as well justified as any nation to urge the abandonment of such practices as make for ill-will and economic as well as political friction. The main obstacle to good will, which is indispensable to world harmony, is that some nations seem to regard it as a one-way street, something that is virtuous and praiseworthy when extended to them, but lacking in national merit when required of them. Let us try to break down this barrier not only by reciprocal commercial treaties but by reciprocal moral conduct. In this way only can the family of nations be reunited.

OUR DUTY TO AMERICA

We come then to the second great question which confronts us: What are our duties and obligations in the protection of our constitutional democracy, our matchless liberties established and cherished for 150 years?

First of all, it is obviously incumbent upon us to regard with open eyes the period in which we live, to strip away all pretenses as to the forces which today work most powerfully to establish the nature of international life, and thus to comprehend the dangers from which our democracy must be safeguarded. If there are vital portions of the earth, if there are great nations in which the sanctity of the pledged word is no longer observed, in which rule by force or by the threat of force has supplanted rule by law and by the appeal to reason, an awakened democracy must look squarely in the face the dangers which a return to the arbitrament of the sword constitutes for all nations who seek a stable and peaceful world order.

It would appear that certain great figures do not care to have the democratic peoples thus realistically consider and openly discuss the spread of arbitrary rule based on armed might. For the public leaders or the press of the democracies to tell the truth about this development and to warn against its menace is, we are told by one European ruler, "war mongering"; and a European minister of foreign affairs has recently made the unprecedented suggestion that it is a part of the duty of the accredited diplomatic representatives of the democracies to see that newspaper correspondents reporting to their countries shall send no reports from the totalitarian states which shall disclose the extent and nature of these antidemocratic developments. All such candid recognition of facts as facts is stigmatized, in the highest quarters, as "war agitation."

We are for peace. To accuse this Nation of war agitation is to malign the principles of every administration in our history. It is to distort and defame the spirit and desire of every American citizen. Search our Nation from one end to the other and you will scarcely find one person in it who is not wholly, honestly, and passionately desirous of peace. Our people have no desire but, in the words of Scripture, to "live peacefully with all men." They will sacrifice to almost any length in order to preserve peace in all our international relations. But it is a just and lasting peace to which their hearts are devoted, not an armed and rearming truce between wars and conquests.

For that reason, while we persist in our determination to maintain peace in all our international relations, we are determined likewise to provide adequate protection for our free institutions within our own borders and to cooperate with all the other republics of this hemisphere against encroachments upon the democratic liberties which they, like we, have gained by the sacrifice of blood and treasure. We do not intend, we will not permit, our armed strength, by threat or otherwise, to be used in aggression anywhere in the world. But we cannot close our eyes to the perils in which our democracy walks at the present hour, and so we mean to use the limitless resources which are in our hands to forge weapons of protection, to the end that the most precious possession of all—our human liberty—may be made secure against sabotage or attack.

For the supreme stake for which we in the democracies live today, and if need be which we will defend to the death, is human liberty. It is this which our brave fathers have bequeathed to us, the one pearl of surpassing price which we must retain and hold fast even if it cost us all else that we have. Human liberty, the rights of men proclaimed in our Declaration of Independence and given legal definition in our Federal Constitution, that irreducible dignity of the human spirit which is the basis of our political institutions and which lies at the very heart of the religious faiths espoused by most of our people—these are the heritage of our past, and these are the possessions which make life worth living for us today. Freedom and liberty are the ends for which this Government was born and the ends for which we who love this Nation and believe in its destiny live. And we will not permit any actual or potential invader to place in jeopardy the expectation that our children shall receive unimpaired from our hands this boon which our fathers handed to us as a sacred trust.

We ask freedom to maintain and conduct our own forms of republican government and individual liberty in this hemisphere, as we freely grant the right of others to their own desired forms of government, dictatorial, autocratic, or totalitarian. But under no circumstances, pursuant to no pleas or threats, will we allow the autocratic forms of government known in other parts of the earth to become established in the New World or to undermine or destroy the liberties of our American republics.

Furthermore, it is evident that the time has come when we must reaffirm our unmistakable intention of defending our liberties, not only from all attack from without, but equally from those more sinister and dangerous attacks which arise on occasion within our own national life. This liberty which we cherish—what is it but that freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom from search and seizure, freedom to worship after the dictates of conscience which are assured to all Americans in the constitutional Bill of Rights? And these measures of freedom can only be secure in a society without discrimination because of religion, race, or any other form of division. Yet from time to time we discover, operating in our midst, movements which have as their avowed aims the introduction of these very causes of social discrimination and disability. Against all such alien intrusions which seek to set up within American life communities dedicated to alien ideals and inimical to American conceptions of liberty and democracy, we must set our faces with unflinching determination. Such influences have no proper place in this land "conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

If asked, therefore, to declare the policy of the United States in this period of peculiar international stress, we would affirm—

First, that as this Nation is dedicated to the attainment and perpetuation of human freedom, the Government and the people of this Nation regard it as their responsibility to speak out, in the name of liberty and the dignity of humanity, against all forms of persecution and oppression, wherever they may appear and whatever forms they may take; and

Second, that this Nation, the gift to us of the sacrifices and blood and toil of our fathers who thought no price too high to pay for liberty, intends to preserve here a democracy so strong that it will provide an impregnable home of freedom for ourselves and our children, while it continues to hold aloft its historic symbol of hope and promise for the vision and inspiration of the liberty-loving of all mankind.

Above all, the question for the American people is not "Do you want war?" No one in his right mind would answer that question save only to reply with a thunderous "No." Such a question itself begs the question. "Do you want liberty?" "Do you want freedom of conscience?" "Do you want to preserve American ideals of individual and religious liberty?" And "Do you care deeply enough for these blessings to defend them, to fight for them, if necessary to die fighting for them?" These are the real questions, answers to which the American people are not even in the shadow of a doubt. For is there an American "with soul so dead" who, with our priceless liberties in peril, would not cry out with Nathan Hale, "I regret I have but one life to give to my country"?

Upon application by an employer, the competent authority may, after consultation with the organisations of employers and workers concerned where such exist, grant an allowance of overtime for specified classes of persons in exceptional cases in which overtime on one or more operations is necessary in order to enable the workers engaged in subsequent operations in the same undertaking to be employed up to the authorised limits of hours.

2. The competent authority shall determine, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned where such exist, the maximum number of hours of overtime which may be worked in virtue of paragraph 1 of this Article, so however that no such allowance shall permit of any person being employed for more than sixty hours of such overtime in any year or for more than four hours of such overtime in any week.

3. Overtime worked in virtue of this Article shall be remunerated at not less than one-and-a-quarter times the normal rate.

ARTICLE 9

1. The competent authority may permit the limits of hours authorised by the preceding Articles to be exceeded subject to the conditions that—

(a) all time worked in virtue of this Article shall be regarded as overtime and shall be remunerated at not less than one-and-a-quarter times the normal rate; and
(b) no person shall be employed in virtue of this Article for more than seventy-five hours of overtime in any year.

ARTICLE 15

In the event of the Conference adopting a further Convention determining such modifications of the provisions of this Convention as may be required to meet the case of countries to which Article 19, paragraph 3, of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation applies, this Convention and the aforesaid further Convention shall be deemed to form one Convention.

ARTICLE 16

The formal ratifications of this Convention shall be communicated to the Secretary-General of the League of Nations for registration.

ARTICLE 17

1. This Convention shall be binding only upon those Members of the International Labour Organisation whose ratifications have been registered with the Secretary-General.

Such denunciation shall not take effect until one year after the date on which it is registered.

2. Each Member which has ratified this Convention and which does not, within the year following the expiration of the period of ten years mentioned in the preceding paragraph, exercise the right of denunciation provided for in this Article, will be bound for another period of ten years and, thereafter, may denounce this Convention at the expiration of each period of ten years under the terms provided for in this Article.

ARTICLE 20

At the expiration of each period of ten years after the coming into force of this Convention, the Governing Body of the International Labour Office shall present to the General Conference a report on the working of this Convention and shall consider the desirability of placing on the Agenda of the Conference the question of its revision in whole or in part.

ARTICLE 21

1. Should the Conference adopt a new Convention revising this Convention in whole or in part, then, unless the new Convention otherwise provides,

(a) the ratification by a Member of the new revising Convention shall ipso jure involve the immediate denunciation of this Convention, notwithstanding the provisions of Article 19 above, if and when the new revising Convention shall have come into force;
(b) as from the date when the new revising Convention comes into force this Convention shall cease to be open to ratification by the Members.

2. This Convention shall in any case remain in force in its actual form and content for those Members which have ratified it but have not ratified the revising Convention.

ARTICLE 22

The French and English texts of this Convention shall both be authentic.

The foregoing is the authentic text of the Draft Convention duly adopted by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation during its Twenty-third Session which was held at Geneva and declared closed the 23rd day of June 1937.

Desirous of providing for emergency regulation of the level of Rainy Lake and of the level of other boundary waters in the Rainy Lake watershed, in such a way as to protect the interests of the inhabitants of the United States of America and Canada, and,

Accepting as a basis of agreement the following recommendations made by the International Joint Commission in its final report dated May 1, 1934, on the Reference concerning Rainy Lake and the boundary waters flowing into and from that like, and particularly in answer to question 2 of that Reference, namely,

"that it would be wise and in the public interest that the Commission be clothed with power to determine when unusual or extraordinary conditions exist throughout the watershed, whether by reason of high or low water, and that it be empowered to adopt such measures of control as to it may seem proper with respect to existing dams at Kettle Falls and International Falls, as well as any future dams or works, in the event of the Commission determining that such unusual or extraordinary conditions exist."

Have resolved to conclude a convention for that purpose and have accordingly named as their plenipotentiaries:—

His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, for Canada:

Who, after having communicated to each other their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

The International Joint Commission, established pursuant to the provisions of the treaty signed at Washington on the 11th day of January 1909, relating to questions arising between the United States of America and Canada, is hereby clothed with power to determine when emergency conditions exist in the Rainy Lake watershed, whether by reason of high or low water, and the Commission is hereby empowered to adopt such measures of control as to it may seem proper with respect to existing dams at Kettle Falls and International Falls, as well as with respect to any existing or future dams or works in boundary waters of the Rainy Lake watershed, in the event the Commission shall determine that such emergency conditions exist.

ARTICLE II

This convention shall be ratified in accordance with the constitutional forms of the Contracting Parties and shall take effect immediately upon the exchange of ratifications which shall take place at Ottawa as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the undersigned plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate at Ottawa this fifteenth day of September A. D. 1938.

[Executive K, 76th Cong., 1st sess.]

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Sweden, being desirous of avoiding double taxation and of establishing rules of reciprocal administrative assistance in the case of income and other taxes, have decided to conclude a Convention and for that purpose have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:
Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State of the United States of America; and His Majesty the King of Sweden:
W. Boström, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington; who, having communicated to one another their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:

ARTICLE I

The taxes referred to in this Convention are:

(a) In the case of the United States of America:

(1) The Federal income taxes, including surtaxes and excess-profits taxes.

(2) The Federal capital stock tax.

(b) In the case of Sweden:

(1) The National income and property tax, including surtax.

(2) The National special property tax.

(3) The communal income tax.

It is mutually agreed that the present Convention shall also apply to any other or additional taxes imposed by either contracting State, subsequent to the date of signature of this Convention, upon substantially the same bases as the taxes enumerated herein.

The benefits of this Convention shall accrue only to citizens and residents of the United States of America, to citizens and residents of Sweden and to United States or Swedish corporations and other entities.

ARTICLE II

An enterprise of one of the contracting States is not subject to taxation by the other contracting State in respect of its industrial and commercial profits except in respect of such profits allocable to its permanent establishment in the latter State. The income thus taxed in the latter State shall be exempt from taxation in the former State.

No account shall be taken, in determining the tax in one of the contracting States, of the mere purchase of merchandise effected therein by an enterprise of the other State.

The competent authorities of the two contracting States may lay down rules by agreement for the apportionment of industrial and commercial profits.

ARTICLE III

When an enterprise of one of the contracting States, by reason of its participation in the management or capital of an enterprise of the other contracting State, makes or imposes on the latter in their commercial or financial relations conditions different from those which would be made with an independent enterprise, any profits which should normally have appeared in the balance sheet of the latter enterprise but which have been in this manner diverted to the former enterprise may, subject to applicable measures of appeal, be incorporated in the taxable profits of the latter enterprise. In such case consequent rectifications may be made in the accounts of the former enterprise.

ARTICLE IV

Income which an enterprise of one of the contracting States derives from the operation of ships or aircraft registered in that State is taxable only in the State in which registered. Income derived by such an enterprise from the operation of ships or aircraft not so registered shall be subject to the provisions of Article II.

ARTICLE V

Income of whatever nature derived from real property, including gains derived from the sale of such property, but not including interest from mortgages or bonds secured by real property, shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which the real property is situated.

ARTICLE VI

Royalties from real property or in respect of the operation of mines, quarries, or other natural resources shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which such property, mines, quarries, or other natural resources are situated.

Other royalties and amounts derived from within one of the contracting States by a resident or by a corporation or other entity of the other contracting State as consideration for the right to use copyrights, patents, secret processes and formulas, trade-marks and other analogous rights, shall be exempt from taxation in the former State.

ARTICLE VII

1. Dividends shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which the shareholder is resident or, if the shareholder is a corporation or other entity, in the contracting State in which such corporation or other entity is created or organized; provided, however, that each contracting State reserves the right to collect and retain (subject to applicable provisions of its revenue laws) the taxes which, under its revenue laws, are deductible at the source, but not in excess of 10 per centum of the amount of such dividends. For the purposes of this Article the National income and property tax imposed by Sweden shall be deemed to be a tax deducted at the source.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of Article XXII of this Convention, the provisions of this Article may be terminated by either of the contracting States at the end of two years from the date upon which this Convention enters into force or at any time thereafter, provided at least six months' prior notice of termination is given, such termination to become effective on the first day of January following the expiration of such six-month period. In the event the provisions of this Article are terminated, the provisions of—

(1) Article XIII (2), in so far as they relate to the special property tax imposed by Sweden upon shares in a corporation;

(2) Article XIV (b) (2), relating to the allowance of an additional deduction from taxes on dividends; and

(3) Article XVI, in so far as they relate to exchange of information with respect to dividends, will likewise terminate.

ARTICLE VIII

Interest on bonds, notes, or loans shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which the recipient of such interest is a resident or, in the case of a corporation or other entity, in the State in which the corporation or other entity is created or organized; provided, however, that each contracting State reserves the right to collect and retain (subject to applicable provisions of its revenue laws) the taxes which, under its revenue laws, are deductible at the source.

ARTICLE IX

Gains derived in one of the contracting States from the sale or exchange of capital assets by a resident or a corporation or other entity of the other contracting State shall be exempt from taxation in the former State, provided such resident or corporation or other entity has no permanent establishment in the former State.

ARTICLE X

Wages, salaries and similar compensation and pensions paid by one of the contracting States or by the political subdivisions or territories or possessions thereof to individuals residing in the other State shall be exempt from taxation in the latter State.

Private pensions and life annuities derived from within one of the contracting States and paid to individuals residing in the other contracting State shall be exempt from taxation in the former State.

ARTICLE XI

(a) Compensation for labor or personal services, including the practice of the liberal professions, shall be taxable only in the contracting State in which such services are rendered.

(b) The provisions of paragraph (a) are, however, subject to the following exceptions:

A resident of Sweden shall be exempt from United States tax upon compensation for labor or personal services performed within the United States of America if he falls within either of the following classifications:

1. He is temporarily present within the United States of America for a period or periods not exceeding a total of one hundred eighty days during the taxable year and his compensation is received for labor or personal services performed as an employee of, or under contract with, a resident or corporation or other entity of Sweden; or

2. He is temporarily present in the United States of America for a period or periods not exceeding a total of ninety days during the taxable year and the compensation received for such services does not exceed $3,000.00 in the aggregate.

In such cases Sweden reserves the right to the taxation of such income.

(c) The provisions of paragraph (b) of this Article shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to a resident of the United States of America deriving compensation for personal services performed within Sweden.

(d) The provisions of paragraphs (b) and (c) of this Article shall have no application to the professional earnings of such individuals as actors, artists, musicians and professional athletes.

(e) The provisions of this Article shall have no application to the income to which Article X relates.

ARTICLE XII

Students or business apprentices from one contracting State residing in the other contracting State exclusively for purposes of study or for acquiring business experience shall not be taxable by the latter State in respect of remittances received by them from within the former State for the purposes of their maintenance or studies.

ARTICLE XIII

In the case of taxes on property or increment of property the following provisions shall be applicable:

(1) If the property consists of:

(a) Immovable property and accessories appertaining thereto;

(b) Commercial or industrial enterprises, including maritime shipping and air transport undertakings;

the tax may be levied only in that contracting State which is entitled under the preceding Articles to tax the income from such property.

(2) In the case of all other forms of property, the tax may be levied only in that contracting State where the taxpayer has his residence or, in the case of a corporation or other entity, in the contracting State where the corporation or other entity has been created or organized.

The same principles shall apply to the United States capital stock tax with respect to corporations of Sweden having capital or other property in the United States of America.

ARTICLE XIV

It is agreed that double taxation shall be avoided in the following manner:

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Convention, the United States of America in determining the income and excess-profits taxes, including all surtaxes, of its citizens or residents or corporations, may include in the basis upon which such taxes are imposed all items of income taxable under the revenue laws of the United States of America as though this Convention had not come into effect. The United States of America shall, however, deduct the amount of the taxes specified in Article I (b)

(1) and (3) of this Convention or other like taxes from the income tax thus computed but not in excess of that portion of the income tax liability which the taxpayer's net income taxable in Sweden bears to his entire net income.

(b) (1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Convention, Sweden, in determining the graduated tax on income and property of its residents or corporations or other entities, may include in the basis upon which such tax is imposed all items of income and property subject to such tax under the taxation laws of Sweden. Sweden shall, however, deduct from the tax so calculated that portion of such tax liability which the taxpayer's income and property exempt from taxation in Sweden under the provisions of this Convention bears to his entire income and property.

(2) There shall also be allowed by Sweden from its national income and property tax a deduction offsetting the tax deducted at the source in the United States of America, amounting to not less than 5 per centum of the dividends from within the United States of America and subject to such tax in Sweden. It is agreed that the United States of America shall allow a similar credit against the United States income tax liability of citizens of Sweden residing in the United States of America.

ARTICLE XV

With a view to the more effective imposition of the taxes to which the present Convention relates, each of the contracting States undertakes, subject to reciprocity, to furnish such information in the matter of taxation, which the authorities of the State concerned have at their disposal or are in a position to obtain under their own law, as may be of use to the authorities of the other State in the assessment of the taxes in question and to lend assistance in the service of documents in connection therewith. Such information and correspondence relating to the subject matter of this Article shall be exchanged between the competent authorities of the contracting States in the ordinary course or on demand.

ARTICLE XVI

1. In accordance with the preceding Article, the competent authorities of the United States of America shall forward to the competent authorities of Sweden as soon as practicable after the close of each calendar year the following information relating to such calendar year.

(a) The names and addresses of all addressees within Sweden deriving from sources within the United States of America dividends, interest, royalties, pensions, annuities, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical income, showing the amount of such income with respect to each addressee;

(b) Any particulars which the competent United States authorities may obtain from banks, savings banks or other similar institutions concerning assets belonging to individuals resident in Sweden or to Swedish corporations or other entities;

(c) Any particulars which the competent United States authorities may obtain from inventories in the case of property passing on death concerning debts contracted with individuals resident in Sweden or Swedish corporations or other entities.

2. The competent authorities of Sweden shall forward to the competent authorities of the United States of America as soon as practicable after the close of each calendar year the following information relating to such calendar year.

(a) The particulars contained in the forms delivered to the Swedish authorities in connection with the payment to individuals or corporations or other entities whose addresses are within the United States of America of dividends on shares in a corporation or participation certificates in cooperative societies, and interest on bonds or other similar securities;

(b) The particulars contained in permits accorded to individuals resident in the United States of America or to United States corporations or other entities to enable them to acquire for business purposes immovable property situated in Sweden;

(c) Any particulars which the central Swedish authorities may obtain from banks, savings banks, or other similar institutions concerning assets belonging to individuals resident in the United States of America or to United States corporations or other entities;

(d) Any particulars which the central Swedish authorities may obtain from inventories in the case of property passing on death, concerning debts contracted with individuals resident in the United States of America, or United States corporations or other entities;

(e) A list of the names and addresses of all United States citizens resident in the United States of America who have made declarations to the Central Committee in Stockholm in charge of the taxation of taxpayers not resident in Sweden for purposes of the Swedish tax on income and property;

(f) Particulars concerning annuities and pensions, public or private, paid to individuals resident in the United States of America.

ARTICLE XVII

Each contracting State undertakes, in the case of citizens or corporations or other entities of the other contracting State, to lend assistance and support in the collection of the taxes to which the present Convention relates, together with interest, costs, and additions to the taxes and fines not being of a penal character. The contracting State making such collections shall be responsible to the other contracting State for the sums thus collected.

In the case of applications for enforcement of taxes, revenue claims of each of the contracting States which have been finally determined shall be accepted for enforcement by the other contracting State and collected in that State in accordance with the laws applicable to the enforcement and collection of its own taxes. The State to which application is made shall not be required to enforce executory measures for which there is no provision in the law of the State making the application.

The applications shall be accompanied by such documents as are required by the laws of the State making the application to establish that the taxes have been finally determined.

If the revenue claim has not been finally determined the State to which application is made may, at the request of the other contracting State, take such measures of conservancy as are authorized by the revenue laws of the former State.

ARTICLE XVIII

The competent authority of each of the contracting States shall be entitled to obtain, through diplomatic channels, from the competent authority of the other contracting State, particulars in concrete cases relative to the application to citizens or to corporations or other entities of the former State, of the taxes to which the present Convention relates. With respect to particulars in other cases, the competent authority of each of the contracting States will give consideration to requests from the competent authority of the other contracting State.

ARTICLE XIX

In no case shall the provisions of Article XVII, relating to mutual assistance in the collection of taxes, or of Article XVIII, relating to particulars in concrete cases, be construed so as to impose upon either of the contracting States the obligation

(1) to carry out administrative measures at variance with the regulations and practice of either contracting State, or

(2) to supply particulars which are not procurable under its own legislation or that of the State making application.

The State to which application is made for information or assistance shall comply as soon as possible with the request addressed to it. Nevertheless, such State may refuse to comply with the request for reasons of public policy or if compliance would involve violation of a business, industrial or trade secret or practice. In such case it shall inform, as soon as possible, the State making the application.

ARTICLE XX

Where a taxpayer shows proof that the action of the revenue authorities of the contracting States has resulted in double taxation in his case in respect of any of the taxes to which the present Convention relates, he shall be entitled to lodge a claim with the State of which he is a citizen or, if he is not a citizen of either of the contracting States, with the State of which he is a resident, or, if the taxpayer is a corporation or other entity, with the State in which it is created or organized. Should the claim be upheld, the competent authority of such State may come to an agreement with the competent authority of the other State with a view to equitable avoidance of the double taxation in question.

ARTICLE XXI

The competent authorities of the two contracting States may prescribe regulations necessary to interpret and carry out the provisions of this Convention. With respect to the provisions of this Convention relating to exchange of information, service of documents and mutual assistance in the collection of taxes, such authorities may, by common agreement, prescribe rules concerning matters of procedure, forms of application and replies thereto, conversion of currency, disposition of amounts collected, minimum amounts subject to collection and related matters.

ARTICLE XXII

The present Convention shall be ratified, in the case of the United States of America, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and in the case of Sweden, by His Majesty the King, with the consent of the Riksdag. The ratifications shall be exchanged at Stockholm.

This Convention shall become effective on the first day of January following the exchange of the instruments of ratification and shall apply to income realized and property held on or after that date. The Convention shall remain in force for a period of five years and indefinitely thereafter but may be terminated by either contracting State at the end of the five-year period or at any time thereafter, provided at least six months' prior notice of termination has been given, the termination to become effective on the first day of January following the expiration of the six-month period.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this Convention and have affixed their seals hereto.

Done in duplicate, in the English and Swedish languages, both authentic, at Washington, this twenty-third day of March, nineteen hundred and thirty-nine.

For His Majesty the King of Sweden:

PROTOCOL

At the moment of signing the Convention for the avoidance of double taxation, and the establishment of rules of reciprocal administrative assistance in the case of income and other taxes, this day concluded between the United States of America and Sweden, the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have agreed that the following provisions shall form an integral part of the Convention:

1. As used in this Convention:

(a) The term "permanent establishment" includes branches, mines and oil wells, plantations, factories, workshops, warehouses, offices, agencies, installations, and other fixed places of business of an enterprise but does not include the casual or temporary use of merely storage facilities. A permanent establishment of a subsidiary corporation shall not be deemed to be a permanent establishment of the parent corporation. When an enterprise of one of the contracting States carries on business in the other State through an employee or agent, established there, who has general authority to contract for his employer or principal, it shall be deemed to have a permanent establishment in the latter State. But the fact that an enterprise of one of the contracting States has business dealings in the other State through a bona fide commission agent, broker or custodian shall not be held to mean that such enterprise has a permanent establishment in the latter State.

(b) The term "enterprise" includes every form of undertaking whether carried on by an individual, partnership, corporation, or any other entity.

(c) The term "enterprise of one of the contracting States" means, as the case may be, "United States enterprise" or "Swedish enterprise".

(d) The term "United States enterprise" means an enterprise carried on in the United States of America by a resident of the United States of America or by a United States corporation or other entity; the term "United States corporation or other entity" means a partnership, corporation or other entity created or organized in the United States of America or under the law of the United States of America or of any State or Territory of the United States of America.

(e) The term "Swedish enterprise" is defined in the same manner, mutatis mutandis, as the term "United States enterprise".

2. The term "corporation" includes associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies.

3. A citizen of one of the contracting States not residing in either shall be deemed, for the purpose of this Convention, to be a resident of the contracting State of which he is a citizen.

When doubt arises with respect to residence or with respect to the taxable status of corporations or other entities, the competent authorities of the two contracting States may settle the question by mutual agreement.

4. The provisions of Swedish law concerning the taxation of the undivided estates of deceased persons shall not apply where the beneficiaries are directly liable to taxation in the United States of America.

5. The term "life annuities" referred to in Article X of this Convention means a stated sum payable periodically at stated times during life, or during a specified number of years, under an obligation to make the payments in consideration of a gross sum paid for such obligation.

6. The Swedish so-called "fees tax" (bevillningsavgift för vissa offentliga föreställningar) based on gross income in so far as it affects such individuals as actors, artists, musicians and professional athletes shall be deemed to be an income tax for the purposes of Article XIV (a).

The credit for taxes provided in Article XIV shall have no application to taxes deducted at the source from dividends and interest except to the extent provided in paragraph (b) (2) of that Article.

In the application of the provisions of this Convention the benefits of section 131 of the United States Revenue Act of 1938, relating to credits for foreign taxes, shall be accorded, but the credit provided for in Article XIV (a) shall not extend to United States excess-profits taxes nor to the surtax imposed on personal holding companies.

7. Citizens of each of the contracting States residing within the other contracting State shall not be subjected in the latter State to other or higher taxes than are imposed upon the citizens of such latter State.

8. The provisions of this Convention shall not be construed to deny or affect in any manner the right of diplomatic and consular officers to other or additional exemptions now enjoyed or which may hereafter be granted to such officers, nor to deny to either of the contracting States the right to subject to taxation its own diplomatic and consular officers.

9. The provisions of the present Convention shall not be construed to restrict in any manner any exemption, deduction, credit or other allowance accorded by the laws of one of the contracting States in the determination of the tax imposed by such State.

10. In the administration of the provisions of this Convention relating to exchange of information, service of documents, and mutual assistance in collection of taxes, fees and costs incurred in the ordinary course shall be borne by the State to which application is made but extraordinary costs incident to special forms of procedure shall be borne by the applying State.

11. Documents and other communications or information contained therein, transmitted under the provisions of this Convention by one of the contracting States to the other contracting State shall not be published, revealed or disclosed to any person except to the extent permitted under the laws of the latter State with respect to similar documents, communications or information.

12. As used with respect to revenue claims in Article XVII of this Convention the term "finally determined" shall be deemed to mean:

(a) In the case of Sweden, claims which have been finally established, even though still open to revision by exceptional procedure;

(b) In the case of the United States of America, claims which are no longer appealable, or which have been determined by decision of a competent tribunal, which decision has become final.

13. A used in this Convention the term "competent authority" or "competent authorities" means, in the case of the United States of America, the Secretary of the Treasury and in the case of Sweden, the Finance Ministry.

14. The term "United States of America" as used in this Convention in a geographical sense includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

15. Should any difficulty or doubt arise as to the interpretation or application of the present Convention, or its relationship to Conventions between one of the contracting States and any other State, the competent authorities of the contracting States may settle the question by mutual agreement.

16. The present Convention and Protocol shall not be deemed to affect the exchange of notes between the United States of America and Sweden providing relief from double income taxation on shipping profits, signed March 31, 1938.

Done at Washington, this twenty-third day of March, nineteen hundred and thirty-nine.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

DRAFT CONVENTION (No. 63) CONCERNING STATISTICS OF WAGES AND HOURS OF WORK IN THE PRINCIPAL MINING AND MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES, INCLUDING BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTION, AND IN AGRICULTURE

The General Conference of the International Labour Organisation,

Having been convened at Geneva by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, and having met in its Twenty-fourth Session on 2 June 1938, and

Having decided upon the adoption of certain proposals with regard to statistics of wages and hours of work in the principal mining and manufacturing industries, including building and construction, and in agriculture, which is the sixth item on the agenda of the Session, and

Having determined that these proposals shall take the form of a Draft International Convention, and

Having determined that, although it is desirable that all Members of the Organisation should compile statistics of average earnings and of hours actually worked which comply with the requirements of Part II of this Convention, it is nevertheless expedient that the Convention should be open to ratification by Members which are not in a position to comply with the requirements of that Part, adopts, this twentieth day of June of the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-eight the following Draft Convention which may be cited as the Convention concerning Statistics of Wages and Hours of Work, 1938:

PART I.—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Article 1.

Each Member of the International Labour Organisation which ratifies this Convention undertakes that:

(a) it will compile as required by this Convention statistics relating to wages and hours of work;

(b) it will publish the data compiled in pursuance of this Convention as promptly as possible and will endeavor to publish data collected at quarterly or more frequent intervals during the succeeding quarter and to publish data collected at intervals of six or twelve months during the succeeding six or twelve months respectively; and

(c) it will communicate the data compiled in pursuance of this Convention to the International Labour Office at the earliest possible date.

Article 2.

1. Any Member which ratifies this Convention may, by a declaration appended to its ratification, exclude from its acceptance of the Convention:

(a) any one of Parts II, III, or IV; or

(b) Parts II and IV; or

(c) Parts III and IV.

2. Any Member which has made such a declaration may at any time cancel that declaration by a subsequent declaration.

3. Every Member for which a declaration made under paragraph 1 of this Article is in force shall indicate each year in its annual report upon the application of this Convention the extent to which any progress has been made with a view to the application of the Part or Parts of the Convention excluded from its acceptance.

Article 3.

Nothing in this Convention imposes any obligation to publish or to reveal particulars which would result in the disclosure of information relating to any individual undertaking or establishment.

Article 4.

1. Each Member which ratifies this Convention undertakes that its competent statistical authority shall, unless it has already obtained the information in some other way, make enquiries relating either to all, or to a representative part, of the wage earners concerned, in order to obtain the information required for the purpose of the statistics which it has undertaken to compile in accordance with this Convention.

2. Nothing in this Convention shall be interpreted as requiring any Member to compile statistics in cases in which, after enquiries made in the manner required by paragraph 1 of this Article, it is found impracticable to obtain the necessary information without the exercise of compulsory powers.

PART II.—STATISTICS OF AVERAGE EARNINGS AND OF HOURS ACTUALLY WORKED IN MINING AND MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

Article 5.

1. Statistics of average earnings and of hours actually worked shall be compiled for wage earners employed in each of the principal mining and manufacturing industries, including building and construction.

2. The statistics of average earnings and of hours actually worked shall be compiled on the basis of data relating either to all establishments and wage earners or to a representative sample of establishments and wage earners.

3. The statistics of average earnings and of hours actually worked shall:

(a) give separate figures for each of the principal industries; and

(b) indicate briefly the scope of the industries or branches of industry for which figures are given.

Article 6.

The statistics of average earnings shall include:

(a) all cash payments and bonuses received from the employer by the persons employed;

(b) contributions such as social insurance contributions payable by the employed persons and deducted by the employer; and

(c) taxes payable by the employed persons to a public authority and deducted by the employer.

Article 7.

In the case of countries and industries in which allowances in kind, for example in the form of free or cheap housing, food or fuel, form a substantial part of the total remuneration of the wage earners employed, the statistics of average earnings shall be supplemented by particulars of such allowances, together with estimates, so far as practicable, of their money value.

Article 8.

The statistics of average earnings shall be supplemented, so far as practicable, by indications as to the average amount of any family allowances per person employed in the period to which the statistics relate.

Article 9.

1. The statistics of average earnings shall relate to average earnings per hour, day, week or other customary period.

2. Where the statistics of average earnings relate to average earnings per day, week or other customary period, the statistics of actual hours shall relate to the same period.

Article 10.

1. The statistics of average earnings and of hours actually worked, referred to in Article 9, shall be compiled once every year and where possible at shorter intervals.

2. Once every three years and where possible at shorter intervals the statistics of average earnings and, so far as practicable, the statistics of hours actually worked shall be supplemented by separate figures for each sex and for adults and juveniles; provided that it shall not be necessary to compile these separate figures in the case of industries in which all but an insignificant number of the wage earners belong to the same sex or age group, or to compile the separate figures of hours actually worked for males and females, or for adults and juveniles, in the case of industries in which the normal hours of work do not vary by sex or age.

Article 11.

Where the statistics of average earnings and of hours actually worked relate not to the whole country but to certain districts, towns or industrial centres, these districts, towns or centres shall, so far as practicable, be indicated.

Article 12.

1. Index numbers showing the general movement of earnings per hour and where possible per day, week or other customary period shall be compiled at as frequent and as regular intervals as possible on the basis of the statistics compiled in pursuance of this part of this Convention.

2. In compiling such index numbers due account shall be taken, inter alia, of the relative importance of the different industries.

3. In publishing such index numbers indications shall be given as to the methods employed in their construction.

PART III.—STATISTICS OF TIME RATES OF WAGES AND OF NORMAL HOURS OF WORK IN MINING AND MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

Article 13.

Statistics of time rates of wages and of normal hours of work of wage earners shall be compiled for a representative selection of the principal mining and manufacturing industries, including building and construction.

Article 14.

1. The statistics of time rates of wages and of normal hours of work shall show the rates and hours;

(a) fixed by or in pursuance of laws or regulations, collective agreements or arbitral awards;

(b) ascertained from organisations of employers and workers, from joint bodies, or from other appropriate sources of information, in cases where rates and hours are not fixed by or in pursance of laws or regulations, collective agreements or arbitral awards.

2. The statistics of time rates of wages and of normal hours of work shall indicate the nature and source of the information from which they have been compiled and whether it relates to rates or hours fixed by or in pursuance of laws or regulations, collective agreements or arbitral awards, or to rates or hours fixed by arrangements between employers and wage earners individually.

3. When rates of wages are described as minimum (other than statutory minimum) rates, standard rates, typical rates, or prevailing rates, or by similar terms, the terms used shall be explained.

4. "Normal hours of work", where not fixed by or in pursuance of laws or regulations, collective agreements or arbitral awards, shall be taken as meaning the number of hours, per day, week or other period, in excess of which any time worked is remunerated at overtime rates or forms an exception to the rules or custom of the establishment relating to the classes of wage earners concerned.

Article 15.

1. The statistics of time rates of wages and of normal hours of work shall give:

(a) at intervals of not more than three years, separate figures for the principal occupations in a wide and representative selection of the different industries; and

(b) at least once a year, and if possible at shorter intervals, separate figures for the main occupations in the most important of these industries.

2. The data relating to time rates of wages and of normal hours of work shall be presented, so far as practicable, on the basis of the same occupational classification.

3. Where the sources of information from which the statistics are compiled do not indicate the separate occupations to which the rates or hours apply, but fix varying rates of wages or hours of work for other categories of workers (such as skilled workers, semi-skilled workers and unskilled workers) or fix normal hours of work by classes of undertakings or branches of undertakings, the separate figures shall be given according to these distinctions.

4. Where the categories of workers for which figures are given are not separate occupations, the scope of each category shall, in so far as the necessary particulars are given in the sources of information from which the statistics are compiled, be indicated.

Article 16.

Where the statistics of time rates do not give the rates per hour but give rates per day, week, or other customary period:

(a) the statistics of normal hours of work shall relate to the same period; and

(b) the Member shall communicate to the International Labour Office any information appropriate for the purpose of calculating the rates per hour.

Article 17.

Where the sources of information from which the statistics are compiled give separate particulars classified by sex and age, the statistics of time rates of wages and of normal hours of work shall give separate figures for each sex and for adults and juveniles.

Article 18.

Where the statistics of time rates of wages and of normal hours of work relate not to the whole country but to certain districts, towns or industrial centres, these districts, towns or centres shall, so far as practicable, be indicated.

Article 19.

Where the sources of information from which the statistics of time rates and of normal hours of work are compiled contain such particulars, the statistics shall at intervals not exceeding three years indicate:

(a) the scale of any payment for holidays;

(b) the scale of any family allowances;

(c) the rates or percentage additions to normal rates paid for overtime; and

(d) the amount of overtime permitted.

Article 20.

In the case of countries and industries in which allowances in kind, for example in the form of free and cheap housing, food or fuel, form a substantial part of the total remuneration of the wage earners employed, the statistics of time rates of wages shall be supplemented by particulars of such allowances, together with estimates, so far as practicable, of their money value.

Article 21.

1. Annual index numbers showing the general movement of rates of wages per hour or per week shall be compiled on the basis of the statistics compiled in pursuance of this Part of this Convention, supplemented, where necessary, by any other relevant information which may be available (for example, particulars as to changes in piece-work rates of wages).

2. Where only an index number of rates of wages per hour or only an index number of rates of wages per week is compiled, there shall be compiled an index number of changes in normal hours of work constructed on the same basis.

3. In compiling such index numbers due account shall be taken, inter alia, of the relative importance of the different industries.

4. In publishing such index numbers indications shall be given as to the methods employed in their construction.

PART IV.—STATISTICS OF WAGES AND HOURS OF WORK IN AGRICULTURE.

Article 22.

1. Statistics of wages shall be compiled in respect of wage earners engaged in agriculture.

2. The statistics of wages in agriculture shall:
   (a) be compiled at intervals not exceeding two years;
   (b) give separate figures for each of the principal districts; and
   (c) indicate the nature of the allowances in kind (including housing), if any, by which money wages are supplemented, and, if possible, an estimate of the money value of such allowances.

3. The statistics of wages in agriculture shall be supplemented by indications as to:
   (a) the categories of agricultural wage earners to which the statistics relate;
   (b) the nature and source of the information from which they have been compiled;
   (c) the methods employed in their compilation; and
   (d) so far as practicable, the normal hours of work of the wage earners concerned.

PART V.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Article 23.

1. Any Member of the territory of which includes large areas in respect of which, by reason of the difficulty of creating the necessary administrative organisation and the sparseness of the population or the stage of economic development of the area, it is impracticable to compile statistics complying with the requirements of this Convention may exclude such areas from the application of this Convention in whole or in part.

2. Each Member shall indicate in its first annual report upon the application of this Convention submitted under Article 22 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organisation any areas in respect of which it proposes to have recourse to the provisions of this Article and no Member shall, after the date of its first annual report, have recourse to the provisions of this Article except in respect of areas so indicated.

3. Each Member having recourse to the provisions of the present Article shall indicate in subsequent annual reports any areas in respect of which it renounces the right to have recourse to the provisions of this Article.

Article 24.

1. The Governing Body of the International Labour Office may, after taking such technical advice as it may deem appropriate, communicate to the Members of the Organization proposals for improving and amplifying the statistics compiled in pursuance to this Convention or for promoting their comparability.

2. Each Member ratifying this Convention undertakes that it will:
   (a) submit for the consideration of its competent statistical authority any such proposals communicated to it by the Governing Body;
   (b) indicate in its annual report upon the application of the Convention the extent to which it has given effect to such proposals.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 572) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical materials essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and to encourage, as far as possible, the further development of strategic and critical materials within the United States for common defense," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. SCHWARTZ, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FOUR YEARS OF RURAL ELECTRIFICATION—THREE PICTURES OF A FARM HOME

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, today is the fourth anniversary of the birth of the Rural Electrification Administration.

I dare say that no other organization connected with this Government has ever rendered so great a service to the American farmers, in so short a period of time, as has the Rural Electrification Administration.

It has already constructed, or supplied the loans with which to construct, 99,000 miles of rural power lines. Its borrowers are serving 225,000 consumers—over 1,000,000 people—who have heretofore been without the use of any electricity at all.

When all the funds for the current fiscal year and for past years have been expended and the lines completed and energized, the rural power lines constructed through the R. E. A. will amount to 230,000 miles, bringing electricity to over 500,000 consumers, or more than two and one-half million people in the rural areas who heretofore have not enjoyed the use of electricity.

This program is rebuilding America, and making it a better place in which to live.

Let me draw for you if I may, or if I can, three pictures of a farm home:

THREE PICTURES OF A FARM HOME

In 1919 a young man, a veteran of the World War, who had just been discharged from the service, left home to seek employment in an industrial city. As he walked out of the gate he turned to take a last, long, lingering look at the old homestead—one of the many old, substantial farm homes along the highway on which he lived.

From these homes, which had been built by the pioneers, had come many of the great men and great women of the State and Nation.

From this one his grandfather and two brothers had gone to the Civil War. Two of them never returned. Here his mother had been born and reared, and from here he had gone to the World War.

The lands were comparatively rich and produced abundantly, and their occupants had enjoyed a reasonable measure of prosperity, as well as a degree of contentment unsurpassed for a rural section. Crops had been good for the last few years and farm prices reasonable.

He really hated to leave, but the prices of farm products had begun to decline rapidly and the large industries in the congested centers were calling for men. Besides he had reached the conclusion that if prices continued to decline there would be no inducement left for a young man to remain on the farm, especially in view of the fact that there were at that time few, if any, of the comforts and conveniences enjoyed by the people in the more congested centers.

He closed the gate and walked away.

In the late twenties there was a boom on the stock market and industries were running overtime. "Prosperity" was in the air. He thought everybody was prosperous—including the farmers. He decided to return to the old home for a visit and see how his people were getting along.

As he came down the old highway he found many of those magnificent old homes vacant. Their occupants had given up the struggle and, like himself, had gone to the city to seek employment. They presented a picture of what Shakespeare called "unfenced desolation."

He finally reached the one in which he was reared and which he had left 10 years before. He hardly recognized it. The house was vacant, the fences were gone, the fields were uncultivated. The barn was falling to decay, the doorsteps of the house were gone, and the veranda was caving in. The well shelter had disappeared, and even the rope and bucket were gone.

The yard and garden had grown up in weeds and bramble. He walked in through what had been the open gate and peered through the paneless windows into a room that once contained a happy fireside, and saw the rats and mice chasing each other across the vacant floor; while from the dying top of a shade tree in the yard in which the birds once sang and beneath which the children had played, a lonely crow looked out over the desolate landscape and solmenly croaked his mournful message to his mate.

He thought of Goldsmith's immortal lines:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.
> Princes and lords may flourish or may fade—
> A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
> But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
> When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

He realized that the farmers of this country were being destroyed; that in pampering industry and commerce at the expense of agriculture this Nation was grinding the seed corn of the Republic.

In the spring of 1939 he returned to the old home to see what changes, if any, had taken place.

As he traveled down the old highway he hardly recognized his surroundings. He first thought he was on the wrong road. The roads had been improved, houses had been remodeled and painted, the fences had been rebuilt, the land was in cultivation, and everything seemed to be in a state of unusual activity.

When he reached the old home in which he was reared, to his surprise it looked like a new place. The house had been remodeled and painted, the barn had been rebuilt, the fences restored, the yard was clean and planted in flowers, and the garden reminded him of the old days, except that it seemed to be unusually well advanced for the time of year.

A sister and her husband occupied the house and when he entered he was utterly surprised at the cheerful appearance of things. He knew that farm prices were low, and he wondered why, or how, they could enjoy such an apparent happiness and prosperity under existing conditions. While he was pondering this proposition the lights came on. This was perhaps the greatest surprise of all; it had never occurred to him during all the years he had lived here that there would ever be an electric light in the house.

His sister was cheerful, neatly dressed, and looked 10 years younger than she did when he had seen her last, 10 years before.

He asked her how it all happened.

"Oh," she said, "we have rural electrification throughout this whole section now. It has added new life to our community. People have remodeled, repainted, and reconditioned their homes, and many people have built new ones. Many old families who had moved away have come back, and some people are moving out from towns and cities and building modern homes on their lands."

"Do you mean to tell me that all these changes have been brought about merely by electric lights?" he inquired.

"Well, of course, the lights have something do with it," she replied, "but that is a very small part of the program. We now have electricity for all purposes, supplied to us at what they call the "yardstick" rates, set by the T. V. A.—you know that is what we call the Tennessee Valley Authority; it has not only provided rates to the people in the T. V. A. area but it has forced reduction of rates to people for hundreds of miles around and therefore helps us all.

"Through the Electric Home and Farm Authority we have been able to secure credit to purchase the appliances we need, and therefore have our home electrified throughout.

"Come with me, and I will show you what we have. I will turn this radio off first. There is no use to keep it going while there is no one in the room to hear it."

Even that was something new to him. He had never dreamed of seeing a radio on a farm during the old days. In response to his comment, she explained to him that the radio used very little electricity but added a great deal to the life of the home by bringing them the finest entertainment, the finest music, the news and market reports, and really kept them informed as to what was going on in the world.

As they advanced from room to room, and the lights were turned on, it occurred to him that the illumination was a great deal better than it had been in the flat where he had been living. She took him first into the kitchen and showed him her electric refrigerator, where the milk, butter, eggs, meats, vegetables and fruits, and so forth, were kept cool and fresh, and which supplied the ice for the entire family.

She showed him her electric range that had supplanted the old coal or wood stove. He asked what that large round thing over in the corner was. She explained to him that that was the hot-water tank.

"We now have hot and cold water for the kitchen and for the bathroom."

"Bathroom!" he inquired in surprise. "How did a bathroom ever get into this house, and how do you get water to it?"

"Oh," she said, "one of the small rooms upstairs had been made into a bathroom, which I will show you in a minute. As to getting water into it, we have an electric pump, with a small vacuum tank that maintains a regular pressure and furnishes running water for the house at all times. It also supplies water for the barn and to the stock in the pasture. This pump keeps the water at a certain pressure all the time and automatically cuts on and off as the pressure goes down or up. We also have a sprinkler system for the yard and garden that we use in case of a drought, and we sprout many of our vegetables with an electric hot bed. It does not take much electricity, but it pushes the vegetables forward and gives them about 2 or 3 months' start of the ones that are sprouted in the regular way. You know vegetables are usually slow in coming up because the ground is cold. When we get that ground properly heated they grow as rapidly almost as if it were midsummer.

"Here is my electric iron, and that thing over there is the electric dishwasher. I also have an electric churn, electric fans, an electric cream separator, as well as a vacuum cleaner that takes the place of the old-time mop with which we used to try to clean the floor.

"But I must take you out into what used to be the woodshed, where mother used to do the family washing, and show you my electric washing machine."

She explained the machine's operation in detail and showed how the clothes were placed in it, and the electricity turned on, and how that within a couple of hours they were as clean as if they had gone through a modern laundry, run through an electric wringer which was attached, and were hanging on the line.

"Isn't this a very costly method of washing clothes," he asked.

"No," she replied, "the electricity necessary to operate this machine and the wringer that goes with it for our family of five people costs only about $1 per year."

Glancing down across the field to the pasture, he said, "You have a beautiful herd of cows, but I don't see what keeps them from going out into that cornfield and eating up the crop."

"Oh," she said, "the fence keeps them back."

"Fence? I don't see any fence," he said. "All I see is one smooth wire, without any barbs on it."

"Oh," she said, "that is an electric fence; it is charged with a few volts of electricity; just enough to shock the cattle sufficiently to keep them from going near it again. It is controlled by a thermostat that goes off and on about once every half minute, so that if one should get a sufficient charge to stick to the wire, it will turn him loose. We also have one around our hog pasture. Once a hog sticks his nose into it, he gets his lesson and never touches it again. He seems to pass the word around and the other hogs take notice.

"I would like to go out and show you the lights in our barn and my husband's feed grinder and the water system that keeps fresh water in the trough for the cattle all the time, but my dinner is about done and I must go and put it on the table."

"About done? You mean you have to cook dinner yet?"

"No; my dinner was in the stove cooking when we were in the kitchen. I should have showed you. You understand that with an electric range we do not get all the heat we used to have to endure when we burned wood or coal. Housekeeping is no longer a drudgery; it is really a pleasure."

"What does all this cost you a month?" he asked.

"Oh, the cost is very small compared with the convenience we enjoy. I would say that it costs us less than we used to have to pay for wood or coal. When we do not use our electric heaters we have in the boys' rooms, the entire cost of electricity will only amount to about, we will say, a couple of dozen eggs a week. Besides, we stay at home more and probably save more money on gasoline and car repairs than our electric bill amounts to. In fact, our ice bill used to be about as much as our whole electric bill is now."

He stopped to ponder a moment. He thought of the old days and the drudgery his mother endured, burning up in a hot kitchen and bowing down over the washtub or boiling the clothes over a flaming fire in the summer heat. He could remember bringing in bark and wood to heat the old iron and seeing his mother lean over that hot iron hour after hour until it seemed she was tired enough to drop.

He remembered how he used to windlass water out of the old well in dry weather to water the thirsty cattle until it seemed as if they could drink the ocean dry. He remembered when he used to help his father with the stock in the old barn before day and after dark when there was no chance of a light. His father had tried using a lantern in the barn, but had abandoned it after a serious fire.

"You do not seem to be worried very much about the low price of farm products," he said.

"Oh, yes, we are. We know they are too low, but we are living in hope that they will be adjusted. We know they are far out of line with the prices of manufactured articles, but we meet that situation to some extent by producing more of the things we need at home, such as vegetables, chickens, meats, dairy products, and so forth. You understand we have a cooperative cold-storage plant in the community, and we can kill our meat at any time of the year without fear of losing any of it, and we can store our eggs in the summertime, when they are low in price, and keep them for better prices in the winter season.

"Then, too, I have an electric sewing machine on which I make a good many of the family clothes and save a little money in that way."

"You seem to be satisfied here," he said.

"Yes; we tried it in the city for several years, and, while my husband drew fairly good wages most of the time, we never had a home and were never able to save anything, nor were we at any time able to enjoy anything like the conveniences we now have. We are back here to stay. I would not leave it for the world.

"You remember when we were growing up, boys and girls always seemed to be in a hurry to get through school in order to get away from home. Children in this community now are just as anxious to get through school—and so are the ones who are away to college—not to get away from home, but to get back home."

He realized then that he was catching a glimpse of the future; getting his first vision of a new civilization, the electric age.

He had seen his first electrified farm.

Mr. Speaker, these pictures are not overdrawn; they do not reflect merely the iridescent dream of a power enthusiast; they are actual occurrences that have their counterpart in nearly every State in the Union.

LET US ELECTRIFY EVERY FARM HOME IN AMERICA

Last year I secured the adoption of an amendment to the relief bill providing for an additional $100,000,000 for the Rural Electrification Administration, to be allotted among the various States for loans for the construction of rural power lines. You will note that that fund is almost exhausted, and it will be entirely exhausted before the end of the fiscal year.

I regard this as one of the best services I have ever been able to render to the farmers of this Nation, for I realize that as a result probably a million people in the farm homes of this Nation will receive electricity who had never had an electric light in their homes.

This is just the beginning; we must keep this great program going until we take to the farmers in every nook and corner of this land the benefits of the greatest natural resource on earth, outside of the soil from which we live, and that is the electric power of the Nation. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Binghamton (N. Y.) Press.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PER CAPITA INDEBTEDNESS OF UNITED STATES

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, on the 8th day of January 1835 Andrew Jackson, then President of the United States, paid the last dollar of the national debt. He was one President of the United States who did not believe that a national debt was a national blessing. Twenty-two years later, in 1857, the per capita national debt—the debt for each man, woman, and child in the United States—was $1.01. Today that per capita debt is more than $285. That is a yardstick that you cannot expand or contract to serve any man's purpose, and it is a yardstick by which every Member of this House can measure the national debt for every township, village, city, and county in his congressional district and every congressional district in the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. In just a moment. I have prepared a statement showing the amount of the national debt proportionately for every township, city, village, and municipality in my congressional district, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD in connection with these remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, in 1857 the national debt of the United States was $28,701,375, less than one-half of Oakland County's proportionate share of the 1938 national debt, $60,297,372, and represented a per capita debt of $1.01, in contrast to a 1938 per capita debt of $285.43.

A billion-dollar national debt was first reached in 1863, midway in the Civil War period, and continued upward to $2,755,763,929 in 1866, with the per capita debt $77.69.

From 1867 to 1893, a period of 27 years, our public debt was gradually reduced and dropped below the billion-dollar mark to $968,218,841 in 1892 and $961,431,766 in 1893. In 1894 a period of gradual increase set in, reaching $1,436,700,704 in 1899. This was the peak following the Spanish-American War, and the per capita debt was $19.93.

From 1900 to 1916 our national debt remained close to the billion-dollar mark, varying between $1,263,416,913 and $1,132,357,095, and the per capita debt between $16.56 and $11.83. It is interesting to note that in 1916, the year before our participation in the World War, our national debt was $1,225,145,568, less than one-half what it was at the close of the Civil War.

At the close of the World War our national debt had been multiplied 20 times to $25,482,034,419 and a per capita debt of $240.09, the high point until $27,053,085,988 was reached in 1934. The indebtedness incurred during the World War years was reduced by more than $9,000,000,000 during the years 1920–30 to $16,185,308,299.

In recent years our national debt has increased as much as $4,844,217,530 in a single year and since 1932 the total increase has been nearly $18,000,000,000. On June 30, 1938, it exceeded $37,000,000,000 and by June 30, 1939, the Treasury Department estimates it will reach $41,131,502,010 and this will make the increase since 1932 approximately $22,000,000,000.

The following tables show the proportionate share of the 1938 national debt by townships, cities, and villages in my congressional district.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Michigan will tune in his radio next Tuesday morning I will tell him how he can contract that debt in proportion to the American people's incomes, by a reasonable controlled expansion of the currency.

Mr. DONDERO. I shall be delighted to do so.

Mr. RANKIN. Because with the contraction of the currency driving down commodity prices there is a proportionate increase in the dollar to the American people and a proportionate reduction of farm prices, as well as of the national income.

Mr. DONDERO. The way to contract that yardstick would be to stop spending and wasting public money. [Applause.]

COMPETITIVE BIDDING FOR PURCHASES BY UNITED STATES

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the law all government purchases of any consequence must be made by competitive bidding and the contract given to the lowest bidder, all things being equal. I am in receipt of certain information this morning which I believe this honorable body should be apprised of. On March 1 bids were opened for the purchase of five tractors by the Terrebonne Farms, Inc., at Shriever, La., under the Farm Security Administration. A bid was placed by H. B. Naquin, a local dealer selling Minneapolis-Moline tractors in that territory. Mr. Naquin has been in that territory a great many years and is highly respected as a citizen and as a businessman. When the bids were opened he was the low bidder, but the party that was awarded the contract secured the business at a price of $2,928.90 more than Mr. Naquin's bid for tractors of no better construction, no greater capacity, no better reputation. If this information is correct, and it comes from a reliable source, then there has been a positive violation of the law. We are entitled to know what Department or agency of Government is responsible. To that end I am today directing a letter to the Chief of the Procurement Division, United States Treasury Department, requesting an immediate investigation of this purchase, and if this information is found to be correct, the present contract be declared illegal and a contract entered into with the lowest bidder.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein at this point a letter which I received this morning from the Minneapolis-Moline Power Implement Co., also a copy of a letter directed to the Chief of the Procurement Division of the United States Treasury Department by Mr. H. B. Naquin, of Thibodaux, La.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., May 9, 1939.

Hon. OSCAR YOUNGDAHL,
The House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN YOUNGDAHL: I want to call your attention to an irregularity in the purchase of farm tractors by one of the Government agencies.

In March 1 bids were opened for the purchase of five tractors by the Terrebonne Farms, Inc., at Shriever, La., under the Farm Security Administration. A bid was placed by H. B. Naquin, dealer selling Minneapolis-Moline tractors in that territory. Mr. Naquin has been in that territory a great many years, and is highly regarded as one of the most competent agriculturists in the Sugar Belt. He has furnished many of our tractors and many implements manufactured by this company, as well as many special implements of his own construction, to a great many of the best farmers in that territory; as a matter of fact, he has both tractors and implements on farms adjoining the Terrebonne that have given satisfaction for many years. When the bids were opened he was low bidder, but the party that was awarded the contract secured the business at a price of $2,928.90 more than Mr. Naquin's bid for tractors of no better construction, no greater capacity, no better reputation.

Mr. Naquin wrote a letter to the Chief of the Procurement Division of the United States Treasury Department and sent copies of same to the President of the United States, Henry Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, and the Department of Justice, and others. I am attaching a copy of Mr. Naquin's letter, which tells the story in detail. On receipt of this letter I corresponded further with Mr. Naquin, and in replying to my letter he did not say that he had any further advice or satisfaction.

When asked to bid to the Government on machinery of this kind it is our understanding that the award is to be made to the lowest responsible bidder. If that is not the intention, why does the Government ask for bids? Mr. Naquin, the dealer, is a respected citizen in his community. He pays his taxes and is entitled to fair treatment. We, as manufacturers, do likewise. We build honest machines and we do guarantee them to do the work for which they are sold. We do consider it an insult and an injustice when we are not treated fairly in connection with bids made to the Government.

By what right or authority does any agency, after taking bids on machines of this kind, have any discretion except to award to the low responsible bidder? We feel that this is a case that demands an investigation.

We feel that the machines that were delivered on this award should be returned and the award made to Mr. Naquin if investigation shows the facts to be as stated in his letter.

Respectfully,

MINNEAPOLIS-MOLINE POWER IMPLEMENT CO.,
GEORGE L. GILLETTE, Vice President.

THIBODAUX, LA., April 19, 1939.

CHIEF, PROCUREMENT DIVISION, UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: An investigation is requested and an explanation asked by the taxpayers whose moneys are disbursed by the Treasury Department as to the gross irregularities practiced on March 1, 10 a. m., in the awarding of bids for the purchase of five tractors by the Terrebonne Farms, Inc., at Schriever, La., under the Farm Security Administration.

The Treasury Department, whose duty it is, and which is pledged to safeguard expenditures of public funds, is being severely criticized and publicly charged with evasion of duty, "willful winking at," or inexcusable ignorance of graft, favoritism, etc., in this particular instance, known and condemned by all self-respecting citizens of this section, and this is simply another glaring example pointed out of what these Government agencies now pull off.

1. I and other leading citizens charge incompetency and lack of practical experience in selecting the most adaptable tractors for the purpose.

2. That my tractors are standard, modern, and are the equal of any on the market as to efficiency and economy of operation and upkeep, and that the implements supplied with the tractors are the most practical, being especially designed for use on cane, corn, potato, and truck farms, requiring such for our local types of land and specialized cultivation. The Terrebonne Farms, Inc., grow only cane, corn, potatoes, and truck.

3. My tractors are in use on adjoining plantations, where repeat orders have been placed, and are universally and successfully used throughout this section.

4. I am equipped to demonstrate, repair, and supply all parts here in Thibodaux—less than 3 miles from the Terrebonne Farms, Inc.

5. My bid met every specification in detail and was $2,928.90 less in aggregate than accepted bid.

WHERE, WHY, AND WHO GOT THE DIFFERENCE?

For references, I respectfully submit any and all citizens of this section whom you may contact.

Yours very truly,

H. B. NAQUIN.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF POLAR EXPLORATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing and requesting the President to accept the invitation of the Government of Norway to the Government of the United States to participate in an International Exhibition of Polar Exploration, which will be held at Bergen, Norway, in 1940, and authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $35,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses incident to such participation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 11, 1939.

THOMAS E. DEWEY

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to read a portion of a letter I received from Roundup, Mont.:

Out here we see a lot in the papers about Attorney Dewey and his accomplishments and nothing against him. Personally I think any good Republican from Pennsylvania, New York, or Ohio will carry Montana in 1940. I have no facts to back up my statement; all I have to go by is conversations with the general run of our population in this town. I remember in 1931 I wondered what was wrong with my capacity to think straight, and in 1935 I honestly thought I was on the way to the bughouse. But the New Deal is on the way out, even with the common laborer.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by a businessman from my own city on the subject of industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing his statement on H. R. 5643.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include in that extension a radio address I delivered the other evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the Chamber yesterday on roll call No. 68. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea." Also, I was absent on roll call No. 69. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

DISPLACEMENT OF LABOR BY MACHINES

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, when the last revenue bill was pending I endeavored to have an amendment attached which provided that the Treasury Department and other Government agencies should make an investigation to determine to what extent machinery had displaced the worker.

I did not succeed in my effort at that time. When the revenue bill reached the Senate the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] offered my amendment, and it was added to the bill, but the conferees eliminated the Clark amendment in conference. As I understand it, the conferees thought that such an amendment might be disturbing to business.

On January 5 of this year I introduced a joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 65, reading as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to conduct an investigation of the desirability and practicability of the imposition of a tax on the use of labor-saving and labor-displacing machinery and to report the conclusion of his investigation, together with any relevant and useful data obtained in connection therewith, to the Congress at the beginning of the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

In connection with such investigation the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to call on any other department, bureau, or agency of the Government for any information in their possession which may be pertinent to such investigation and the heads of such departments, bureaus, or agencies are hereby authorized and directed to furnish such information to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Why did I ask that this investigation be made by the Secretary of the Treasury? I am frank to say it was because the thought was in my mind that some day we are going to be required to seriously consider the advisability of taxing labor-saving and labor-displacing machinery, if no other way can be found to take care of the manpower that suffer the loss of their jobs as a result of invention.

It is true that such an investigation might worry business, but it is also true that millions of our citizens are already worried as a result of the installation of labor-saving and labor-displacing devices.

To my mind this is a most serious matter. I am going to call to your attention an editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of Sunday, May 7, which will certainly convince you that it is an important matter. The editorial follows:

EIGHTY-FIVE THOUSAND JOBS ELIMINATED

A machine installed in a steel plant at Pittsburgh, Pa., is something to talk about. With a crew of six men it turned out 446 tons of tin plate in an 8-hour day. Before this machine was invented, a crew of five men on the old-style hand mills turned out 10 tons of tin plate in 8 hours.

From 10 tons to 446 tons is surely stepping along, isn't it? Of course, the new machines are expensive. They cost $10,000,000 apiece. Twenty-six of them are now operating. The research department reports: "They have eliminated 85,000 jobs."

The research department chooses its words: The elimination of 85,000 jobs reads rather better, say, than "85,000 men out of work." But that is what it means.

What of the 85,000 men whose jobs are gone—swallowed up in the maw of a machine? There is a smug school of philosophy that looks upon a development of this sort with reassuring complacency. Like Voltaire's exasperating idiot, "It is all for the best in this best of all possible worlds." Technology is no ruthless deity. It is a kind, charming god. For every job it eliminates, it creates another. So don't worry. There is no occasion for uneasiness at all. That is what they say. It is not true.

Technology is a pleasing word. It has a ripple of euphony. It is impersonal. It serves, perhaps, as the mask for the machine, the monstrous Iago of the economic tragedy.

What's to be done with the villain? Sorry, but we don't know.

Just think of it, 85,000 individuals separated from their jobs due to the installation of 26 machines. This statement in reference to the 85,000 men who were required to do the work of the machines is not mine, but, as you will see by the editorial, it comes from the research department of the steel plant in Pennsylvania.

It matters not to me how the information relative to the machines is secured, whether through the Treasury Department or any other Government agency, but I certainly feel that some Government Department should do the job. The W. P. A. has made some little investigation in regard to this matter, but it simply scratched the surface. Would it not be an excellent project for the W. P. A. workers to make an investigation of this character under the jurisdiction of competent Government officials?

We have many outstanding problems confronting us, but to my mind no greater problem than the one that is going to require someone to provide for those who lose their employment when the machine is installed.

I sincerely hope that the members of the Ways and Means Committee will give serious thought to my resolution, and that it will either be reported to the House or included in the revenue bill which it will be necessary for them to consider before the end of the present fiscal year.

WAR DEBTS

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill for the creation of a commission known as the War Debt Payment Commission, empowered with broad authority to reexamine the debt structure and explore suggested methods of payment.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has somebody offered to pay their debt?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not that I know of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a most singular thing that people are today so debt conscious and tax conscious but not war-debt conscious. Yet 12 European countries, some of whom are moving from crisis to crisis, owe us more than $11,000,000,000, not including interest. This is nearly 30 percent of our present national debt. If paid and applied to our own debt, it would relieve the American taxpayer of about $250,000,000 per year in interest. Oddly enough, this matter of war debts has received only the most casual attention.

This debt represents money which the citizens of the United States loaned to foreign countries to prosecute the World War, it represents advances made for relief after the war, and amounts for the sale of surplus war materials after the American Expeditionary Forces came home.

In 1922, the World War Debt Funding Commission, funded these debts, agreed to a low rate of interest, and amortized them over a period of 62 years. The Treasury Department now holds the securities of these foreign governments.

Until 1932, the debtor nations made payment. On the 20th of June 1931, President Hoover suggested a 1-year moratorium on debt payments subject to the approval of Congress. That moratorium became effective July 1, 1931, and continued until June 30, 1932. After the expiration of the moratorium, the debtor countries with the exception of Finland, advised us that there were reasons why they could not resume payment. In December each year since that time we received short, polite notes from each debtor stating that the reasons advanced for nonpayment in 1932 are still compelling and express deepest regret that they cannot undertake to pay at payment date.

But the fact is that something must be done about these debts. They hang like a pall over the restoration of world prosperity. They constitute the reason for the Johnson Act of 1936 which prohibits the sale and purchase of the securities of the war-debt countries by citizens of the United States. But failure to adjust the war debts goes deeper than that. If we subscribe to the theory that these intergovernmental debts need not be paid unless the debtor nations feel disposed to pay them, we may as well abandon all hope that there will ever be a resumption of the free flow of capital and commodities between the United States and the debtor nations.

The war debts are growing cold and every creditor knows what a task it is to collect a cold and almost forgotten debt. We have made little effort to collect these debts. Our collection morale was low as a result of the depression. Perhaps the depression is also responsible for the low-payment morale of the debtors.

At best, we shout to the housetops that they ought to pay since these debtor nations are spending so much on armaments. It is no argument. Huge armament outlays are made by the debtor nations out of credits to their own people. But no international credits exist in sufficient quantities to meet their obligations on war debts.

There is a reason. They have no gold with which to pay. Secondly, the staggering unemployment in our own country prevents us from accepting manufactured goods, raw materials, and foreign-grown farm commodities whereby credits might be created to apply to the payment of the war debts. We are at an impasse.

In all the correspondence between our own country and the debtor nations, about the time a payment is due, there is not the slightest hint that these nations do not want to pay. They simply remind us over and over of the reasons advanced in 1932 why they cannot pay. If the war debts are to be adjusted, if this barrier to international trade is to be removed, if our own national debt is to be reduced by application of funds which others owe us, and if the annual interest burden of the taxpayers of our country is to be lightened, we must stop shouting in the dark and seek to devise a method whereby the debtor nations might pay. There is the crux of the war-debt situation.

Today I have introduced a bill for the creation of a commission to be known as the War Debt Payment Commission, empowered with broad authority to reexamine the debt structure and to explore suggested methods for payment.

The commission shall consist of five Members of the Senate, five Members of the House, and three persons from the executive branch of the Government. This commission shall deal with the war-debt problem without regard to such questions as reparations, and shall deal with each debtor nation individually. It shall have no authority to conclude any agreements with any debtor country, but must report its findings and recommendations to Congress for action.

In the bill there are some suggested methods for study and examination such as the possibility of conveying to the United States territory in this hemisphere now owned by the debtor nations. There is also suggested the idea of applying the expenditures made by tourists to debtor countries for steamship fares, meals, lodging, and incidental expenses upon the war debts by means of the issuance of certificates by the debtor countries which shall be turned over to the Treasury of the United States and then redeemed in the currency of the debtor nation. Also suggested is the possibility of applying immigrant remittances to the war debts and have the debtor nations assume these remittances to the persons for whom intended. These methods are meant to establish credits so that the means of payment is available to the debtor nations.

This war-debt problem is essentially one for the Congress to solve. Congress provides the revenues and appropriates them for governmental purposes. Congress appropriates for the interest on the national debt. Congress is constitutionally the keeper of the Nation's purse. An adjustment of the war debts would mean an increase in our revenues and a diminution in the appropriations. Indirectly, it would mean more revenues in the form of a freer and more abundant flow of international trade. I hope that this resolution may receive consideration at this session of the Congress and that a war-debt payment commission, dealing principally with finding a method of payment, might become operative without delay.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] is recognized for 20 minutes. [Applause.]

AMENDMENT TO WAGE AND HOUR LAW

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this time this morning in order to explain a few of the misstatements that have been made about the bill H. R. 5435. I would like to ask the membership to bear with me until I have concluded my statement, and I shall then be very glad to answer any questions that may be in the mind of any Member present.

On next Monday, May 15, as directed by the Committee on Labor, I shall ask the Speaker to suspend the rules to consider H. R. 5435, and in so doing I ask the cooperation of the membership of the House in order that we may amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. Your committee decided to amend this act because of certain inequalities in it which had been brought to our attention by Members of Congress and other interested parties. On considering these amendments we called Mr. Andrews, Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, to give us the benefit of his experience during the past 6 months in administering the law. We found him to be most helpful in supplying information and in accordance with the direction of Congress he suggested certain amendments which would solve a few of the difficult problems which have arisen during his administration of the act. One of these problems he considered of such importance that he addressed a communication to the Vice President and Speaker of the House, a copy of which I had included in the RECORD of April 20, 1939. This dealt with the necessity for clarification of, or redefinition of agricultural exemptions contained in the Fair Labor Standards Act.

In writing these amendments your committee has tried to give relief to what, in our opinion, constituted hardship cases without in any way weakening the act or denying its benefits to that great army of underfed and exploited workers engaged in the production of goods for interstate commerce. We had evidence brought to the committee which indicated that hardship had been caused by the application of some provisions of the law. We realized that it would not be an easy task to amend the law to protect these people who were entitled to protection and at the same time preserve the intent of the law.

Following many meetings with the Administrator and his efficient staff it is the well-considered judgment of your committee that we should, insofar as we are able, bring relief where evidence has demonstrated that it is absolutely necessary.

Of course, it has been impossible to meet the demands of many selfish interests throughout the country whose able lobbyists have given us many headaches.

Most of you gentlemen of the House are familiar with the difficulties experienced in writing into law the now famous Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. A large part of the present membership of the House contributed to the enactment of this legislation and I know you who were here well remember the debate on the floor in December 1937 and again in May 1938, and the final adoption of the legislation in June 1938. During all of the debate on the floor, the House Labor Committee made every effort to meet the needs of all sections of the country and its territories and to furthermore enact into law a bill which would better the working conditions of hundreds of thousands of exploited persons. We, and I hope I speak for the majority of the Members of the House, felt that what we had accomplished was sufficiently useful to give at least some measure of relief to the men and women of this country engaged in the production of goods for interstate commerce. I am sure that we all knew then that the act was not perfect, but it was surely a step in the right direction. In coming to you with these suggested amendments we feel we are keeping faith with you and the public in attempting to improve the act in the interest of all concerned.

Many people have asked why we decided to amend an act that had only been in effect 6 months. Our answer was that we wanted to make that act as just and fair as we possibly could make it. We wanted it to be respected and approved by the people throughout this country. In other words, we wanted to be perfectly fair, not only to employees but to employers as well. That is the reason we are bringing these amendments to you for consideration.

Six months of operation of the Fair Labor Standards Act under the very able direction of Elmer Andrews have demonstrated the necessity for the amendments. Again I feel that I am speaking not alone for myself when I say that his administration of the law has been all we had hoped it could be. He has been just, reasonable, and efficient, and has conscientiously tried to live up to the intent of Congress in directing this legislation.

Now, let me give you an explanation of the provisions of the amendments we are proposing in H. R. 5435:

First. In the administration of the law the Administrator has found that its rigid application to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands has created hardship. It is factually true that working conditions in those territories are vastly different—are governed by climatic conditions, living conditions, and general economic factors at distinct variance with those in continental United States. It is impossible to prescribe rigid standards for working conditions in the Territories such as are suitable for continental United States. This problem has been one of the most distressing to the Administrator. The Labor Committee has, therefore, brought before you an amendment to relieve this situation. We are advocating the appointment of industry committees for each industry in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to determine the minimum wages to be paid. This minimum may be—and in practical effect no doubt will be in many instances—less than that prescribed in section 6 of the act. However, such wage rate cannot be prescribed without taking into consideration certain standards set forth in the amendment. We could not and do not suggest the offering to the Territories of any competitive advantage, but rather hope to equalize, by this amendment, any now existing inequalities.

Second. One of the hardest problems to beset the Administrator was that of defining "area of production." As you gentlemen all know, I am sure, we used that phrase as a basis for the exemption of workers engaged in the production of agricultural products. It defies fair definition and has created many unfair as well as ridiculous situations. The Labor Committee has decided, therefore, to eliminate entirely the use of the phrase "area of production" and, instead, list specifically the branches of agriculture and the work to be performed therein which will be subject to the exemptions from the hours provisions, the wage provision, or both. By so stating the exemptions we feel that no employer or employee can be uncertain of his participation or nonparticipation under the act. By referring to section 3 of H. R. 5435 you will find the operations which we have totally exempted from the hours provisions of the act for 14 weeks in a year and have exempted from the hours provisions up to 60 hours a week for all other weeks.

You will remember that in the original act we had limited that to 12 hours a day and 56 hours a week. We had many complaints from farmers around the country, who said that in some instances perhaps 3 days a week might be wet, or something else might happen where it would be impossible to work employees during the whole week. Therefore if we could make it a 60-hour week exemption they could use the time as they saw fit. The committee was very glad to accept that proposal.

Surely this exemption must eliminate any hardship created by the act in taking care of seasonal or perishable agricultural products. The committee feels it has granted exemptions where and when they are necessary and we are satisfied that justice is being done to both the employer and employee. To insure the practicality of our proposed legislation, we have extended to employees engaged in the handling, tying, drying, stripping, grading, redrying, fermenting, stemming, or packing of leaf tobacco and the storing of it from both the wage and hour provisions of the act. This we have done at the insistence of the industry and its employees. We, of course, do not wish to deny the benefits of the act to anyone, but in some cases it has seemed only practical and just to do so. We have also extended this exemption to employees employed in the preparing, packing, cleaning, or grading of fresh fruits and fresh vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed immediately off the farm.

The farmer, as you know, is exempt now under the provisions of the act. This extends the exemption to employees who are still purely agricultural but whose work is performed just off the farm. The committee in this provision intends to exempt from both wages and hours only such employees as were employed in the cleaning, packing, grading, or preparing of fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed in the immediate locality of the farm where produced. It was only intended to take care of the small fresh fruit and vegetable packing operation often carried on by a few farmers for the purpose of packing their own products. We have also extended this exemption to all employees engaged in the ginning of cotton.

Third. Another factor which has caused considerable confusion among both employers and employees is the fact that the Administrator lacks the power to make valid rules and regulations. I believe it is a tribute to the conscientiousness and willingness to cooperate of the American employer to realize that almost 90 percent of the employers of this country are living up to the provisions of the law. There are, as you gentlemen know, many cases in which employees and employers are not sure of their coverage by the act. All the Administrator can do when questioned by interested parties is to issue an interpretative bulletin. This is not binding under the law nor does compliance with it protect an individual legally. In order to correct this situation we are proposing in section 4 of H. R. 5435 to authorize the Administrator to make rules and regulations to carry out any of the provisions of the act. This section will also give him the right to define terms used in the act and make special provisions with respect to industrial homework.

As the act is now written it is extremely doubtful whether the wage and hour standards which it establishes can be enforced as to industrial home workers. Under present practice in industrial home work industries, the Administrator is unable to secure proper records on wages and hours of home workers. Business concerns relying on home work for their labor do not ordinarily deal directly with the home workers, but turn over the goods or articles on which the work is to be done to contractors who employ the home workers. Section 4 of the amendments would give the Administrator the necessary authority to cope with this situation.

We believe that this section on the whole will quiet much of the unrest which has grown up as the result of the lack of definiteness of the act when applied to an individual business. This change has been approved by the Administrator as most necessary for effective administration of the law.

Fourth. In section 5 (a) of the proposed amendments your committee contemplates the exemption of employees employed at a guaranteed monthly salary of $200 a month or more. The necessity for this exemption has arisen because under the present act only employees engaged in executive or administrative or professional capacities are exempt by virtue of their positions. It has been found that there are many persons whose work is not clearly administrative or executive but who are high-salaried workers with necessarily flexible hours. Their inclusion has created some hard problems for the Administrator and caused real hardship in many cases. Of course you gentlemen realize there is nothing in this act which limits the application of this exemption to clerical or so-called "white collar" workers. If a ditch digger received $200 a month he would be similarly exempt under this provision.

In section 5 (b) your committee has, we believe, taken care of the employees in small telephone exchanges.

May I say that at least 50 percent of the membership of this House has come to me asking for this exemption. Evidently it has been creating a great deal of trouble and, perhaps, hardship. So we are glad to bring this amendment to you.

The application of the law to them in many instances has really tended to increase unemployment and curtail chances for employment. Small telephone companies on the whole are financially unable to comply with the wage and hour provisions of the act. The committee believes that by exempting switchboard operators in exchanges having 500 or less stations it will help materially toward solving their present problem.

In the original bill I may say the exemption was set at 350, but later we changed that to 500. We think this has really taken care of all of the hardship cases.

In section 6 we have exempted employees employed under the jurisdiction of part 1 of the Railway Labor Act. This affords a similar exemption to employees of refrigerating cars, and so forth, as is now extended to all other branches of the railroad industry under the present act.

In section 7 the committee deals with two very difficult problems—messenger boys and home work in rural areas.

Your committee does not wish to deny the benefits of the act to messengers. However, anyone at all familiar with the telegraph companies knows that they will not be able to pay the highest minimum—40 cents—without great hardship and perhaps even financial ruin. We are, therefore, offering an amendment which would give the Administrator the power to prescribe wages lower than those set forth in section 6 of the act if certain standards can be met. However, in no case has the Administrator the power to lower the wage below 25 cents an hour.

The difficulty of compliance with the law by home workers in rural areas is, I believe, familiar to most of you.

A few Members of the House came before us and gave us much evidence in connection with this amendment. We feel that we are justified in giving relief to those people and that this relief is necessary. This type of work bears no resemblance to industrial home work in cities, and its elimination often means the difference between butter on his bread or plain bread to many a farmer. So we propose to give the Administrator power to prescribe wages lower than the minimum set forth in the act.

Section 8 is intended to protect the innocent purchaser of so-called "hot goods" if he can show that at the time he purchased the goods he had no knowledge or reason to believe that they had been produced in violation of wage and hour provisions. This amendment would avoid hardship to innocent purchasers and promote the free movement of goods.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, the gentlewoman from New Jersey said at the beginning of her remarks that she would give us an opportunity to ask certain questions relative to the bill. The gentlewoman is making a very fine statement, and I hope that arrangements can be made to give her at least 15 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that her time be extended 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentlewoman from New Jersey request such extension of time?

Mrs. NORTON. I would be very glad to have the extension of time, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Section 9 of the committee amendments, which amends section 15 (a) (2) of the act, is a technical amendment which is necessary if section 4 is adopted, so that the violation of appropriate regulations will be prohibited. In addition there is a prohibition against violations of the provisions of any wage order issued by the Administrator pursuant to section 8. This latter prohibition clarifies the act as now written.

Section 10 proposed to give to learners, apprentices, handicapped workers, messengers, and home workers the same right to sue for unpaid minimum wages and unpaid overtime compensation which the act now accords all other employees covered by the act.

Section 11 of the committee amendment would amend section 17 of the act to provide that civil actions to restrain violations of the act may be brought in any district where the defendant is found, or is inhabited or transacts business. By thus allowing suits against corporations where they are doing business, the amendment will save both defendants and the Government the expense of bringing witnesses many miles from the place of business to the State of incorporation of the business.

Section 12 of the committee amendment prohibits the transportation of prison-made goods in interstate commerce except the transporting of goods from a Federal prison for the use of the Federal Government. This provision is in line with but goes beyond the Ashurst-Sumners Act. [Applause.]

Summing up, Mr. Speaker, I may say that your committee considered these amendments for at least 5 or 6 weeks. We received communications from all interested parties. They were brought to the attention of the committee, and we really tried to do a good job. We could not, of course, grant amendments to all of those who came seeking them, for we were confronted with exactly the same situation that confronted us when the original bill was before the House for action. Many selfish interests came to us, people who would like not only to have the bill amended but to have the bill killed; and your committee had a very difficult task in trying to decide what was fair and just; and may I say that we did everything in our power to bring before you only such amendments. We want this bill to have the endorsement of the American public. We want this bill to do the thing we intended it to do, protect the workers of this country. The primary reason for having this law is to protect the exploited workers in this country; and this, Mr. Speaker, your committee has tried to do.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I commend the committee for removing the disturbing "area of production" provision. The committee, however, has substituted another phase which I believe should have some clear elucidation so that the Members may form some idea as to what is intended, and that is the phrase "terminal establishment." It seems to me that unless the phrase "terminal establishment" is clearly defined, it might leave us in the same situation we find ourselves with existing law in reference to "area of production." For instance, in defining "terminal establishment" reference is made to urban areas. Just how does the committee define an urban area?

Mrs. NORTON. I believe the committee intended the phrase "terminal establishment," on page 13 of the bill, to mean an establishment which met each of the three requirements set forth in the sentence in which the phrase "terminal establishment" is defined. Further, the words "establishments at which such goods have been previously concentrated or prepared" does not include that concentrating or preparing of fresh fruits and vegetables which ordinarily takes place on the farm before they are delivered to a packer or canner. That is what is meant by "terminal establishment."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I recognize that, but that is not very clear to me. Maybe I am dense, but I would like to get it clear. Reference is made to "urban area." Webster's Dictionary defines "urban" as meaning something pertaining to a city. Did the committee consider what size community would take an industry into an urban area?

Mrs. NORTON. No; I do not think the committee did. We interpreted "urban area" in the broad sense as meaning the surrounding country whose population was around 2,500, or thereabouts, although we did not mention any figure.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Part of an urban area?

Mrs. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That certainly is contrary to all definitions. In 1910 the Bureau of the Census defined as urban communities all communities having a population of 2,500 or over. Those having under 2,500 would be classed as rural areas.

Mrs. NORTON. I think I made a mistake. I should have said that an urban area was an area with a population of 2,500 or over. I am afraid my mind was still on a farm when I answered your question.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Then, we would assume that the committee means that when the phrase "terminal establishment" is used it does not take in any communities having a population of less than 2,500 individuals.

Mrs. NORTON. My personal opinion is that is what the committee intended.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the gentlewoman can make that quite definite it would be very helpful.

Mrs. NORTON. I cannot make it more definite than the definition given in the bill.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Would the gentlewoman also tell us in connection with the same definition what is meant by "transportation terminal" or "transportation center"?

Mrs. NORTON. As we understood "transportation terminal," it meant a terminal where goods were concentrated for the wholesale market.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The phrase "transportation terminal" is not used in the act. It is referred to in the act as "transportation center."

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The phrase used in the act is "transportation center."

One further question—and I hope that we can get this all cleared up on Monday; we should have everything clear about the bill—just what is meant by the phrase "off the farm"?

Mrs. NORTON. That was an amendment offered by Mr. THOMAS of Texas, and I think he would be glad to explain just what it means. I can tell the gentleman what I think it means.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We would like to know from the chairman; she is the authority.

Mrs. NORTON. This provision, as I understand it, is to allow groups of farmers—John Jones, Bill Smith, Sam Brown, and maybe others—to get together to perform certain operations on the farm, operations which are enumerated in the bill, to prepare the produce for market. It might sometimes happen that John Jones would not have the facilities to do these things by himself, but with other farmers they could form a sort of cooperative organization, and we considered it important to permit them to get together to perform these various operations. May I say, however, that I have never lived on a farm, so all of these operations on a farm are very difficult for me to understand. All my life has been spent in the city. I am not familiar with farming operations. I shall be more familiar with them, I hope, before we get through with this bill.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We shall be very glad to help the gentlewoman in that respect.

Mrs. NORTON. I shall need all the help I can get. It was our idea in presenting this amendment relating to "off the farm" to allow these farmers in small groups to cooperate in the matter of preparing fruits, vegetables, and so forth, for market. It is the committee's understanding, however, that it does not extend beyond the first processing, let us say, for lack of a better word, of the produce for the market.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If the farmers live within a radius of 60 miles of one another, that area might be considered off the farm?

Mrs. NORTON. I would not go as far as to say that. We did not attempt to put the suggestion of any mileage or any distance into the bill. After all, the Administrator will have to determine that.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is what I was getting at. That leaves it to his discretion to make the determination.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. We feel it will be perfectly safe in his hands.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I hope so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I listened with a great deal of interest to the gentlewoman's explanation of the liberalized provisions for the tobacco workers and I fully approve of what the committee proposes to do; but, frankly, what disturbs me is to learn by what physiological, social, economic, or political theory the committee arrived at the conclusion that the tobacco worker, considering that the tobacco industry has been nearer parity than any other major farm product, and the tobacco industry has not suffered during the depression like many other industries, should receive more liberalized treatment than those engaged in preparing for market fresh fruits or vegetables in their raw or natural state?

Mrs. NORTON. I do not believe we gave them that. We were told the tobacco people we exempted were people who worked by their hands in small communities; they did not have the machines that were necessary or that they have in larger places, and we gave this exemption because we felt we were helping that small group of people who do all those operations by hand.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is the assurance I wanted, because to get that equal treatment that you say your committee intended, the definition "off the farm" and the definition of "terminal" will have to be most liberally construed or else the relief for this suffering fruit and vegetable industry will not be brought about under the provisions of the act.

Mrs. NORTON. It was the intention of the committee to do just that. Our thought was that if we extended the amendments too far they would take in what we might call the wholesale market, and that we certainly did not want to do. If the gentleman knew the number of lobbyists who have been around the Capitol trying to get that class of labor exempted from the bill, he would understand the difficult task we had.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Minnesota has called attention to that phrase which is found in the first instance on page 12, reading "but not when those operations are performed at a terminal establishment," and has asked the lady from New Jersey to define, if possible, with the aid of a definition printed later on on page 13, what a terminal establishment is. We thereupon find that the definition needs defining again in several instances. I am not going to pursue that question, however. The lady has made it plain, and the bill makes it plain that at least some restriction is intended to be placed upon the processing of fresh fruits and vegetables.

Mrs. NORTON. After they leave the farm, but not while they are on the farm.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask why a similar restriction is not placed upon the great packing industry?

Mrs. NORTON. It is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not. I beg the lady's pardon. On page 12, line 11, among the exemptions without qualification we read, "the handling, grading, loading, slaughtering, or dressing livestock." If that does not exempt Armour and Swift, I cannot read the English language.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Under the act, as has been pointed out, that can be done, anyway.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Those great plants, which no farmer has ever considered to be farm operation plants, but, rather, great industrial establishments in the cities of Chicago and Kansas City, employing thousands and thousands of men, most of them with union affiliations, typical industrial plants, under this bill may run 60 hours a week the year round, and for 14 weeks there need be no limitation whatsoever as to hours. I am not pleading for or against that particular thing. But I want to know why the fresh fruits and vegetable industry, close to the farm itself, handled in little country villages, seasonal plants that run only on an average of 4 or 5 months out of 12 months in the year, are supposedly placed under a restriction, whereas the great packing industry is left free?

Mrs. NORTON. Is not the difference there that the fresh fruits and vegetable industry is proposed to be exempted from the wage and hour provisions, while the other people are not exempted from wages?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey may be extended for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Following the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York, I wish to call attention to the fact that in section 8, to which he has just referred, it puts no terminal limitation upon the packing houses, your hogs, or your cattle. Section 9 puts poultry under the terminal facilities.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. The gentlewoman has been very patient in her explanation, but I would like to emphasize some of the points that the gentlemen from Minnesota and New York have brought out and direct attention to questions I asked yesterday relative to the terminal establishment in this urban area. The gentlewoman indicated she had lived in a city all of her life, consequently could not with any degree of confidence discuss the agricultural features of this bill. I would like to suggest to the gentlewoman as a result of hearings that were held before the Administrator, I think, on April 3 and 4, he came out with a ruling on April 19 indicating he also had no understanding of the very same agricultural problems that you are trying to solve in this bill.

He defined a city with a population of 2,500 as being the maximum. In Wisconsin we have a lot of factories engaged in the canning of peas, corn, tomatoes, and so forth, in towns with a population of 5,000, 6,000, 7,000, or 8,000. If a town with a population of 2,600 has a canning factory in it, under the ruling and under the urban area interpretation which I know Mr. Andrews will give, that town will be penalized as against the operation of a factory in a town of 2,450 or 2,499.

Mrs. NORTON. I do not believe so, if the work is done purely and simply as agricultural work.

Mr. HAWKS. These are all agricultural works.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say that the understanding of the committee is that we have taken care of all these people in and around the farm. Our only desire to enforce this law is after the product has left the first processing or preparing operation, or whatever the word is.

Mr. HAWKS. That is where they take it off the land.

Mrs. NORTON. Where they take it off the farm or when it gets to the large terminal establishment, which to my mind is sort of a wholesale establishment.

Mr. HAWKS. Could I describe to the gentlewoman the ordinary operation?

Mrs. NORTON. I would be pleased to hear it. I am really getting a liberal education in farming.

Mr. SHANNON. If the gentlewoman will yield, I should like to ask the Chair and the gentlewoman if this cannot be confined to mere questions instead of speeches. Several speeches have been interjected into the gentlewoman's remarks, whereas many, many Members would like to ask questions.

Mrs. NORTON. May I say further to the gentleman that on Monday this bill will come before the House. The minority leader has asked if there would be any objection to extending the debate 1 hour. There will not be any objection to that. We will then have all the members of the Committee on Labor present, and I believe they can satisfy the Members of the intent of the committee in writing these amendments, which will go a long way toward working out the proper administration of the act.

Mr. SHANNON. Then I would suggest that the gentlewoman confine the remarks of the Members to whom she yields to questions.

Mrs. NORTON. I would be very pleased to have the discussion so confined.

Mr. GREEN and Mr. SHEPPARD rose.

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. In our State we have fruit-packing houses. The fruit is hauled in by the farmer, and may be hauled 10 miles to the packing house. The fruit then passes to a machine, is graded as to size, and is then wrapped by hand and placed in a crate. I was wondering if these amendments would exempt the employees of such a packing house?

Mrs. NORTON. Does the gentleman mean if this operation is immediately on or off the farm?

Mr. GREEN. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. Yes. My personal opinion is he would be exempt.

Mr. GREEN. The grower may haul the fruit 10 miles or 2 miles to the packing house, and there it is packed in the crate for him, and he pays for the packing.

Mrs. NORTON. Our understanding is that he would be exempt. I may say to the gentleman this amendment, "immediately off the farm," is the amendment of my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS]. Perhaps the gentleman from Texas would like to explain to the House exactly what his definition is of his own amendment, which was placed in the bill, not at the suggestion of the Administrator, I can assure you, but at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Texas to make that explanation.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. If the gentlewoman will yield, I will attempt to explain that language. The language "immediately off the farm," was used as a term descriptive of the work to be done and not of the area where the work is to be done. The fresh fruits and vegetables grown by the farmer must be washed and packed and prepared so they are ready for market. It does not make any difference where that work is one; it may be a thousand miles from the farm. The purpose of my amendment is to relieve the farmer of this added cost for the work done, regardless of where it is done, in getting the product ready for the market.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will yield, may I ask the gentleman from Texas if he has been able to get an interpretation from the legal department of the Wage and Hour Division of the Labor Department that is in line with the gentleman's definition?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I may say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I have not asked the Administrator for an interpretation for the simple reason that I doubt if he would give me one. However, I do not believe that, in all fairness to him, I can presuppose that he is going to go contrary to the wish of a committee of the Congress.

Mr. BARDEN. The Administrator has given us definitions in connection with every amendment he proposed.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I presume so.

Mr. BARDEN. Did he not define and describe the amendments and tell us what the extent of the operation would be?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I believe that is so.

Mr. BARDEN. Then does the gentleman believe that it would be improper for him to ask the Administrator for a definition of this term and have it available on Monday?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. No; I do not believe it would be improper for my friend to ask him. I will be pleased to do so, however, if the gentleman wishes me to.

Mr. GREEN. If the gentlewoman will yield, does the process the gentleman from Texas mentions of preparing the product for market include placing it in the can—for instance, placing grapefruit in the can?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. No; it does not include the canning.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman from New Jersey will yield, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. The people of California have been vitally interested in what happens to this bill, as well as the interpretation that has been put in operation by the Department under the previous act. I have prepared 10 questions which I would like to ask the member of the committee, and if the gentleman would rather have me ask him the questions on Monday, I am perfectly willing to do that with the assurance of the gentlewoman in charge of the bill that I shall have that opportunity.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Submit the questions to us and I should be pleased to attempt to answer them, or I am sure the chairman will do so.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I would like to say to the gentleman from Texas that I know of the splendid cooperation that the members of the committee have given in this matter, and my deliberate intention here is to place in the RECORD a definite pronouncement by the committee as to what their intent is so that we cannot have a jumping over the hurdles like we had the last time.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Of course, the committee cannot bind the Administrator, but we will be glad to give the gentleman our opinion.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Certainly it is not the intention of the person offering this amendment to include in the amendment containing the phrase "immediately off the farm" any interpretation such as the Administrator read into the act before.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that the committee wrestled for about 6 weeks trying to get away from that old term "area of production," and I think the committee certainly did not intend to have any semblance of the idea of area of production again in connection with the phrase "immediately off the farm," and the distance would make no difference whatever.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am not talking about distance; I am talking about the number of employees. That was not carried in the other bill; but because some Member in the argument on the floor made the statement, that was used in construing the intent of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. One man could have one employee engaged in washing such products, while another might have 10,000, and therefore numbers will not have anything to do with it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The number was not intended to apply to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I understand that the ginning and storing of cotton is exempted.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Yes; from wages and hours.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. How about the little sawmill? I see you have here a provision about that, and I have one in my district——

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I have one, too.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. I thank you gentlemen, and I sincerely hope you will come here on Monday prepared to vote for a suspension of the rules so that we may give the relief provided in our amendments to those whom we believe are entitled to relief.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is to be recognized next, and if the gentleman from New York will be kind enough to yield, I wish to submit a unanimous-consent request to proceed for just 1 minute.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOXEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the pending Norton bill, H. R. 5435, Union Calendar No. 204, which I understand will be called up Monday to be passed under a suspension of the rules, gives me deep concern. The plight of the producers of fresh fruits and vegetables in this country is well known. The passage of this bill in its present form will intensify their present hardships, force some of them into bankruptcy, and result in unemployment in our rural sections on a wide scale.

Section 13 (a) (10) of the present act, so far as it relates to fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw or natural state, exempts any individual employed within the area of production—as defined by the Administrator—engaged in handling, packing, storing, and preparing them in their raw or natural state for market.

A hearing was held by the Wage and Hour Division on the definition of "area of production" January 9 to 12, and again by Administrator Andrews on April 3 and 4. As a result of the hearings, the Administrator came out with a very restricted definition so that the exemption applied only to towns of less than 2,500 population and the distance of haul to packing plant or storage did not exceed more than 10 miles. It will be noted, however, that even this applied to not only handling, packing, and preparing fresh fruits in their raw or natural state but also to storing.

First. The Norton bill, in section 5 (b) (12), proposes to amend section 13 (a) (10) to read as follows:

(12) Any employee employed in the cleaning, packing, grading, or preparing fresh fruits and fresh vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed immediately off the farm.

No one yet knows what "immediately off the farm" means or how it will be defined by the Administrator. Some statements have been made to the effect that the word "immediately" had reference to time or speed from the farm to the packing house. If that should prove to be the meaning, then the Administrator would have to define the number of hours that might elapse between the farm and the packing house, all of which would work great disruption and hardship. Other statements have been made that the word "immediately" means in the immediate locality and for the benefit of such growers as might occasionally desire to get together to grade, pack, and clean.

If the latter proves to be the case, then the Administrator's definition of "immediately" will undoubtedly be just as restrictive as his definition of "area of production" under the regulation of April 19, 1939, to wit, towns under 2,500 population and the distance of haul not to exceed 10 miles. If either of these alternatives prove true, then the industry is worse off under the Norton bill than it is under the present wording of section 13 (a) (10) and the Administrator's restricted definition of "area of production" of April 19. The industry is worse off because none of the country storages within the production districts where the goods are produced have any exemption whatsoever. In addition the definition of "immediately," based on time, would be impossible and completely disruptive. Still further, if the word "immediately" is construed to be "in the immediate locality," then we are not only confronted with the present restrictive regulation as to area of production, but the further language of section 4 (d) of the Norton bill giving the Administrator power to issue, amend, and rescind such regulations and orders as are necessary and appropriate to carry out any of the provisions of this act and further regulations and orders defining terms used in the act. That means that he can at any time still further narrow and restrict the word "immediately." The industry would be confronted with constant uncertainty and possible and probable changes. Under existing section 13 (a) (10), all the Administrator had to do was to define "area of production," which he thought was an impossible task. He now has handed back to him the duty and power of defining "immediately off the farm," which, in my judgment, is infinitely more vague and uncertain than the words "area of production."

A proper definition of "area of production," as contained in section 13 (a) (10), offers no particular difficulties to anyone who will view the matter realistically. Production centers and districts in the United States have been developed over a long series of years and long before the wage-and-hour bill was ever thought of. "Area of production" is the general district or section where the goods are produced and where they are normally and necessarily prepared for market. The term "area of production" is perfectly well known to growers and the distributing trade. It is only by unduly magnifying the difficulty of defining "area of production" that any such difficulty exists.

If the Administrator defines "immediately off the farm" in as restricted a manner as he has already defined the term "area of production," and whether he follows the time theory or the immediate locality theory, then the original intent of section 13 (a) (10) of the existing act exempting from both wages and hours the handling, packing, storing, and preparation of fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw and natural state within the section or area where the goods are produced and are normally and necessarily prepared for market will be practically nullified.

Based on experience there is no reason to believe that the Administrator's definition of "immediately off the farm" would be any more liberal, if as liberal, as his definition of "area of production" issued April 19, 1939. Not only that but, as I have pointed out, the word "storing" has been completely omitted.

If the above is correct, the fresh fruit and vegetable industry will be just as limited, and probably more so, than under the present regulation of less than 2,500 population and a 10-mile haul and in addition would have lost the right to store even in that limited area free from the wage and hour provisions.

The effect, therefore, of section 5 (b) (12) of the Norton bill will be to exclude storing, at even the smallest country points, to disrupt long-established production areas and practices and severely cripple packing-house and storing facilities that have been developed over a long series of years at point of origin within the general area where the fresh fruits and vegetables are produced and are normally and necessarily prepared for market and stored and conserved in their raw or natural state. Present facilities within the legitimate area of production cannot be torn down and moved and the industry does not have sufficient capital to build new facilities at every country crossroads or to serve half a dozen farms, and, moreover, if it did have such capital, it would constitute an economic waste in that with the great variation in crops due to weather conditions, facilities cannot be built to take care of just a few farms or an exceedingly limited haul. Many present facilities would have to be either abandoned or operated at a loss.

Moreover, if he has power to define terms and amend and rescind such definitions as he deems appropriate, the industry would never know what "immediately off the farm" meant from week to week or month to month.

Second. Turning to section 3 of the Norton bill, which proposes to completely change existing section 7 (c) of the act, there is a provision which would extend the workweek to 60 hours without payment of overtime but under the language used the extension of the workweek to 60 hours without payment of overtime insofar as the fresh fruit and vegetable industry is concerned is nothing but a hollow shell.

This statement is perfectly clear if one will read section 3, paragraph 5, starting on line 24 of page 11 and ending with line 4 on page 12 of the bill and the language used in an attempt to define "terminal establishment" as it appears on page 13, lines 20 to 24, and page 14, lines 1 to 4.

Paragraph 5 of section 3, which applies in part to fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw and natural state, reads as follows:

(5) preparing, cleaning, grading, packing, drying, refrigerating, freezing, preserving, peeling, shelling, storing, or canning fresh or dried fruits and vegetables but not when those operations are performed at a terminal establishment.

I am devoting my remarks to fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw and natural state, although drying, refrigerating, freezing, preserving, peeling, shelling, or canning are likewise concerned. Now, what does "terminal establishment" mean? The Norton bill, on page 13, starting in line 20, attempts to define it as follows:

As used in this subsection, the term "terminal establishment" means an establishment which (1) is located either in the urban area where the products are to be consumed or at transportation centers for the purpose of servicing consumer markets; (2) receives the major portion of its goods from other establishments at which such goods have been previously concentrated or prepared; and (3) distributes its goods to wholesalers, retailers, consumers, or manufacturers.

Under the foregoing the Administrator would have to still further define "terminal establishment" and the meaning of such words as "urban area," "transportation centers for the purpose of servicing consumer markets," "receives the major portion of its goods from other establishments," and "distributes its goods to wholesalers, retailers, consumers, or manufacturers." It is therefore conclusive that the Administrator is confronted with far more complexities than in defining "area of production" as it appears in the existing act, section 7 (c) and section 13 (a) (10).

"Urban area" would undoubtedly be defined as a place with 2,500 or more population. The Administrator also could and undoubtedly would, based on previous experience, promulgate a regulation stating that any and all small towns at point of origin and all of them located within the legitimate area of production, were transportation centers for the purpose of servicing consuming markets. Naturally, fresh fruits and vegetables must ultimately be shipped to some consuming market. The Administrator could and undoubtedly would hold that a country storage in the same village or township which obtained packed fruit from a grower who had packed it on his own farm was receiving fruit from "other establishments at which such goods had been previously concentrated or prepared." He could and would also undoubtedly find that all of the fresh fruits and vegetables stored at country points were distributed "to wholesalers, retailers, consumers, or manufacturers," as per paragraph (3), line 3, page 14. That is where they have to go anyway. Fresh fruits and vegetables are produced, cleaned, graded, packed, and stored at point of origin to sell to consuming markets.

Therefore, as I see it, there is no relief for fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw and natural state under section 3, paragraph (5), pages 11 to 12, of the Norton bill, coupled with the use of the words "terminal establishment" and as such words are attempted to be defined on page 13 of the Norton bill, commencing in line 20 and running on down to the end of line 4, on page 14. It is exceedingly difficult to imagine or visualize any packing house or storage at country points which would be exempt under the language used and the clearly expressed intention of the Administrator to restrict to the utmost any and all exemptions and as evidenced by the regulation which he has already promulgated under section 13 (a) (10).

This would mean that practically all of these packing houses and storages would come under the existing wage schedule which would evidently be 40 cents per hour and time and one-half for overtime and the existing 44-hour workweek, which will change to 42 hours in October, and after October 1940 will be down to 40 hours.

It is so well known that the fresh fruit and vegetable industry is in no position to assume these additional charges that to discuss it further would seem to be an utter waste of time. The Government, on the one hand, is appropriating huge sums to help the farmers and growers, and now, on the other hand, proposes to penalize them with added costs.

Furthermore, it is exceedingly doubtful what the application is of the words as used on page 13 of the Norton bill, commencing with line 15 and reading as follows:

In the case of an employer engaged in any of the operations specified in paragraphs (1) to (16), inclusive, of this subsection, the provisions of subsection (a), during a period or periods of not more than 14 workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year, shall not apply to his employees in any place of employment where he is so engaged.

It will be noted that this language is followed by the attempted and vague definition of "terminal establishment" and further that in paragraph (5), commencing on page 11, no exemptions or increase in hours are permitted when the operations specified in paragraph (5) are "performed at a terminal establishment."

It may very well turn out in the end and under the Administrator's regulations and definitions and interpretations that none of the operations specified in paragraph (5) are entitled to an exemption of 14 workweeks.

The Norton bill was supposed to clarify the present act but instead of doing that, it is my judgment that it not only nullifies the present act to a large extent, but in addition is loaded with such vagueness that no one knows what it means.

The time to determine these issues is before the Norton bill is passed and not afterward. The entire bill should be rewritten and put in language that is understandable. If the Norton bill is passed in its present form, there will be a series of further regulations with no one knowing what those regulations will contain, but in all probability they will be not only greatly restricted but with power to still further restrict from time to time whenever the Administrator in his own mind deems it appropriate.

There will be very little opportunity of a court review under the present wording of the Norton bill. Furthermore, there have been no public hearings held on the Norton bill and no opportunity has been given to the industry to present to the committee its facts and arguments.

I further wish to point out that the limiting words:

But not when those operations are performed at a terminal establishment—are not used in connection with paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), (7), (8), (11), (13), (14), or (15) of section 3.

To give a few illustrations:

First. The making, and so forth, of dairy products, but not storing, can take place anywhere without regard to "terminal establishments" (par. (1)).

Second. Cotton can be compressed and stored anywhere without regard to terminal establishments.

Third. The processing of sugar beets can take place anywhere without limitation.

Fourth. Extracting juices or sirups from domestic fruits or vegetables can take place anywhere without limitation, (par. (4)), while preparing the fresh fruits and vegetables themselves for market in their raw or natural state are decidedly limited (par. (5)).

Fifth. Handling, grading, loading, slaughtering, or dressing livestock can take place anywhere without regard to the "terminal establishment" limitation (par. (8)). The meat packers are in the clear.

Sixth. In the very next paragraph (par. (9)), poultry is subject to the "terminal establishment" limitation.

Seventh. Hops, fiber crops, or forage crops (par. (13)), honey (par. (14)), and nursery stock (par. (15)), carry no limitation.

Consider the complete absence of reality when fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw or natural state, and which are perishable, are tied down to the "terminal establishment" limitation—whatever that may mean—while dairy products which are perishable, cotton which is not perishable, extracting fruit and vegetable juices, slaughtering and dressing livestock (the meat packers), hops, fiber, and forage crops, honey and nursery stock carry no such limitation.

PROPOSED CHANGES

Section 5 (b) (12) of the Norton bill, page 15, line 21, should be changed to read:

(12) any employee employed in the cleaning, packing, grading, storing, or preparing fresh fruits and vegetables in their raw or natural state when such operations are performed within the general and recognized production section or area where such commodities are produced and are normally or necessarily prepared for market: Provided, however, That this exemption shall not apply in consumer markets to which such fresh fruits and vegetables have been sent for distribution for consumption.

Such an amendment would meet the needs of the fresh fruit and vegetable industry and carry out the intent of the Congress when it enacted section 13 (a) (10).

Its provisions are not as broad as the amendment tentatively agreed upon by the Ways and Means Committee for the exemption of certain agricultural labor from the Social Security Act, which amendment reads as follows:

(4) In handling, drying, packing, packaging, processing, freezing, grading, storing, or delivering to storage or to market or to a carrier for transportation to market, any agricultural or horticultural commodity, but only if such service is performed as an incident to ordinary farming operations or, in the case of fruits and vegetables, as an incident to the preparation of such fruits or vegetables for market. The provisions of this subparagraph shall not be deemed to be applicable with respect to services performed in connection with commercial canning or commercial freezing or in connection with any agricultural or horticultural commodity after its delivery to a terminal market for distribution for consumption.

Members of the committee have assured us that it was the intention of the committee to make the exemptions of the operations performed in getting fresh fruit and vegetables ready for market covered by the amendment on page 15, section 5 (b) (12) of the bill which I have just proposed. There is every reason why such operations should be exempted. No one with assurance can claim that the language used in this behalf in the Norton bill accomplishes the declared intentions of the committee. When the distinguished chairman of the Labor Committee on Monday moves to suspend the rules and call up for immediate consideration H. R. 5435, it would be so easy for her to include in her request permission to consider the amendment on page 15 of her bill that I have proposed. On behalf of every producer of fresh fruits and vegetables in the United States I earnestly appeal to her to do so.

(Mr. ROBERTSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a clipping from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point in regard to a question which I wish to propound to the chairman of the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I attempted to get a little time to ask Mme. Chairman of the Labor Committee a question or two, but failed to get in on the questioning. I wish to take a brief moment now. Before asking the question uppermost in my mind I would like to make this statement:

I worked earnestly in the first, second, and third sessions of the Seventy-fifth Congress to get a proper wage and hour bill enacted. The RECORD will show this to be true. It is also true that I regarded such legislation as carrying out the 1936 party platform and promises made to the unorganized laboring masses of our country, affecting chiefly those in the South and in that part of our country lying west of the Mississippi River. I sensed the great difficulty in passing any general law for the benefit of the urban East which did not work to the disadvantage of the rural West, and especially of the mining industry in the intermountain country. Congressman MURDOCK of Utah and I endeavored to get an amendment, and came very nearly doing so, which would have relieved the employers and the employees of a burden in the many small, isolated mining camps in our States and throughout the mining region. Even after the bill became law I still had the impression that there was enough leeway for the Administrator to relieve the intolerable situation which a too strict interpretation and enforcement of the law would bring about.

At that time we westerners pointed out that it was the hour provision of the bill and not the wage provision that concerned mining men. Employees in the mines of the West get good wages—far, far above the minimum wage placed in the law. We recognize that there is no surplus of labor in many of these isolated mining camps, and that it would be impossible for many of the small companies or mine owners to cut the workweek of his present force and employ additional men, and it would be equally impossible to permit his men to work as many hours per week as formerly, paying them time and a half for overtime. The miners themselves did not like to have their week shortened from fifty-some-odd hours down to 44 and be left in enforced idleness so large a part of the time and so far away from home or comfortable habitation.

I remarked to certain mining men last summer about the time the law was to go into effect, that I thought I understood the intent of Congress, and it was my opinion that an operator could continue to employ his laborers the same number of hours per week at the same total rate of pay under the law, if he found it impossible under the circumstances to pay time and a half for overtime. Anything that looks like wage cutting is abhorrent to me, and certainly the Fair Standards Act did not contemplate any wage cutting, nor did it contemplate reduction of employment. Quite the contrary. I am equally adverse to any clever evasion of the law, keeping the letter yet violating the spirit thereof, but it was my judgment at that time and is now that an employer could meet the requirements of this act without making any change in the pay roll in those cases where his wages previously had been far above the minimum written into the law. Mining operations were practically all of this kind because wages paid are unusually high. The employer could do this by merely making a bookkeeping adjustment of the hourly rate of pay in such a way that overtime could be paid at the rate of one and a half as the law requires. This presupposes that if a workman loses any time he shall not be penalized because of this adjustment in the hourly rate of pay.

I do not know how many employers of miners saw fit to tackle the problem in that manner. I was delighted with the fine spirit of many of the employers with whom I talked. If the companies were at all prosperous, most of them complied with the law as they understood it with little complaint. One company, not especially prosperous, increased its total pay roll by changing from three 8-hour shifts to four 6-hour shifts and continued to pay their laborers the same total wage as before. Another company that I know of continued to work their men the same number of hours as before but paid them time and a half for overtime. I think the framers of this measure hoped that something like that would happen throughout the country. I do not know of a single employer who took my view as I have just expressed it and adjusted his hourly rate of pay on the books last year and continued working his men the same hours and paying the same weekly wages as before. No doubt many companies felt that that was a dangerous legal question, that the Administrator himself might or might not view it in that light, and that after all the courts ordinarily decide what the law means.

With this statement I wish to ask the chairman of the Labor Committee or any member speaking for the committee, is it legally possible, in your judgment, to readjust the hourly rate of pay on the books so as to permit the laborer to work the same number of hours as before and get the same pay without the employer being subject to penalty for violation of the law? Of course, you may say that I am not very sympathetic toward labor when I ask such a question. Oh, yes, I am; but I am also sympathetic toward employers, many of whom are hanging on by the skin of their teeth and who would be forced to shut down operation by a strict interpretation of this law, in these isolated communities especially. My sympathy for the laboring man is such that I do not want him thrown out of employment and on relief.

Naturally, I would like to see this law amended and made definite and clear so that no legal circumvention will be resorted to. However, I do not expect to see amendments put in the bill next Monday, for it will come up under suspension of rules, and no amendments will be permitted. I wish the committee itself had fixed this matter right, as I want to vote again for this bill. However, it appears that I am going to have to do so, so far as the amendments affecting the mining areas are concerned, with the idea of depending upon another body to make the thing definite and fair in its final form. In another respect I am now doing my utmost to bring new life and vitality to a stagnant industry by attempting to induce new capital to enter the field and more suitable regulations under S. E. C. and R. F. C. to that end. Naturally, these two efforts are related and any change in the law to the benefit of employers and employees in mining will help the whole industry as will the bringing in of new capital to stimulate this industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I asked for this time in order to follow the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey with regard to one provision of the bill H. R. 5435, which will come up under the suspension of the rules procedure on Monday.

I am going to address myself particularly to the provision which deals with Puerto Rico. I fully realize, and I think it is most unfortunate indeed, that Congress does not give Puerto Rico the attention and consideration that it deserves. Congress should attach more importance to it. Our entire good-neighbor policy toward Latin America stands or falls on our treatment of Puerto Rico.

My interest in Puerto Rico is due not only to the fact that I represent the largest Puerto Rican constituency, of which I am proud, but also is due to my desire as a progressive to defend the most exploited victims of a most devastating imperialism. I have no personal or political axes to grind, nor have I any relatives to protect on the pay roll of the government of Puerto Rico. I have no right nor any interest in the politics of the island. That is the business of no one but of the people of Puerto Rico. I have a right, however, to defend the people of Puerto Rico against exploitation, tyranny, and betrayal. I have a right as a Member of Congress to fight for their economic and social welfare, and to fight for their liberties. Puerto Rico is part of the United States, and until its status is changed it is our duty to give as much attention, as much care, and as much sympathetic treatment to Puerto Rico and its problems as we do to the problems of any of the people in the United States. Therefore it is for these reasons that I call attention of the House to what this proposed bill will do to wages and hours in Puerto Rico. Section 1 of the bill provides that committees shall be formed, and that these committees shall make studies and report and make recommendations to the Administrator, who, in turn, will follow those recommendations with regard to minimum wages. The sole purpose of this amendment is to do away with the 25-cent-per-hour minimum wage in Puerto Rico. If it had been so written in the bill and the purpose so stated, in my opinion it would have been much more proper, because it would then have directly and frankly stated its purpose rather by accomplishing it in an indirect manner. Just why are these committees proposed? The two main industries that are seeking relief from this 25-cent minimum are sugar and the needle-trade industry.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. SECCOMBE. The gentleman will agree that there is no one in Puerto Rico being paid $200 a month on an ordinary white-collar job.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. No. If there are, they are not involved here. Politicians and appointees of the Governor receive more than $200 per month.

Mr. SECCOMBE. That is one of the provisions that is absolutely unjust.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I do not know of any such wage being paid to workers in Puerto Rico. I shall give the wages being paid there. First of all, there is one thing that we should get here, and get it straight, and that is that there has been no enforcement whatsoever of the Fair Labor Standards Act in Puerto Rico. There may have been one or two isolated instances, but, generally speaking, there has been no enforcement at all, and why? First of all, under the leadership of the Governor of Puerto Rico the various sugar corporations and the chiseling industry—the needlework industry—that has run away from the States and has gone down to Puerto Rico because of the slave wages that are being paid down there, announced from the outset that they were not going to respect the law, that they were going to ignore it, and the Governor on many, many occasions, not only in speeches but in conferences, advised them not to worry about the law; that the day was not far off when this law would be changed. The Governor, these wage chiselers, and the sugar corporations joined forces in a successful campaign to nullify a law enacted by Congress. Now, we are asked to put the stamp of approval on this ruthless and arrogant nullification. Almost 70 percent of the sugar land in Puerto Rico is owned by four large American sugar corporations. It has been established by a memorandum which I have before me, prepared by Robert W. Claiborne, who was the Territorial representative of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor in Puerto Rico, that the sugar industry can pay 25 cents per hour minimum, and that the only reason why it does not pay 25 cents per hour minimum is because the sugar industry has been assured that there would be changes in this law. The sugar industry has been making huge profits in Puerto Rico and still is. Everybody knows that it can pay 25 cents per hour to its workers and should. Mr. Claiborne is in a better position than anyone else to know. He says they can and should. The workers in Puerto Rico know and demand it. Every scientific survey of the sugar industry in Puerto Rico establishes this. Only certain politicians and lobbyists for the sugar industry will not admit it. I have inquired why this particular provision setting up these committees, giving this flexibility, has been inserted, and I have been told that I should have no fear about the sugar industry; that the wages in sugar would absolutely be 25 cents minimum, and that no administrator would ever set up anything less than 25 cents an hour. But the fact is that they are paying less than 25 cents an hour.

If no committee will recommend and no Administrator will fix payment of less than 25 cents an hour, why create committees with this flexibility that may open the door to a recommendation of less than 25 cents an hour? If that is so, why any flexibility? If it is going to be settled once and for all that 25 cents is to be the minimum, why create the committee? What is the idea of having these committees? Why should this committee be brought into existence to supersede Congress in establishing a minimum? If it is intended by all parties that sugar must pay 25 cents an hour minimum, why have these committees? The answer to that is that they want to give flexibility to the needle trade. They say that the needle trade is very hard hit by this 25-cent minimum provision. First of all, the needle-trade industry in Puerto Rico is the most disgraceful situation ever permitted under the American flag. You have down there 15,000 workers who work in factories, needle-trade factories, and the factory workers receive all the way from 12½ cents an hour down to as low as 2 cents an hour. In one case—and I quote from Claiborne's memorandum to me—a 13-year-old child was receiving 25 cents a week.

So much for the factory workers. Let me explain the system they have for home workers; that is, those who work at home. These chiselers from New York, my own home town, the worst type of labor exploiters, who ran away because in New York they had to pay decent wages, because we forced them to clean up their sweatshops and establish decent working conditions, brought their work to Puerto Rico. Then they gave the work to a contractor. Then the contractor gave it to a subcontractor, and the subcontractor gave it to another sub-subcontractor, and it goes all the way down the line through many subcontractors, each of them receiving a profit from the toil of poor women and children. The poor woman at home receives the following pay: She gets as low as 3 to 5 cents a dozen for hand-rolled handkerchiefs of the best type. They retail for $3 a dozen in Macy's in New York. This means they are paid from 8 to 15 cents a day, and no more. It means a total income of about $30 a year.

Now they say to you, "Well, if we enforce the minimum of 25 cents an hour, we are going to ruin this industry." The facts are, whether you enforce the wage and hour minimum or not, this industry is gradually disappearing from Puerto Rico, not because of wages and hours, because wages and hours have not been in force down there, but because these same chislers who found the New York labor market too high for them, who went to Puerto Rico, have now gone into Asia, because they find that the coolie wages in Asia are much more satisfactory to them than the very low wages in Puerto Rico. So that gradually the needlework from Puerto Rico is being transferred to Asia by the same type of chislers that came to Puerto Rico in order to escape the decent working conditions that were forced upon them in New York.

I think the Congress should know these facts, because wages and hours is being blamed for the destruction of this industry. I say to you that this industry is being destroyed by the same parasites who have established it in Puerto Rico, and I also say that any industry that cannot exist unless it pays as little as 3 to 5 cents a dozen for handkerchiefs, that pays as little as $30 a year, should not be protected by Congress, and it should not be given any exemptions nor any flexibilities under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

That industry has no right to live. It has no right to exist. If it cannot pay better than $30 a year to women and children in Puerto Rico, then we should not permit that industry to live, and most certainly we should not permit that industry to be given any flexibilities under the Fair Labor Standards Act. This industry is dying, anyway. The people who are so horribly exploited by it can be given a new lease on life. First, by our help through the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration; second, by an enforcement of the 500-acre law which will make land available to them for farming; and, third, by enforcement of a decent living wage in those industries that can pay it, such as sugar, as well as in 30 percent of the needle trade; that is, work done in factories. I shall amplify on the question of economic reconstruction for Puerto Rico in another talk. Certainly you cannot be of help to Puerto Rico by perpetuating this abysmal wage slavery. Every enlightened Puerto Rican desires its destruction.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. Is it the gentleman's view that this industry committee provided for in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands would fix a rate of wages so low as to defeat the purpose of this act?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It has to, for this reason: This act establishes 25 cents per hour minimum. Then what is the purpose of this committee? It is admitted that sugar can pay and should pay a minimum of 25 cents an hour. Therefore they say, "We want this committee to study the situation with regard to the needle industry." Why do you want this committee for the needle industry? To give the needle trade an exemption under this law? To give it any advantages under this law, when that needle trade should not be permitted to exist if it cannot pay better than 3 to 5 cents a dozen for handkerchiefs or $30 a year? So the only thing this committee can do is recommend less than 25 cents an hour. If it is true, as they contend, that they cannot exist except by paying these awful wages, then all this committee will do is recommend a continuation of those wages. In other words, it is opening the door to perpetuating the worst system of exploitation that exists under the American flag.

Mr. LEAVY. I just wondered if this restriction that provided——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am just coming to that. That restriction which says that no wages will be fixed which will place Puerto Rican articles in a position which is unfair to the products produced here in the United States—why should we leave that question in the hands of any committee? Let the Congress of the United States settle that. We settled it when we set 25 cents an hour minimum. We established that, let us keep it for the sake of our States and for the sake of the people of Puerto Rico. Anybody can come here and say, "Conditions in my section are different than the conditions in other sections." True. That is why we fixed the minimum of 25 cents per hour. I say that that minimum can work in Puerto Rico. Do you know what the real question behind this whole business is? It is $5,000,000 per year. Sugar forced to pay the 25-cent minimum will have to pay $5,000,000 more in wages in Puerto Rico. That is what this whole fight is about. The needle-trade argument is just an alibi. They know that that industry will die out. They want flexibility here primarily for the sugar corporations. I say it is to the advantage of Puerto Rico and it is to the advantage of Congress which appropriates relief funds for Puerto Rico, to give the added income to Puerto Rican sugar workers, in the sum of $5,000,000, and let this diabolical needle industry go by the wayside, at least 70 percent of it, which cannot pay more than $30 a year. The sugar industry, I repeat, can pay 25 cents minimum per hour. Examine their huge profits. The argument for flexibility to save another industry in Puerto Rico is just a sham. Sugar, which can pay, is being dissolved in the coffee cup of flexibility. Since it is admitted by all that the sugar industry will never be allowed to pay less than 25 cents an hour, although it is paying much less now and has ignored the law up to the present, why do you not refuse any flexibility to the sugar industry. If it is true that the sugar industry must pay 25 cents an hour, why give it flexibility by this proposed amendment. Why do you not freeze the present minimum and enforce it?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Has the gentleman considered the fact that these industry committees will have citizens of the United States on them?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I am not stating that the members of these committees will not be people of integrity; no. I assume they will be people of integrity, whether its members be from the States or from Puerto Rico. But why give the sugar industry an open door to avoid paying what it should pay?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOXEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. We must, however, recognize the purpose for which these committees are formed. Taking into consideration the fact that this needle industry cannot pay 25 cents an hour, as they claim, and taking into consideration the further fact that the sugar industry can pay 25 cents an hour, why not save the situation by freezing it at 25 cents, making it so there will be an increase of $5,000,000 to the sugar workers of Puerto Rico?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman says they can pay 25 cents. I do not know whether they can or not.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; it can. I suggest that the gentleman consult Mr. Claibourne, who is in the best position to know, because he was the representative of the wage and hour administration in Puerto Rico.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Does the gentleman contend—is it his statement—that Mr. Andrews, the Administrator, and the industry committees, composed partly of people from the United States, are going to fix a wage that will give an advantage to Puerto Rico over the United States?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I contend that no flexibility should be allowed to an industry that can pay the present minimum.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is not flexible.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Oh, yes. The facts I am giving here are not taken from Mr. Andrews' report. Mr. Andrews has not been down in Puerto Rico. I am giving facts and figures from the report of Robert W. Claiborne, who was a conscientious administrator appointed from the civil-service lists, and on the ground in Puerto Rico. He represented the Wage and Hour Division in Puerto Rico. I am submitting facts and figures from his memorandum.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I hope the gentleman will excuse me. I want now to tell the story to the House as to what happened to Mr. Claiborne, who valiantly sought to enforce this law. He was conscientious. He was taken from the civil-service lists, a former captain in the United States Marine Corps, as honest as the day is long. What happened to him? First of all he was called in by the Governor and told that if he went around stirring up trouble, as the Governor put it, or trying to enforce this law, that he was risking his life and limb. Then the Governor, the sugar corporations, and the needle-industry chiselers ganged up against him and our law. Let us see what help he received from Washington. I have sent for all the correspondence that took place between Mr. Claiborne and the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor. This man was beset on all sides with all kinds of sabotage. He had but two assistants, yet the territory he had to cover is equivalent to an area two-thirds the size of the State of Connecticut, and the population is a good deal more than 1,700,000 people. He wrote asking help from Washington. Let us see what happened, for I think Congress should have this situation.

He wrote a letter on February 23, in which he set forth his troubles, stating, among other things, the following:

> On the night of February 21, at about 9 p. m., when I was walking through my grapefruit orchard from one of our houses to the other one, I was shot at by an unknown party. I have not discussed this with anyone other than the chief of police, to whom I at once went to secure a license to carry a revolver and borrow one on his recommendation. I am inclined to think that the person who fired the shot was either a needle-work factory owner or put up to it by a needle-work factory owner, as there is no worker who would voluntarily attack us unless crazed by liquor; in other words, put up to it.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. I agree with the gentleman about these sweatshops. I maintain that a business establishment which cannot pay 25 cents an hour should go out of business. In fact, there are too many exemptions in this bill to satisfy me. I would ask the gentleman, however, if it is not the law at the present time that the Administrator of the act has the legal right to make an investigation, and if he finds that a corporation can pay 25 cents an hour he has the legal right to enforce compliance with the law?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am trying to show the Congress that the largest industry of Puerto Rico can pay 25 cents an hour. Why disturb that situation for the so-called needle-trade industry?

Mr. DUNN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks correspondence between Mr. Claiborne, Mr. Andrews, and other officials relating to this situation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield that I may propound a question?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. COX. Is it the gentleman's purpose in inserting this correspondence in the RECORD to develop anything in the nature of a charge that he himself is making against the Governor of Puerto Rico?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. No. I have made my statement with regard to the Governor of Puerto Rico as to his activities in the wage and hour field.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. With regard to the Governor of Puerto Rico, at the proper time and on the proper occasion I shall here develop all of my charges against him.

Mr. COX. And there will be an answer awaiting the gentleman when he does.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; but may I say to the gentleman from Georgia that I have presented my charges to the President of the United States, and those charges are in writing.

Mr. COX. They have been ignored, have they not?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. They have not been ignored. Not only is that statement incorrect, but it is grossly incorrect.

Mr. COX. What statement?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The statement that they have been ignored. They have not been ignored.

Mr. COX. Has anything been done with the gentleman's charges?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Certainly; they have turned them over to the Department of the Interior for a complete and thorough investigation, and a report is being awaited as a result of that investigation. That certainly is not ignoring the charges.

Mr. COX. At least the gentleman has not got any action on the charge he made.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman does not expect action on charges that have been made 2 weeks ago last Thursday, does he?

Mr. COX. It is not what I may expect. What has the gentleman accomplished?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I have accomplished plenty. The President of the United States has turned my charges over to the Secretary of the Interior for investigation. I think that is a sufficient accomplishment as a result of the charges I have made. I am ready to stand by those charges at the proper time. I did my duty in presenting them to the President of the United States, and he did his duty in turning them over to the proper administrative officer in charge of Puerto Rico. He turned them over to the Secretary of the Interior, who is conducting an investigation of the charges I have made.

With regard to these letters, answering the gentleman's reservation, they deal entirely with correspondence between Mr. Claiborne, Mr. Andrews, Mr. Sifton, and Mr. A. L. Fletcher, all members of the Wage and Hour Division. With regard to wages and hours, I have made a statement in my speech as to the conduct of Governor Winship, who has made many speeches against enforcement and who has encouraged exploiters of labor to ignore the law.

Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the relationship between the Wage and Hour Division and its representatives in Puerto Rico, I ask unanimous consent that this correspondence may be inserted in the RECORD. This is the correspondence which I received from the Department of Labor, Wage and Hour Division, and contains the letters that passed between Mr. Robert W. Claiborne, the territorial representative of the Wage and Hour Division in Puerto Rico, and Mr. Andrews and other officials in the Wage and Hour Division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

There was no objection.

If this office can be of further service to you, kindly advise.

Respectfully yours,

ELMER F. ANDREWS, Administrator.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION,
Mayaguez, P. R., February 23, 1939.

To: Mr. A. L. Fletcher, Assistant Administrator.
From: Robert W. Claiborne, Territorial Representative, etc.
Subject: Request for revolvers.

1. Further reference is made to my letter stating advisability of your inspectors and representatives in Puerto Rico having a revolver. I wish to bring to your attention two facts.

2. On the night of February 21, at about 9 p. m., when I was walking through my grapefruit orchard from one of our houses to the other one, I was shot at by an unknown party.

3. I have not discussed this with anyone other than the chief of police, to whom I at once went to secure a license to carry a revolver, and borrow one on his recommendation. A license will be issued me today by the district court, which unfortunately has some publicity attached to it, although we have asked the judge to hear it in chambers and thus reduce the publicity.

4. I am inclined to think that the person who fired the shot was either a needlework factory owner, or put up to it by a needlework factory owner, as there is no worker who would voluntarily attack us unless crazed by liquor—in other words, put up to do it.

5. Unfortunately, my farm is in an isolated part of the community, and being outside the city of Mayaguez the police cannot give me any protection. This is just as well as it will avoid publicity.

6. Yesterday morning I received a special-delivery letter from the head of the most powerful labor union in the island—not the Free Federation of Labor—which reads as follows:

"I hope you will not excite yourself with this letter, but I need to see you personally in San Juan, the sooner the better. I have some confidential news which I consider you ought to know for your own safety" (safety underlined several times). "Please let me know how soon you can be here, hour and place to meet you where I will be protected."

7. As I think you know, our office manager is a captain of the National Guard. I am an honorably discharged officer of the United States Marine Corps.

8. Therefore, please do not have any worry about this matter as it is not unusual for Puerto Rico, and was expected when I accepted the job. I did not, however, think the issue would come to a head quite so quickly.

9. Will you please send down from the States, as quickly as possible, not less than four revolvers and ammunition? They can be borrowed from some armed force of the United States Government on quick notice. It is difficult, if not impossible, to purchase one here. It would mean that I would have to buy one myself in the States, which I should not be asked to do by Washington under the circumstances.

10. I answered the letter above referred to by telegram, suggesting that if the matter was really serious, the labor leader had better come to Mayaguez at my expense. I have a telegram in answer that he will be here this afternoon at 3 p. m., and will go to my farm, as he wishes to avoid the publicity attached to coming to our office.

11. I will write you about this further, or if necessary, cable.

12. Since dictating this letter, a labor union has come in which in some way heard that sugar was trying to silence us. They offered to put a bodyguard around my farm and to attend us in the office, which I refused with thanks. I mention it to show the sincerity of labor, and also how one's thoughts get down even before they are uttered. I have done the best I could to avoid any publicity.

ROBERT W. CLAIBORNE.

FEBRUARY 28, 1939.

Mr. ROBERT W. CLAIBORNE,
Official Representative, Wage and Hour Division,
Federal Building, Mayaguez, P. R.

DEAR MR. CLAIBORNE: Reference is made to your communication of February 23, in which you inquired as to whether you should make further speeches.

This question has been discussed with Mr. Andrews and Mr. Sifton, and they feel that, in view of the tense situation generally, and, also, in view of the case now pending in Puerto Rico, no further speeches should be made.

With reference to your request for a revolver, I fear that we are not empowered to provide arms to our field people. You might, however, write me in detail the circumstances surrounding the attack made upon you and the names of any witnesses who were present.

Mr. Babe will have arrived in Puerto Rico by the time this letter reaches you. I feel confident that he will be able to advise you on some of the more difficult legal questions with which you are faced.

Very truly yours,

A. L. FLETCHER,
Assistant Administrator.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION,
Mayaguez, P. R., February 23, 1939.

DEAR SNYDER: Until I hear from Washington whether I should give publicity to threats by asking protection of the executive branch of Puerto Rican Government, it seems I had better not appear in public speeches, even though it appears forces are silencing the Federal Government. Being an old United States marine captain, I am not afraid, but it seems wisest not to have any commotion unless with Washington's direct approval.

I recite for you the facts of which I arrive at such a decision:

(1) I was shot at in the garden of my house, night of February 21, at 9 p. m.

(2) A friend, an official of a prominent union, which is not the politically ridden free Federation of Labor, but who does not dare give his name—I have always thought he was a Nationalist—comes this afternoon, in haste, to prevent my speaking at Cabo Roja tonight, stating there was a plot to kidnap me, horsewhip me as "an undesirable citizen" (he could get no facts why this was so), and hand me my ticket to the States, which threat I would be killed or jailed if I returned—they could get affidavits that would jail me in the Puerto Rican courts. (He could get no idea what.)

(3) He has this information from an American resident in the island who stated he, the American, would so testify in court if necessary.

(4) The American's name is supposed to be Mr. Frank Hoffman, who rooms at San Justo Street, No. 8, Casa de Hospedajo. Also writes for a paper published at No. 45 Ponce de Leon Avenue, No. 45, stop 5, name of paper El Progresista.

(5) He stated to my friend, whose name I cannot give, as in confidence that he, Hoffman, was in his rooms at San Justo Street, No. 8, when the dueno, also owner of a bootblacking parlor below, came and started talking about the law, and stated I would be soon whipped as an undesirable citizen, given my ticket to the States, etc. The man who told Hoffman is said to be one Clemente Farina.

Is there any way for you to have this investigated without giving publicity to it or going to the police?

Apparently the objection was that I spoke before gatherings of sugar workers, and the statement was made nothing would be done if I stopped talking.

This seems so strangely similar to what was said to you by a reputable citizen, despite his effrontery to hint freedom of speech should be curbed, that I am wondering whether there is any remote connection.

Anyhow, do what you think wise, if anything. And if you need to talk further, please phone me, or I'll go to San Juan. I think it might be a good idea anyhow to run down Hoffman.

I don't want to have a police guard as it wouldn't prevent my being framed on some dishonorable charge, which, whatever it was, would always be believed even if disproved. What's your idea?

Regards,

CLAIBORNE.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,

Mayaguez, P. R., March 2, 1939.

To: Mr. A. L. Fletcher.
Attention: Mr. M. K. Wood, fiscal section.
From: Robert W. Claiborne, Acting Territorial Representative.
Subject: Permit to carry a revolver and bill for same.

(1) I enclose bill rendered by Mr. Oscar Souffront, lawyer, for securing permit for me to carry a revolver, an elaborate procedure necessitating an appearance in the district court to be questioned on one's motives, morale, and character at a public hearing announced in the newspapers.

(2) I was given a clean bill of health apparently for the 4 years I lived here, which can be noted on my dossier in Washington.

(3) I was also given a bill for $12.85, which I am wondering where Washington can find some way, as I lived in this country for 4 years without even having to lock my doors at night until I took the position of territorial representative.

(4) I am also wondering if Washington has sent the revolvers I asked for and the ammunition. The police captain gave or loaned me a revolver which, of course, I have to return.

(5) I am of the opinion that if you are going to have inspections made in this country, not only will your inspectors have to be armed but you have to detail a Federal Government plain-clothed detective or G-man from Washington as we ought not to have to secure the insular government for such protection in particular as labor will distrust us the moment we have a policeman on the premises.

(6) Please note that Mr. Souffront charges nothing for his services, which is a distinct courtesy for which we are most appreciative.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,

Mayaguez, P. R., March 2, 1939.

DEAR SIFTON: So long as the Fair Labor Standards Act is in Puerto Rico you cannot avert disturbance, which might well prejudice the whole show.

The ruling released on tobacco exempts practically everyone in that industry, putting all to work again on their previous status of exploited slaves.

A similar redefinition of area of production is due from Andrews for both fruit and sugar. With the tobacco precedent, it cannot be avoided. If a court would uphold Andrews' ruling on tobacco (which as a lawyer I doubt) they'd extend it to fruit and sugar, even though Andrews made a distinction in his ruling by words.

That would only leave needlework, which isn't subject to your control in any practical manner, and which isn't obeying nor has any intention of obeying. Certainly you don't think they'd even make an effort to carry out Andrews' rules on home work. Lubin's observation is the same as mine. He knows of no factory in the island closed by the Fair Labor Standards Act, or intending to close. They are confident they can get protection, as the ruling class has always been protected here in its exploitation of labor. Old timers give statistics to show that under the democracy of the United States there has been even more exploitation, even lower standards of living, than under Spain.

I do not think you can have read all I sent up since I left Washington, or else you'd understand and not have been surprised at the Eastern Sugar Co.'s move. A business that faces a $500,000 payroll increase, as they do (in the 42 centrals it would approximate $5,000,000 annually), cannot begin their factory operations on uncertainty. They have tried to get instructions from Washington. They got nothing and saw only shilly-shallying; necessary, perhaps, but confusing to businessmen and labor, both of which groups must be realistic to survive. I gave them what I got—quotations from letters or bulletins—but it was both incomplete and inadequate.

This policy in Washington cannot be altered. But it won't work in Puerto Rico. And you are drifting toward a violent explosion, which I cannot avert any more than I could have averted the injunction sugar sought. And so I told you when I was in Washington, and have written repeatedly: "It is only a question of days now."

There is but one hope to avert this volcano that might blow up the whole law. But please know it is but a hope. I counsel you to follow it, as I have counseled many things in vain.

Announce by cable that: "Until a policy is worked out for Puerto Rico we have closed the investigation and enforcement branch of the Wage and Hour Division in Puerto Rico. Our investigator, Mr. Backus, has been transferred to Washington."

You can then drop me out completely and leave me free to serve labor in the Federal court here. I am the only member of that bar who'd take their cause and who'd turn over the fees to their unions for a relief fund.

Or you can be the surer to keep me in a dormant position where I'd not be tempted to represent employees' suits and close the above quote with: "Mr. Claiborne and the present staff in Mayaguez will be retained for the purpose of statistical study, on the basis of which an enforcement policy will be determined at some later date." This would be a more dignified procedure for the Wage and Hour Division than for me to resign (which I wish to do), owing to the very loyal following I have among labor, especially the C. I. O. It would tend not to bring wages and hours into disrepute—at least, I would so hope—for they'd interpret my resignation as my protest against wages and hours and Washington's not carrying out the law, their law. This in turn might well have repercussions in the States, through certain labor channels.

With kindest regards,
Sincerely,

CLAIBORNE.

MARCH 14, 1939.

MR. MURRAY BACKUS,
Acting Territorial Representative,
Wage and Hour Division, Mayaguez, P. R.

DEAR MR. BACKUS: Transmitted herewith is a letter naming you acting Territorial representative. Immediately upon receipt you will take active and complete charge of the Wage and Hour Division offices and work in Puerto Rico, including the personnel, premises, equipment, and files.

Will you also continue with the active and diligent enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act under the procedures laid down in the Manual for Inspectors issued by the cooperation and enforcement branch of the Division.

Specific complaints of violations of the act are to be investigated under the procedures as set forth in the Inspection Manual.

As rapidly as possible complaints are to be followed up and, in cases in which there appear to be violations of the act, evidence is to be obtained, by checking of pay rolls and other records, interviewing and obtaining statements from employees as to the hours worked and wages paid, and this evidence is to be organized for referral to the legal branch with a view to preparing said cases for litigation, if, in the judgment of the Administrator, litigation is in order.

Very truly yours,

ELMER F. ANDREWS,
Administrator.

In view of your letter of March 2, 1939, we have no alternative but to accept the resignation tendered therein, to become effective upon the receipt of this letter.

[Translation of news article, March 20, 1939]

CLAIBORNE SAYS THAT HE WILL NAME THE INDUSTRIAL COMMITTEES WHEN THE WORKERS RECEIVE THE MINIMUM OF 25 CENTS PER HOUR

The Territorial representative of the wage-hour law in Puerto Rico, Mr. Robert W. Claiborne, sends us the following statements about the naming of the industrial committees:

It is one of my most important duties as administrator of the fair standards of labor law to secure the compliance with the law in respect to article 6 (minimum wage) and article 7 (maximum hours).

I am greatly hindered by a scarcity of personnel and of funds with which to obtain the personnel in accordance with the requirements of the Federal civil service. These funds will be at my disposal when the present Federal Congress takes up the matter in the regular order of its legislative business.

I am hindered even more by the antisocial and intransigent attitude of many employers in not paying the minimum wages unless they can charge to the ultimate consumer the additional amount which they must pay in accordance with this law. Such a point of view would increase the cost of living to such a level as to completely break down the social aims of this administration. These aims are to obtain a standard of living for all workers under the American flag necessary for health, efficiency, and general well-being. There is only one sure way to reach this standard: That the industry share with the worker a reasonable part of the wealth that labor has created.

I am taking account of the interest which all organized labor is taking in the well-being of the workers, whether they are under its standards or not, and I appreciate their tenacious and loyal adherence to the fair labor standards law and their opposition to any amendment to the law at the expense of the well-being of the workers. Indeed, labor has recently expressed such a point of view clearly through the agency of the press.

Now that this standard has been set, we can unite our forces and cooperate to secure the ends that both seek for—complete obedience in good faith to all the terms of the law, ends that both hope to reach speedily, the payment of 25 cents an hour for a 44-hour workweek.

I am ready to cooperate actively with labor at any time and I believe that my services in recent months show that I have sacrificed health and means for the sake of the worker.

When the day comes that the workers in Puerto Rico covered by the law receive their just wages of 25 cents an hour, I think the day will have arrived for the organization of the industrial committees anticipated in article 8 of the fair labor standards law.

The sole purpose of these committees is to increase the minimum wage from 25 cents an hour to 40 cents an hour, but now the organization of such committees would be an excessive waste of energy until we are further advanced in obtaining the compliance with the program of a universal minimum of 25 cents an hour.

I think that this is the practical point of view, and I ask the active cooperation of all labor and of all the leaders representing labor in securing such an end speedily. As soon as we have reached the first step we can move toward the next, which will be possible by means of the industrial committees.

I repeat, the purpose of the industrial committees is to fix a minimum wage greater than 25 cents an hour, as high as possible up to 40 cents an hour, for all the workers in the industries covered by the law, so that it does not give an advantage of competency to any group within the industry and does not substantially reduce the opportunities for work.

I hope that the time for such committees is near, and it will come more rapidly the more promptly I receive the active and personal cooperation of all those persons in the community whose social consciences demand that they give their most definite, complete, and loyal aid to the law of fair labor standards and to its representative in Puerto Rico.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Claiborne asked for protection. He also asked for protection with reference to another matter. He was threatened to be kidnaped, to be horsewhipped, and to be kicked out as an undesirable citizen. He communicated this to the Department and discussed the matter because he had not received any communication whatsoever.

He wrote a personal letter to Mr. Sifton, Assistant Administrator of wages and hours, and in this personal letter he makes the following statement:

There is but one hope to avert this volcano—

He is talking about the terrible situation of unrest that exists as a result of nonenforcement of this law. In other words, as the Government was not pushing enforcement.

Mr. Claiborne stated:

There is but one hope to avert this volcano that might blow up the whole law. But please know it is but a hope. I counsel you to follow it, as I have counseled many things in vain.

Announce by cable that: "Until a policy is worked out for Puerto Rico, we have closed the investigation and enforcement branch of the wage and hour division in Puerto Rico. Our investigator, Mr. Backus, has been transferred to Washington."

Then he goes on to say:

You can drop me out completely, and leave me free to serve labor in the Federal court here. I am the only member of that bar who'd take their cause—and who'd turn over the fees to their unions for a relief fund.

This was a personal letter sent to his friend Paul Sifton. What happened? He received the following letter:

DEAR MR. CLAIBORNE: The Deputy Administrator has brought your recent correspondence to my attention.

In view of your letter of March 2, 1939, we have no alternative but to accept the resignation tendered therein, to become effective upon the receipt of this letter.

I do this with sincere appreciation of the zeal with which you have sought to carry out your duties.

Here is a man who never resigned. Here is a man who is trying to enforce the law. Here is a man who was seeking the cooperation of his own office back here in Washington, but received no cooperation. All he heard was that there was going to be a change in the law. He was shot at, kidnap threats were made against him, he was threatened to be horsewhipped, and he was threatened to be kicked out of Puerto Rico. These threats were all made by the needle-trade crowd and other exploiters of labor, for they will profit by this amendment.

When he writes a letter to the Assistant Administrator, what does he get? He gets a reply, "Your resignation is accepted."

I think the situation is most astounding and I hope the membership of the House will have this situation in mind when it votes on this particular section and this particular amendment with regard to Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, let us give a square deal to the people of Puerto Rico when we consider this proposed amendment on Monday.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the special orders for today, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Puerto Rico. It is all right with me if he wants to speak ahead of me for 5 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I wonder if it would not be agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] under the circumstances that exist at the present time to permit the gentleman from Puerto Rico to draw an issue with the gentleman from New York who has just made certain charges?

Mr. DARROW. We discussed that a moment ago.

Mr. COX. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DARROW. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a statement of the Carr Canning Co., of Red Key, Ind., and a tabulation in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this body will next Monday be called upon to consider the majority's recommendations, incorporated in H. R. 5435, for revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act, I want especially to urge every Member's attention to an extremely significant time study, submitted to me by the Caar Canning Co., of Red Key, Ind.

This study exhaustively covers the company's piece-work labor records for the 6 years of 1933 to 1938, inclusive. Since the entire study would unduly burden the RECORD, I submit only the complete transcript of a single year, together with the statistical record of a group of employees covering the entire 6-year period. The complete study is in my office, and available to any Member who wishes to investigate it.

In commending this very timely material to your attention, I want to observe that it might be matched in a thousand small industries not only in Indiana but anywhere else within the jurisdiction of the wage and hour law.

This study will forcibly remind you that it is extremely difficult, if not entirely impossible, to devise a labor-standards law of general jurisdiction which will not cause violent dislocations in American industries, and most especially among the smaller industries which are of such great importance in the American economy.

You must be particularly impressed, also, with the inescapable logic of the conclusions based upon this study, which are a part of the material submitted. Note especially the alternatives which confront this typical canning enterprise under the application of the law which will enforce a minimum wage of 25 cents per hour:

First. The company must absorb the differential between the minimum proposed and the actual earnings as recorded here; or Second. The company must raise the price of its products to absorb the increase.

Third. If the potential market or the present profit market will neither safely absorb that differential, then the company must displace the substandard workers insofar as the labor market offers persons of greater proficiency. If proficient labor is not available, then production must be curtailed.

One other alternative remains. Under the incentive of labor shortage or high labor costs, the industry will redouble its efforts to develop new labor-saving machinery. When that happens, we switch from a legislative, and hence temporary, dislocation to an economic or permanent dislocation. The door to opportunity in either case is effectively closed to the workers threatened by the application of the proposed law.

I repeat that this or a similar set of circumstances will prevail in thousands of small industries and businesses under the proposed amendments. Even within my district there are several hundred canneries, dairy-products, and food-processing plants, and a wide range of smaller industries affected. As an example, consider the plight of the independent telephone companies, which serve the smaller communities of America—in fact, provide their only means of rapid communication. True, the proposed bill does make some concession to this important group of small companies, but it fails to go far enough.

All of you know something of the operation of a small, independent telephone company. Its financial position is precarious. If it is not actually in bankruptcy or on the verge of it, the profits are entirely too small to withstand any sharp increase of labor costs. The employees are almost invariably family and community people, who could find no other occupation if their telephone company failed; yet this proposed amendment will inevitably force a violent change in these companies.

Here, again, are the unpleasant alternatives. The company will be forced to increase its rates or to put in automatic equipment, which will permanently displace many employees—if it can exist under the new law long enough to attempt either. I am informed that 90 percent of the subscribers on independent telephone lines in my district are farmers. These telephones are vital links to summon help in case of sickness, fire, or other emergency. The farmer must have that telephone. But, surely, agriculture is so sorely beset that he would not assume any additional cost of an increase in telephone rates.

The serious implications of this measure, which we will be asked to accept or reject next Monday, can scarcely be overstressed. Still, we are asked—yes; even ordered—to accept the arbitrary conclusions of the majority without discussion or amendment. We are placed in the unpleasant position of being forced to take half a loaf or none. We are ordered to take the little concession to vital American interests which the administration is willing to make or to forego any improvement in the existing law. And this is the administration in action, whose leaders talk of business appeasement and urge a spirit of cooperation in the interests of recovery.

This is typical New Deal practice. It is the arbitrary enforcement of New Deal dictum under gag rule. It is diabolical cleverness which forces the conscientious Members of this body to accept the relief which the measure promises, in the hope that even these few concessions will help the suffering economy.

And this procedure is invoked in blithe indifference to the fact that the questions involved are of the utmost seriousness to the country.

STATEMENT OF CONCLUSIONS ACCOMPANYING A TIME STUDY MADE BY THE CAAR CANNING CO., RED KEY, IND.

The information hereto attached refers to the employees only who peel tomatoes, or our piece-work employees. It is a true transcript of the records for this class of employees, and is furnished by the Caar Canning Co., Red Key, Ind.

The Caar Canning Co. is located at Red Key, Ind., and has been in continuous operation since 1917, the date of its organization. It is not the smallest nor the largest canning plant—an average-sized plant. It is situated in an agricultural community, the lineage of whose population is quite predominantly American. The agricultural operations are stock raising and diversified farming.

Red Key is a town of nearly 1,400 population and serves an agricultural community. Its most important industry is its canning plant. Like all canning plants of this character, it touches the economic life of a very large portion of the community. Its average contracts with farmers approximate 1,400 acres annually. Its payments for delivered tomatoes has approximated $75,000 annually for the past 6 years. It employs at peak season 450 ladies, 300 of whom peel tomatoes. It has paid these peelers $64,883.93 in the past 6 years, an annual average of $10,813.99. The farmers with whom it contracts tomato acreage will approximate 300, living within a radius of 15 to 18 miles of the plant. The lady employees are from the town and the surrounding country. Almost all of them are housewives—a surprising number being the housewives of farmers. These are all casual laborers; very few either wish or would accept permanent employment.

This canning plant in its size, location, extent of operations, and character of employees presents a fair cross-section of the canning industry as we know it. Our problems and distresses are alike with other plants. The paralyzing restrictions and unwise laws affect the employee, the farmer-producer, and the plant alike.

The wage and hour law, to be just and equitable, must: (a) Not substantially reduce employment, nor (b) decrease production, nor (c) increase costs to the consuming public.

Examination of the accompanying study shows that 51 to 70 percent of the employees during this 6-year period fell below 25 cents per hour, and so would be affected by the proposed minimum. If the company's market could not carry a price increase, or if profits did not permit the company to absorb the difference, the earnings of this group would be denied them by law.

To understand this more fully, your attention is directed to the attached transcript of 1938. Note that ages range from 18 to 75; that 256 were housewives, of which 118 were farmers' wives; that only 44 were unmarried. Single women came largely from homes in the community and worked beside mothers and married sisters. This pay roll is typical throughout each of the six transcripts submitted. They are casual laborers only, in nowise competing with regular labor, organized or unorganized; and they do this seasonal work to earn what they can to assist in school and household expenses. The record obviously shows the variation in age, in aptitude, and efficiency. They have been paid for their work, all on the same basis. They seek work, because they are self-supporting and self-respecting. We hope to be able to continue to provide employment unless the law denies the opportunity.

Should a rigid base rate force the removal of these employees, the Caar Canning Co.—and we believe this to be true of the industry generally—will not be able to replace them because labor may not be available in the community. Production must then be reduced, acreage contracts curtailed, and this annual income taken from the community. Further, curtailed production leaves profitable plant operation questionable; and the plant itself may be lost to the community.

In addition to summary for 1938, there is submitted a consolidated Peeling Record—Statistics—condensed for the convenience of the record. Note the average wage per hour for the 6-year period; the variations between individuals, and the variations of the individual income from year to year. Similar variations by weekly income appear in the yearly transcripts. After an examination of the variable factors which appear, these questions suggest themselves:

(A) How may an equitable and just base wage be applied to casual labor of highly variable competence, working under conditions which vary sharply from year to year, from month to month, or even from week to week? Labor costs must be approximated closely ahead of the canning season if the company is to remain solvent. It is submitted that this is impossible with a fixed minimum per hour wage base.

(B) What shall be done with the less-than-average wage earner? Shall she be denied the opportunity to work and earn what is within her capacity, and to maintain her sense of self-help and self-support? To close this opportunity to persons who may be in the marginal group is further to make her a potential public charge, because there is neither moral justification or financial capacity for the employer to absorb the charge sufficient to make the base rate.

(C) When the less efficient are denied work, where is the employer to secure replacement labor? Casual or seasonal labor presents a problem at best in smaller communities. It is almost certain that a supply of efficient labor under the proposed requirements would be unavailable locally. The wage proposed is too low to attract desirable help from outside the community. With no labor available, reduced production is inevitable. Thus the result of denying labor in the first instance is a denial to the farmer-producers and to the entire community.

(D) How is the company to avoid loss under the conditions which the proposed amendments will impose? Acreage contracts are made with the farmers many months in advance, which the farmers are already performing. These contracts were predicated upon prevailing practice, and the reasonable belief that the administration of the wage and hour law would not disturb existing relationships during a canning year. Thus an inevitable loss is imposed upon the canner, who must fulfill his contracts, on the one hand, and make up wage differentials or destroy crops, on the other.

This company urges the Congress not to shut the door of opportunity for any American citizen to work; nor to bring about serious dislocations in this and thousands of other American industries and businesses.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, now that revision or amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, generally referred to as the wage and hour law, has been acknowledged as being necessary, I believe attention should be called to the dire need for relief being accorded to wholesaling and distributing establishments, which are faced with conditions and circumstances by which it is practically impossible to operate at less than 44 hours a week.

The maximum hours section of the present law provides for a workweek of 44 hours during the first year of its operation, then a workweek of 42 hours during the second year, and 40 hours each workweek thereafter. The first year of operation under these provisions will expire on October 24.

To bring this matter to the direct attention of Congress, and in the hope that it would receive favorable consideration and action, I introduced the bill H. R. 4631, the purpose of which is to provide the continuance of the 44-hour workweek for employees engaged in certain wholesaling and distributing establishments. The text of the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of that specified in such subsection without paying the compensation for overtime employment prescribed therein if such employee is so employed in an establishment the principal portion of the business of which is wholesaling or distributing, and if such employee receives compensation for employment in excess of 44 hours in any workweek at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed."

By reason of my many years of experience in the retail business, as well as a small wholesaler, I can fully appreciate the conditions under which a wholesaler and distributor must operate to render the service which is expected and needed by their customers.

Distribution has been defined as the retail and wholesale business of bringing the consumer into contact with the products of the farm and factory. The distributor and wholesaler are the direct mediums for the purchasing and storing of such products to meet the needs of the retailer and ultimately the consumer.

Wholesalers and distributors are distinctly service institutions. They necessarily must operate in a manner which will meet the requirements of their customers, which in many instances cannot be anticipated in advance, and need immediate attention. If they cannot do so, their business, as well as the business of all who depend upon them for service and supplies, will naturally be retarded, and the wants of the ultimate consumer cannot be met.

The wholesale food distributor may appropriately be used as an example. His is a service trade. He scours the four corners of the earth for food products of various sorts which he feels will be called for in his respective markets. These food products are then made available on call to all types of consumers, such as institutions, hotels, restaurants, steamships, summer camps, grocery stores, and so forth. Frequently, such trade requires, among other things, delivery on call, no matter what time of day or night, rain or shine, and, if you please, even flood or fire; for when there is demand for food, the service must be performed at once. Equally as important, and having as many or more emergency requirements, are the wholesale druggists. In fact, the demands for service of this character applies to the entire wholesale and distributing industry.

Employees of the wholesaler and distributor should not be subject to the same restrictions as those engaged in manufacturing, processing and mining, and so forth. Such labor can operate until a certain inventory has been created—that is, until certain standard stock has been created to meet or exceed demands—whereupon there frequently are reductions in force.

Practically all retailers are not subject to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, inasmuch as they are engaged in intrastate business. Most of them remain open over 50 hours a week, and of necessity the wholesaler and distributor should observe hours somewhat in the same line.

Closing on Saturdays would be a detriment to the wholesaler and distributor, as a considerable volume of business is transacted on week ends; moreover, industrial plants make repairs and replacements at that time to enable their employees to start work promptly on Monday morning with the machinery they operate in perfect condition.

To eliminate Saturday as a workday, or to reduce the standard week in the wholesale trade to less than 44 hours would be an undue hardship and would penalize wholesalers and distributors by requiring the payment of overtime rates for a 44-hour week.

Thousands of items are carried by the wholesaler and distributor, and it is necessary for warehouse employees to have a thorough knowledge of the use, location, and so forth, of the merchandise. Employment of people on a part-time basis would be impractical and a definite liability to the distribution system of the country. On the other hand, the overtime rates would inflate wholesale and distributing costs, which would eventually be reflected in a higher price to the ultimate consumer. This higher price would be difficult, if not impossible, to obtain, due to the fact that the manufacturer in many instances advertises the consumer price, and the wholesalers and distributors are not in a position to raise their prices. Other outlets, therefore, might secure the business and hurt the independent wholesalers, distributors, and independent merchants.

Payment of time and a half for hours over 40 to the employees of the wholesaler and distributor would make profitable operation a real problem, if not an impossibility. Large profits are not obtainable in these businesses, and such an increase of expense would be a very distinct disadvantage.

A large number of wholesalers and distributors operate with a limited personnel—one shipping clerk, one traffic man, and so forth—and to replace these individuals for short periods, so that their workweek would not total over 40 hours, would be impossible, as their work is of a specialized nature, for which they have been definitely trained. Furthermore, they must be on hand during the open hours of the business, so that customers will receive prompt and efficient service.

It is my opinion that this law was not aimed at the wholesaling and distributing trades, in which labor conditions have been on a very high plane. The scale of pay in this field has always been high, long hours have not been observed, and there have been no child-labor or sweatshop conditions. The total remuneration of such employees throughout the year would be well over a similar figure for individuals working in manufacturing and producing establishments in all parts of the country.

Furthermore, there is but little fluctuation of employment, as all workers are regarded as permanent employees and are paid for the regular workweek throughout the year. They differ from workers engaged in manufacturing and producing, as they are not constantly and continually at work in the same manner, but must at all times be available to render service, fill orders, answer inquiries, and to perform similar duties. They are also afforded more opportunity for education, training, and advancement.

The economic condition of the retailer at the present time must also be taken into account. Only a limited capital is available to him, and he must depend upon the wholesaler for his needs. He is doing considerable hand-to-mouth buying, thereby necessitating constant service by the wholesaler and distributor. Sales would be lost if he were deprived of the ability to obtain merchandise when it is needed—as would undoubtedly result from a 40-hour week.

It is highly important to the manufacturer to have distribution facilities in all sections of the country, and these are efficiently maintained by the various wholesalers and distributors. To weaken and impair their service to the manufacturer, retailer, and industrial buyer by uneconomical overtime provisions would be a detriment to our industrial system.

The elimination of service and a reduction in the number of employees would undoubtedly be necessary if the 40-hour week becomes effective, in order to offset the high costs resulting from the overtime requirements of the law.

I also wish to press upon you the fact that wholesalers and distributors do not use labor-saving machinery in the distribution of their products—the primary costs involved in their overhead being wages and salaries. The machine, therefore, has not caused any reduction in the personnel, and, as a matter of fact, the number of employees engaged in the wholesaling and distributing trades at the present time is approximately the same as in the late twenties.

It is granted that all wholesalers and distributors must observe the law in the same manner, and what is a hardship to one will be a hardship to all. The hardship on many may be such that they will be forced to operate at a loss, or at such a meager profit that the matter of maintaining their usual service will be dangerously curtailed.

To increase prices to the consuming public would mean a reduction in volume and would not be helpful to our standard of living, as it would reduce the number of articles and items which the ultimate buyer could purchase.

In closing, I wish to state that the wholesalers and distributors have a very real problem, and to permit these trades to continue a 44-hour standard workweek does not in my estimation alter the purposes of the law. Working conditions in wholesaling and distributing establishments are, in practically all cases, most agreeable—the wages are fair—and a 44-hour week cannot be considered a detriment to the health of the employees.

The Norton bill to amend the wage and hour law was considered by the Labor Committee in closed executive sessions, and no opportunity was afforded those of us interested in this phase to present testimony or argue our case. And now, we are informed, the bill is to be brought before the House for action under suspension of the rules, which precludes the offering of amendments, and we are only given the opportunity to vote for or against the bill reported by the Labor Committee. This course of procedure denies fair consideration to the dire circumstances which are faced by the wholesale and distributing agencies, who cannot operate under the severe restrictions of the present law. Certainly they should have had an opportunity to be heard, in which event there is no doubt in my mind they would have established a case which would have warranted action as proposed in my bill, H. R. 4631, and enabled them to continue to operate under the 44-hour-workweek provision. I hope that before the final enactment of the Norton bill this matter may be given the consideration it merits. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARROW. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to say I am a member of the Labor Committee. Did the gentleman make a request of the chairman to be heard?

Mr. DARROW. I did; and my request was denied.

Mr. DUNN. I would not have objected to it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARROW. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman does not want to leave the impression with the House that the Committee on Labor refused to permit the gentleman to appear before the committee?

Mr. DARROW. I asked to appear, and I was denied that privilege.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Did not the gentleman ask to have other persons besides himself appear?

Mr. DARROW. I asked to have a hearing on the question.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sure the gentleman misunderstood the chairman of the committee, because some Members of Congress did appear in support of their amendments. The committee agreed to hear all of them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief article by Dr. Clifford Halvorsen, a constituent of mine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I have tremendous respect for freedom of speech. I have been fighting for the last 50 years for the right on the part of anyone to express his own views on anything. Today, however, I was very astonished to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] purport to defend the people and the workers of Puerto Rico with the use of radical expressions, but if Puerto Rico would follow the ideas and opinions of the gentleman from New York we would be in a condition so terrible that over 100,000 people would be starved. In the name of social reform and justice to humanity——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGLESIAS. No; I do not have time to yield. I cannot yield, because I do not want to be interrupted at this time.

I have in my hand a copy of a handbill that has been distributed among the agricultural workers and the people of Puerto Rico containing statements with which some of the declarations that have been made here by the gentleman from New York coincide:

If the law is changed in Washington in accordance with the wishes of SANTIAGO IGLESIAS—

That is my name—

and the Centralistas—

That means the sugar men and the higher range of people—the workers will not have gained much.

If you want to defend your rights, send your petitions to Mr. MARCANTONIO, the Congressman, who will defend the interests of the workers of Puerto Rico, or send them to the Democratic Popular Party, who will send them directly to Congressman MARCANTONIO.

I can regard this as a little thing, because there have been many other stories and much publicity, with the picture of our distinguished friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], presenting him as the great "savior" of humanity in Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, for the last 50 years, since the Spanish regime, we have been working for the welfare and the progress of Puerto Rico in general, and especially of the working classes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is making a good speech, and I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. We have refrained from being unjust to those administrators who want to work for and are doing well for the people of Puerto Rico. I have been termed a "tremendous radical" in Puerto Rico, but I never have been unjust, nor disregarded the work of those who have been sent from here to do good for the island. I declare here that to attack Gov. Blanton Winship and to smear his personality is a tremendous injustice. He has been all right; that is the best way I can term it. I never have asked Governor Winship for the smallest favor, and never in my life have I done that with any Governor. The work done by Governor Winship in the island in the last 5 years is something that will be appreciated in the hearts of every citizen of Puerto Rico. Every party is in favor of all the work that has been done by the Governor, except a group that is distributing the letters of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

With regard to the amendments to the labor law that have been reported by the committee, I may say, as a labor leader for so many years, that it is very deplorable that a distinction must be drawn between the mainland and the island, but in this case the amendments are necessary because of the extreme economic condition in the island in the same way that amendments have been asked in behalf of various States of the Union. I do not know why the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] has fixed his eyes upon Puerto Rico and no other part of the country. Why not give just the same chance to Puerto Rico that has been given to Texas or to Chicago or to any other place in the land. Why does this "savior" of the workers of Puerto Rico not say anything about those places, when he is talking about the poor fellows mentioned in the letters he has referred to? Who is writing the letters? Look at the man, Mr. Claiborne, he has presented here as the "savior." He was appointed administrator of the law at the beginning and he became friendly with our fellow workers over there, and that was very good, but very soon he changed and did things and acted in such a way that he had to be dismissed and removed from the job.

He was removed, although in a very delicate manner, but nevertheless the gentleman from New York still says he is the administrator, after being dismissed. He places the blame for this action on Governor Winship, when, as a matter of fact, the Governor has always been doing his best to better the conditions of the working people, assisted by the Commissioner of Labor of Puerto Rico.

I have received a letter from the secretary of the Free Federation of Workingmen of Puerto Rico. This organization is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, because our labor has been educated to lean on the organization of labor as represented in the Nation by the American Federation of Labor.

This Mr. Claiborne is the man who has distributed letters and circulars in certain parts of the island accusing the free federation and the leadership of the federation of not putting the law into operation. Of course, he does not understand that for years the federation and its leaders have been working and fighting for better conditions. The workingman does not want to depend on Mr. Claiborne or anybody else to work for his salvation. With the proposed amendments, the wage and hour law will be all right. First, we have the committees to give flexibility to the law. It is true Puerto Rico wants that. Puerto Rico wants that because, as soon as this law was put into operation, over 40,000 of the needle workers and 30,000 in other industries were thrown out of employment. They are out of work and they cannot start work again without these amendments.

The interests of the workingman and of Puerto Rico are not in the hands of Congress alone. Under the proposed amendment to the Fair Labor Standards Act we will have committees representing the public, the employers, and the workingmen, and there will also be organized labor, which has always safeguarded the rights of the workers of Puerto Rico. Organized labor is the most intelligent weapon the workingman has to better his own condition. And then we have the legislature of the island. So, according to the law and the performance of the law, we have a chance to do well for the people of Puerto Rico, and especially the workers of Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, Congress never had any idea of crushing the people of Puerto Rico, especially the workers. Puerto Rico is indebted to Congress for wonderful reforms and progressive measures that never could have been known except for the action of the majority of the Members of Congress. We are grateful for what has been done.

If there has been any injustice or if the workers of the island have been handicapped in any way, I am sure I can come before this House and come before the committee and just tell the truth, but the Labor Committee has been all right.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IGLESIAS. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. I want to ask the gentleman a direct question. Does the gentleman feel that the people in Puerto Rico would have been better off if, when we adopted the Fair Labor Standards Act, we had exempted Puerto Rico from its provisions entirely?

Mr. IGLESIAS. I never would have requested such a thing myself, because I want the spirit of the law and the law itself to apply to Puerto Rico, and then give it flexibility in accordance with the conditions existing there.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman believes the provisions of the law should apply in Puerto Rico as well as in continental United States?

Mr. IGLESIAS. Yes. That was my idea and my principle, but in the operation of the law I have seen that we will have to look for some flexibility in order to accommodate the law to the conditions on the island.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGLESIAS. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Irrespective of whether the newspaper places my picture on the front page or the gentleman's picture there, I have only one question, and that is as to whether the gentleman is for or against the 25-cent-per-hour minimum for workers in the sugar industry in Puerto Rico; and if so, why change the law and why should there be any flexibility?

Mr. IGLESIAS. I am in favor of 25 cents, and I would be in favor of $1 per hour if it were possible to pay it; but if it is not possible, then I do not want the people in Puerto Rico to starve. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the Commissioner from Puerto Rico has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein part of a statement which I made before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the nonmilitary appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an article by Gus W. Dyer, a well-known political economist, on the Unseen Effect of the Wage Law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Star of Terre Haute, Ind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] for 20 minutes.

MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, by the time we meet again another Mother's Day will have passed into history. On every recurrence of Mother's Day, the golden strands of recollection lead me back to our old log-cabin home in Fayette County, Ind., where I was born and raised at a time when the wilderness was more a fact than a memory. My mind's eye recreates the stately forests of towering oaks and poplars and the beautiful wild flowers that everywhere blanketed the earth in spring and summer time. I behold again the large peach orchard at the rear of our cabin, with its wondrous wealth of blooms. The air is redolent of sweet-williams and honeysuckle.

All of this seems to me now like a glimpse of paradise which I was permitted to enjoy for a brief time at the beginning of life, before Fate directed my footsteps to things that are material and dross.

In all of this panorama of loveliness which I see shining far away through the mists of recollection, the very center of loveliness was my mother. I can see my mother, the personification of loving devotion, ministering to the needs of her large flock, trying to do many things at once and pausing now and then to kiss our tiny wounds to take away the hurt. I can see her in the silent vigils of the night as by light of candle or oil wick burning low she smooths a feverish brow with a hand that always seems to soothe and heal. Once more she tucks me in the trundle bed and sings her lullabies until the sandman shuts my eyes in slumber.

The younger generations are utterly incapable of realizing the hardships that were the daily portion of the pioneer mother. There was no change, no recreation to build up frayed-out nerves. Hers, as I look at it now, was a life of never-ending toil and grind, without conveniences of any kind—a human treadmill. Today was the same as yesterday; tomorrow would be the same as today. Yet throughout it all she maintained a spirit that was perfectly fine and splendid.

She was the angel of the household; nor heat of summer nor wintry blasts, nor all the worries and heartaches that fell to her self-denying lot ever found her absent from the post of duty. No language that I can command is adequate to describe the loving devotion of this sweet and patient soul. No words of mine, surging from the wellsprings of a grateful heart, can tell the story of the debt I owe my mother. Many a year has come and gone since we laid her in the ground—earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust—but my simple Christian faith teaches me that she is just away, and that we shall meet again. I hope and pray that when my days on earth are ended, and I cross the frontiers of the blessed summerland, the spirit of my mother will be waiting to lead me on.

There is no language known to men that can describe a mother's love. Of all the emotions that influence the human mind, it is the sweetest and the best. The bitterness and sorrow that would be the common lot in this vale of tears if it were not for mother love melt into happiness and joyous inspiration in the radiance of its tender flame.

Mother love has no yesterday and no tomorrow, but reigns eternal. There is no limit to its bounds. There is no plummet that can sound its depths. It reaches all the way from earth to heaven. With ineffable tenderness it leads the tottering infant past the dangers and pitfalls of life and guides him through the struggling years of childhood and maturity, so that when the miracle we call death ends his earthly journey he is fit to take his place among the stars by the side of his Creator.

No tongue can explain mother love or trace its origin. The least we can say of it is that it is one of the mysteries that spring from God. We know that it is something real because there is no sacrifice too great for it to make.

Think of the widow who bends her aching back over a tub day in and day out to earn a washwoman's pittance that she may keep her children together and feed them and send them to school like other children—oh, there are many such in this land of ours! Does anyone doubt the quality of her mother love? Does anyone know a mother of a deformed child who is not all the more attached to him on account of his deformity? He may be a hunchback, or infantile disease may have rendered him a hopeless and pitiable physical wreck, but to mother he is all there is in the world. Reason may have left him forever, and he may be doomed to wander in mental darkness all his life, but oh! how she loves him!

Mother heart forgives the error of a wayward child before it is committed. The last thought of a convict who faces the noose or electric chair is of his mother. In his anguish he cries for her; to her he piteously pleads every extenuating circumstance so that she will remember him at his best; his only relief in his desperation is when he is enfolded in her encircling arms. Any trinket he may possess, a ring or watch or lock of hair or other treasured keepsake he leaves to mother. In all such cases mother love is tempered with pity, and what a potent, merciful, wonderful combination it is. Imagine the depths and sanctity of a mother's thoughts when she rocks her baby in his cradle and lulls him gently into the realm of sleep with her lullabies and then lifts her eyes from his innocent little face toward heaven and prays to the Father of us all:

"Father, lead him not into temptation, but deliver him from evil!"

From the time of Eve, who laid her very own on the altar of grief, down through the ages to Mary, who witnessed the unspeakable tragedy of the cross, and on and on, century after century, the word "mother" has always been the symbol of devotion, every age presenting in myriad repetitions and varying forms the solicitudes and sacrifices of mother love. Millions have been touched by the tribute paid by Abraham Lincoln, when that great, tender-hearted man who groped his dark way to a martyr's grave, paid to his mother the deathless tribute of saying that all that he was or ever hoped to be he owed to her.

We are continually being astounded by the wonderful achievements of the scientists. They are the Nation's miracle men. They already have gone far toward piercing the veil that separates us from the infinite and every day adds to their amazing record of performance. Our President speaks and his voice is heard through a system of radio relays in Europe and South Africa. A man talks over the telephone and his physical image is carried with his voice and reproduced in a distant city. That is television. In the New York office of the Westinghouse Co. is an artificial electrical man which obeys the human voice. This new creation of science enables us to visualize a world of the future—a world of romance—in which men and women will do little more than think and will bid automatons to fetch and carry. The scientists have discovered that diabetic patients who are gripped with a form of fear may have their courage restored by sucking a lollipop, and that the variation of a few hundredths of 1 percent in the glucose of the blood may make the difference between cowardice and courage, may determine whether a man shall be shot as a slacker or medaled as a hero.

And, weirdest prophecy of all, Dr. Edwin S. Slosson, a Washington scientist, in addressing Wittenberg College, predicted that the scientist of the future will turn from his humble task of providing the conveniences of life and will gain control of life itself, molding stature and character as the sculptor molds his clay.

One by one, the Government astronomers are unlocking the secrets of the universe. Their contributions to the sum of knowledge are of absorbing interest and reflect glory on the achievements of the human mind. By using photographic processes which record stars a million times fainter than the human eye can see, they have just estimated the total number of stars at 30,000,000,000.

Why, I am almost persuaded that the time is coming when the scientists will remold the forms of nature, take all of the sting out of the tongue of malice, paint rosy blushes on the cornstalks, and make diamonds out of a million glistening dewdrops.

But there are some things our scientists cannot fathom, and one of these is the mystery—the blessed mystery—of mother love. The enormous telescope at the Naval Observatory in Washington which nightly sweeps the heavens cannot reveal through the starry corridors the Supreme Architect whose will established order in the universe, who keeps the planets in their orbits, and who sees the sparrow when it falls. Him we must take on faith, and we must serve Him with all of our love and all of our strength and all of our understanding.

Nor will the utmost power of science reveal where among all the starry diadems is the eternal abiding place of those who gave us birth and those happy companions of the yesteryear who left us to go to the home, not made by hands, eternal in the skies. We must trust to faith, which holds the promise that we shall know and love them once again. With all their genius and exactitude, the scientists have not been able to find where heaven and earth meet.

But I know. Like all of the sons of departed mothers, I know the exact spot where heaven and earth meet. It is located not by scientific instruments nor chart nor compass nor by divining rod, but by the oracles of the heart. In my case it is about 50 miles southeast of Indianapolis. The place where heaven and earth meet is the grave of my mother. [Applause.]

GENERAL PULASKI

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity of requesting my colleagues to support the resolutions which I introduced on February 20, 1939, to honor the memory of that outstanding hero of the American Revolution, Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

House Joint Resolution 174 provides for the establishment of a General Casimir Pulaski Memorial Commission which shall consider and formulate plans for designing and constructing a permanent memorial in the city of Savannah, or in the State of Georgia. This Commission in its discretion may accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, and formulating, preparing, and considering plans for the construction of the memorial. It was at the siege of Savannah, Ga., that General Pulaski gave his life to America on October 11, 1779.

House Joint Resolution 173 authorizes the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1939, General Pulaski Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of his death.

House Joint Resolution 172 provides for the preparation, printing, and distribution of pamphlets containing his history.

H. R. 4321 authorizes the erection of a memorial to General Pulaski and carries an authorization for a $5,000 appropriation for the erection of a suitable tablet or marker at Savannah, Ga.

Mr. Speaker, two sterling Polish patriots, Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko and Gen. Casimir Pulaski, outstanding heroes who joined the army of the Father of his Country, Gen. George Washington, contributed much during America's struggle for independence. They gave unstintingly of their valiant service in the cause of liberty and the formation of our Republic. They were patriots of the most self-sacrificing type who dedicated themselves to the cause of freedom and the happiness of mankind.

From the time of General Pulaski and General Kosciusko, American citizens of Polish extraction have patriotically and unselfishly carved a record of honorable achievement in the history of the Republic. They are a bulwark of strength to our Nation, and among the leaders in political and economic progress. In the dark days of war, the citizens of Polish extraction emulated that high patriotism of General Pulaski and General Kosciusko, in order to protect and preserve our American constitutional system of government, with its sacred rights and liberties.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wallace E. Maciejewski, 1738 South Pearl Street, Milwaukee, Wis., a leader among our citizens of Polish extraction, a resident of the district which I have the honor to represent, and a staff writer for the Milwaukee Evening Post, has written a fine article on General Pulaski. I ask unanimous consent to include this article in my remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

Two of the four European officers who performed a distinguished part in the American Revolution, Pulaski and Kosciusko, were from Poland.

They came to America as volunteers to join the army of General Washington, and both distinguished themselves on various occasions during the Colonist's struggle for independence.

One of them, Casimir Pulaski, gave his personal fortune of $50,000 and his life to American liberty.

He died fighting for American independence. He saved the Continental Army from possible annihilation. He sacrificed a title, a fortune, and a brilliant career to die at the age of 31 as he led American cavalrymen in the last desperate charge of a successful campaign.

No wonder he is referred to as the hero of two continents.

Futile are the attempts of those who would delve into the annals of history in search of a more heroic and patriotic spirit * * * vain are the efforts of those who would turn the pages of history seeking a more adventurous and liberty-loving figure than Pulaski.

No nobler Pole, no nobler American, ever rode gallantly to death on the battlefields of human liberty.

Casimir Pulaski was born in the village of Kostry-Pulazie on March 4, 1747. He was the eldest son of Count Joseph Pulaski, a venerable gentleman, who belonged to the Polish nobility. The elderly Pulaski was also the county administrator (Starosta), and a distinguished lawyer famed for his eloquence.

The section where the Pulaskis lived was exposed to continuous incursions of roving marauders, so a large band of armed retainers to protect the estate was maintained. Young Casimir early gained a knowledge of partisan warfare and laid the foundation for the superb horsemanship which later made him a cavalry leader of renown in Europe and America.

Casimir Pulaski's early education was had at home and in a Jesuit college. Before he was 21 young Pulaski had his taste of regular warfare, serving 6 months in the successful defense of Mitau. He continued to fight against Poland's oppressors, eventually becoming famous for his courage and valor.

The enviable reputation of his brilliance as a cavalryman, of patriotism, and heroism had preceded Pulaski long before he had volunteered his sword in behalf of America's independence.

With the downfall of the Confederation of Bar and the first partition of Poland, Pulaski was forced to leave his native country and escape to Paris where he made the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin, who was seeking the aid of France in the struggle of the American colonists against England.

Obtaining a letter of recommendation from Franklin, Casimir Pulaski, inspired with a passion for the ideals for which the colonists fought, came to America in August 1777.

In making the recommendation, Franklin wrote:

"Count Pulaski, of Poland, an officer famous throughout Europe for his bravery and conduct in defense of the liberties of his country against the three great invading powers of Russia, Austria, and Prussia, will have the honor of delivering this into your Excellency's hands."

Like his famous compatriot, Kosciusko, who when he appeared before Washington and was asked what he could do, answered in a modest way, "Try me and see," Pulaski refused to wait for an appointment from Congress but hastened to join the ranks of Washington's army.

By strange coincidence, it so happened that Pulaski and his friend, the Marquis de Lafayette, another distinguished officer, struck their first blows for American independence at the Battle of Brandywine on September 11, 1777.

In describing the Battle of Brandywine, Capt. Mathew Rogowski, Pulaski's comrade at arms, wrote:

"We covered 4 miles in 40 minutes. Galloping in a cloud of dust, we met General Sullivan's army in a disorganized retreat. * * * Knyphausen's column was getting the upper hand over General Maxwell (American). And then came General Pulaski, in his Polish uniform of the Bar Confederation, shouting the command 'Forward' in a voice which penetrated our spines. 'Whither we are going?' I asked myself, and then the thunder of 1,600 hoofs crashed upon the British columns. Pulaski was mad with the lust of fight, slashing right and left, his sword dripping with blood. We were crowded, we were surrounded, and then the cry, 'Help is coming,' and the British began to retreat. Now Pulaski raised himself in his stirrups and shouted, 'Forward again.' And we went forward, trampling down platoon after platoon of the British columns until their retreat became a rout. * * * I have been in many battles, the memory of some raises my hair on end, but such a bloody fight I have never seen."

When Congress on September 15, 1777, only 4 days after the momentous Battle of Brandywine, commissioned Pulaski a brigadier general and assigned him to command the American Cavalry, he became the highest ranking officer of the Cavalry, and had under his command four regiments.

In his letter of recommendation to the Continental Congress, Washington said:

"This gentleman has been, like us, engaged in defending the liberty and independence of his country and has sacrificed his fortune to his zeal for these objects. He derives from hence a title to our respect that ought to operate in his favor as far as the good of the service will permit."

Subsequently General Pulaski saved the Continental Army from a surprise attack at Warren Tavern and took a prominent part in the battle of Germantown, and in the winter of 1777–78 participated in the operations of General Wayne and aided in the defeat of a division of British troops at Haddonfield, N. J.

Congress now authorized Pulaski to form a corps of lancers and light infantry which became famous as the Pulaski Legion, with its own standard. Approximately $50,000 was spent by Pulaski in forming and equipping his legion.

The Pulaski Legion took a notable part in some of the most important battles of the American Revolution, and then on October 9, 1779, while riding at the head of his men through a deadly enfilading fire to the rescue of other American forces, Pulaski fell, pierced by a British shell at the siege of Savannah.

Captain Rogowski, one of Pulaski's officers who was in the heroic charge, states in his description of the battle:

"For half an hour the guns roared and blood flowed abundantly. * * * Imploring the help of the Almighty, Pulaski shouted to his men, 'Forward,' and we, 200 strong, rode at full speed after him—the earth resounding under the hoofs of our chargers. For the first two moments all went well. We sped like knights into the peril. Just, however, as we passed the gap between the two batteries, a cross fire, like a pouring shower, confused our ranks. I looked around. Oh! sad moment, ever to be remembered, Pulaski lies prostrate on the ground."

First aid was administered on the battlefield, and then Pulaski was carried by his men and placed aboard the Colonial gunboat Wasp, where he died on October 11, 1779, at the age of 31. He is believed to have been buried at sea.

General Pulaski, "Father of American Cavalry," a heroic and illustrious figure in the world's history, died as he had lived—fighting for the righteousness of mankind.

In the American Military Biography the author writes:

"Perhaps a braver man than Pulaski never drew a sword."

And in describing Pulaski's death at Savannah the American Military Biography states:

"Thus fell, in a most bold and daring achievement, the distinguished Polish patriot and hero in the cause of American liberty; his memory is entitled to our veneration, as his life forms an item in the price of our independence."

As a hero of two continents, as an outstanding example of loyalty and patriotism, Casimir Pulaski has left in this Nation an unmistakable imprint of love for liberty, virtue of magnanimity, and mutual good will toward the Polish people. His willingness to help the oppressed and his many sacrifices on the altar of American independence shall always remain a symbol of Polish-American friendship.

All glory be to Thee, almighty and most merciful Father, for that Thou, of Thy tender love towards mankind, hast set the lonely into families and families into nations for their mutual strength and common weal. Pour Thy grace into our hearts, that we may be unfeignedly thankful for the privilege to choose our Representatives and Senators in Congress assembled; and fill their minds with firm resolves to serve this people in Thy fear, that they may this day pursue their labors in all honesty and justice, mercy and love towards all whom they have been chosen to serve, and that, through all the sundry and manifold changes of this life, both they and we may keep the bond of peace that belongeth to the people of God. REPORT OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE TEXTILE FOUNDATION

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Legislative Resolution 29

Memorializing the Congress of the United States to take action to remove freight-rate inequalities that burden the people of Nebraska and other States west of the Mississippi River, as compared with States east thereof, and authorizing the Governor of Nebraska to cooperate with the Governors of other Western States in preparing and prosecuting proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief, and authorizing the Governor of Nebraska to be party to such proceedings, representing the people of Nebraska, and recommending appropriation of funds for purposes herein stated

Whereas hearings recently held in Washington D. C., before the Subcommittee on Interterritorial Freight Rates of the United States Senate and before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the United States House of Representatives have disclosed that the levels of freight rates on shipments by rail of class freight and commodities related thereto, and also many articles of manufactured freight and raw materials, between points in Nebraska and points in the States east of the Mississippi River, are relatively much higher, distance and cost of the transportation service considered, than the freight rates on like shipments moving wholly within the States east of the Mississippi River; and

Whereas such higher freight rates constitute an unfair burden upon the commerce, the development, and the prosperity of the State of Nebraska and its people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-third regular session assembled:

1. That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact such legislation as may be necessary to remove present freight-rate discriminations against commerce between Nebraska and States east of the Mississippi River, and to require the establishment and maintenance of freight rates for the future, between points in Nebraska and points east of the Mississippi River, that will be no higher, distance and cost of transportation service considered, than like rates within the territory east of the Mississippi River.

2. That this resolution be spread at large upon the journal of this legislature; and that the clerk of this legislature is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States as Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress, to the end that representatives in the Government and in the Congress of the United States will be advised that this legislature considers as imperative remedial Federal legislation which will remove present freight-rate discriminations against commerce between Nebraska and States east of the Mississippi River, as set forth in the preamble of this resolution.

3. That His Excellency, R. L. Cochran, Governor of Nebraska, be hereby authorized to confer with the Governors of other States west of the Mississippi River which are suffering from like freight-rate inequalities, with a view to bringing jointly and in cooperation with such other interested States proceedings or complaints, and presenting evidence therein or in any investigation which may be instituted before the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief from said inequalities.

4. That the Governor of Nebraska, calling to his aid and assistance the Nebraska State Railway Commission, if he deems it advisable, is hereby authorized to act in the name of the people of Nebraska as a party complaining or intervening in any such proceeding, and, to carry out the directions herein given, to employ such counsel and expert technical assistants as he may consider necessary for such purpose, all within such specific appropriation as may be made for such purpose by the legislature; and that this legislature further suggests that its committee on appropriations consider appropriating the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be considered necessary, out of the general fund in the State treasury, not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the Governor or of the Governor and the Nebraska State Railway Commission, as may seem to them advisable, in the preparation and the prosecution of such proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, respectfully requested and strongly urged to so amend the organic act of Hawaii as to permit borrowers of the tenant purchase division of the farm security administration to purchase homestead lands which have been surrendered to the land commissioner, said amendatory act to be in the following form, to wit:

"A bill to amend section 73 of the Hawaiian organic act approved April 30, 1900, as amended

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 73 of the Hawaiian organic act, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding at the end of paragraph (i) of said section 73 the following:

"'Provided, however, That any such lot not taken or taken and forfeited, or any lot or part thereof surrendered with the consent of the commissioner may, instead of being disposed of as hereinabove provided, be disposed of for cash and forthwith patented to any citizen of the United States applying therefor who has qualified for and received a loan under the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act, approved July 22, 1937, for the acquisition of a farm: And provided further, That any patent issued upon any such sale shall contain the same restrictive provisions as are now contained in a patent issued after compliance with a right-of-purchase lease, cash freehold agreement, or special homestead agreements.'

"SEC. 2. This act shall be in force and effect from and after its passage."

And be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

GOVERNMENT FISCAL POLICIES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the consideration of the pending measure I have at some length expressed my views concerning its provisions and generally the unwarranted and, as I have indicated, the unjustifiable expenditures of the Federal Government. I shall, therefore, detain the Senate but for a short time.

I know this bill will pass, notwithstanding it contains provisions that do not meet the approval of many Senators. We all recognize the importance of agriculture and that it is entitled to consideration at the hands of the Federal Government. That does not mean, however, that the Federal Government shall take the place of the agriculturists and take over the functions and responsibilities which belong to individuals in every line of agricultural development. The appropriations for the Department of Agriculture have greatly increased during the past few years, and the bill under consideration carries a larger appropriation than has been provided for it in any year of its existence.

During the seventies the Department of Agriculture received annual appropriations of between two and three hundred thousand dollars. During the eighties the annual appropriations were between three hundred and four hundred thousand dollars. During the nineties the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture were approximately $3,000,000 per annum. In 1907, $10,000,000 was the amount appropriated for this Department, and there was a gradual increase until 1920 when the appropriations reached the sum of $66,000,000. In 1921 $120,000,000 was appropriated, and there was a gradual increase until 1930 when the appropriation for that year was $177,000,000. In 1933 the Department of Agriculture received $255,000,000; and 1935 more than $1,200,000,000, and in 1937, $1,264,000,000. We are now asked to appropriate for the next fiscal year more than $1,300,000,000, and that sum will be augmented from customs receipts to the amount of considerably more than $100,000,000. That means that the Department of Agriculture will receive approximately one and one-half billion dollars for the next fiscal year. That huge sum is nearly double the entire cost of the Government during the first year of the administration of President Wilson.

As the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture increased, the personnel in the Department was greatly augmented. My recollection is that in 1916 there were only 18,000 employees in the Department of Agriculture. There was a gradual increase, and in 1933 there were 26,540 employees in the Department. In 1934 there were more than 51,000 employees. In 1935 there were nearly 63,000. In 1936 the number of employees had increased to 82,989. In 1937 there were 85,143 persons upon the pay rolls of the Department of Agriculture, and in 1938 the number of employees was 102,305. I might add that I have given only the number of employees as shown by the civil-service records. There may have been persons employed who did not have a civil-service status.

This great increase in the personnel obviously consumes a considerable part of the large appropriations which have been made, but in other departments of the Government the expenditures have constantly increased until, as I have heretofore indicated, the total expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, will exceed nine and one-half billion dollars. Before the adjournment of Congress, if Congress continues the present spending policy, there will have been appropriated more than $10,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

These enormous appropriations have resulted in deficits which amount to $44,000,000,000. As Senators know, the burden of taxation has greatly increased, until during the present fiscal year the total Federal taxes will appropriate $5,200,000,000. But, with this stupendous sum, as I have indicated, there will be a deficit of at least $4,000,000,000 for this fiscal year. And from the present outlook the deficit for the next year will exceed that huge sum.

A fiscal condition such as this demands most serious consideration at the hands of Congress. The executive departments are increasing their demands and the legislative branch of the Government has acceded to these demands. The fault for this unsatisfactory fiscal condition lies with Congress as well as with the executive departments. It should be said, however, that the executive departments are constantly demanding larger appropriations, and the legislative branch of the Government is responding to these demands. I should state, however, that I am advised that the Budget estimates submitted by the President to guide Congress in framing the appropriation measures for the next fiscal year are being exceeded by the appropriation bills thus far passed by Congress.

I have had occasion to say, however, that people in all parts of the United States are bringing pressure upon Congress and upon executive departments for enlarged appropriations and for the embarkation by the Federal Government upon activities and enterprises wholly beyond the authority of the Government. And it is obvious that when Congress responds to these demands, and invades fields of private endeavor, and plans for activities in broader fields, demands will be made for a still greater expansion and development of Federal activities.

This situation should arouse not only the people of the United States, but the Congress, to the dangers which are inherent in these departures from sound economic policies and from the assumption by the Federal Government of duties and responsibilities which belong to the States and to their political subdivisions.

We are now told that the Federal Government is to embark upon a general pension system, to care for the health of the people, and to provide a broad system of insurance which will bring within its terms substantially all of the people of the United States. Still when paternalistic if not socialistic plans are being demanded, which if enacted will change our form of government, under the views of many persons, there are no limitations upon the activities in which the Government may engage. When demands are made that the Federal Government confine its activities within constitutional limitations, the charge is made that such a ccurse is reactionary.

I have had occasion to say that liberals are those who believe in individual liberty, and in the maintenance of the integrity and power of the States, and in requiring the Federal Government to remain within the bounds set in the Constitution. In my opinion, the reactionaries are those who desire to centralize all power in the Federal Government, and to degrade the States so that they shall become mere administrative units.

But, to return to the question of revenues, I notice in the press of yesterday that the Secretary of the Treasury is not unappreciative of the unsatisfactory condition of the fiscal policies of the Government by reason of the unbalanced Budgets and the increasing deficits.

My recollection is that he has suggested upon several occasions recently that this Congress should adopt further provisions for revenues, and that a tax measure should be enacted to provide additional revenue to meet the increased expenditures of the Government.

However, there are indications that the sound view of the Secretary of the Treasury will not be accepted nor followed by the Congress.

There have been promises during the past 5 or 6 years by persons in executive departments that the national Budget would be balanced, and that our fiscal policies would be placed upon a sound basis. I regret that these promises have not been fulfilled, but, upon the contrary, as I have indicated, the Budget is still unbalanced, and there is no indication that plans have been formulated to accomplish this imperatively demanded reform.

The individual spendthrift ultimately reaches the bankrupt court. Governments have many of the weaknesses of individuals. They may not indefinitely continue to create huge deficits. Nations become bankrupt as well as individuals, and when the credit of a government is impaired it occupies a dangerous situation.

I know that appeals for economy, for retrenchment, and reform in our governmental expenditures and in our governmental policies will go unheeded. But I am glad to note that many of our leading newspapers are challenging attention to the unwise and dangerous policies of the Government in failing to reduce expenses and in failing to adopt policies to bring expenditures within collected revenues.

I have a number of clippings from newspapers in which attention is called to the failure of the Congress to meet the situation by reducing expenses and adopting the necessary measures to maintain the credit of the Government. I present an editorial appearing in the Christian Science Monitor under date of Wednesday, May 10. May I say that the Christian Science Monitor is one of the leading newspapers of the United States. It discusses in a comprehensive manner economic and political questions, as well as important social and educational matters.

I send to the desk the editorial referred to and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor of May 10, 1939]

FARMER'S TARIFF

Those who defended crop-control benefits as being the farmer's tariff coined a more far-reaching parallel than they knew. Some of its implications have become clear and potentially expensive in the action of the United States Senate Monday adding more than $383,000,000 to the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill for 1939–40. This now goes back to the House of Representatives, where similar increases were previously refused.

The question will be whether during the interim a logrolling process has taken place in the House similar to that which has reversed the one-time economy trend in the Senate. The principal items added are $225,000,000 for "parity" payments on wheat, cotton, corn, rice, and tobacco and $113,000,000 for surplus commodity purchases, such as dairy products, fruits, vegetables, and meats, to be distributed to the poor. These are in addition to the $500,000,000 already contained in the House bill for soil-conservation benefits.

Friends of the measure attributed the remarkably easy adoption of the amendments—on a series of voice votes without a single roll call—to the fact that it represented as nearly as possible a perfect balance of benefits between one section and another of agriculture, between one producing area and another. This is another way of saying that the various regions, as represented in Congress, have got together to scratch each other's back, to help roll each other's logs, and to pull down from the already deficit-ridden Treasury a fat bounty for the lot.

In this the parallel runs true to the course of tariff making when that prerogative was politically in the hands of the manufacturers. Tariff logrolling among representatives from centers engaged in the making of shoes, gloves, woolen goods, cotton textiles, glass, pottery, steel, machinery, cutlery, sugar, and so forth, became such an abuse as to amount almost to a national scandal. Finally the Tariff Commission was instituted, and to this day any administration hesitates to reopen a general tariff revision lest the old practice of making trades at the consumer's expense be resumed.

If anything can discredit the farm-benefit program it will be the extension of logrolling to the farmer's tariff. If the consumers and taxpayers of the country get the impression, as they soon must, that they are being made the victims of a huge agricultural pressure bloc, they will certainly revolt at the ballot box as they have done against exorbitant tariffs. If there is to be logrolling, it should be broad enough to be truly national in purpose and to consist of an exchange of reductions in subsidies all around—tariff, farm, and many other kinds—to get back to a basis where each kind of enterprise can stand on its own feet.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am receiving many communications from persons of character and standing expressing concern over the policies of our Government, relating to foreign affairs as well as to our internal affairs. Many citizens are becoming alarmed over the economic and industrial clouds overhanging our country. They are disturbed over the conflicts in labor circles and the disputes between employers and employees. Many express concern because of the unsatisfactory condition in industry; in decreased production and unwise governmental policies which contribute, as they claim, to fear and unrest in the business and economic life of the people.

The increasing deficits of the Federal Government, as I have indicated, are producing deep concern and disquietude. Reference was made to this situation in an article by Mr. Walter Lippmann appearing in the New York Herald Tribune of this day. Two paragraphs of the article are as follows:

The fact of the matter is that the real evil of the system of deficit financing is not that it is about to produce bankruptcy, inflation, and financial collapse. If it were about to produce such a spectacular disaster, the American people would be quite capable of rising up to deal with it. The real evil of the deficit spending is that it is slowly and subtly demoralizing to the whole Nation, to the recipients, and to the lenders, and to the politicians; that it disintegrates the fundamental civic virtues. And, therefore, if it continues, the financial crisis which will come, not for some years but eventually, will find our political system so demoralized that a normal cure will no longer be possible.

It is difficult for a democracy to look that far ahead and to be resolute and self-sacrificing in order to stop an evil which is so subtle, so postponed, so pleasurably corroding. Yet it is precisely because the financial position is not critical but is merely degenerating and disintegrating, because there is no emergency but only a gradual destruction of the habits of virtue, that no easy and practical remedy is to be found.

Mr. President, I should be glad to support a motion to have the measure under consideration referred back to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to materially reduce the aggregate appropriation carried by the bill. I know that such a motion will fail. I have upon a number of occasions during the past few years moved to recommit appropriation bills with instructions to reduce the total amount by 5 and in some instances 10 percent. None of these motions have ever prevailed. With the temper of Congress today I have no doubt of the result of a similar motion.

Mr. President, I send to the desk a joint resolution calling for a reduction in appropriations, but I shall not ask for a vote upon it today. I sincerely hope that Senators will examine the resolution, and that the plan which I have suggested—or some better plan—may be adopted looking to a reduction in Federal appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) to reduce expenditures of the Government was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) of each appropriation and fund heretofore or hereafter made available for obligation by any agency during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, 10 percent of the amount of each such appropriation and fund as is available for obligation by any agency during such fiscal year shall be impounded and covered into the Treasury.

(b) The provisions of this joint resolution shall not be applicable to any appropriation or fund, or any portion thereof, (1) for interest on the public debt; (2) for the Veterans' Administration; (3) for grants to States under the Social Security Act; (4) for the District of Columbia insofar as the same is payable from the revenues of such District; (5) which is a trust account or consists of funds contributed from sources other than Federal sources; (6) for the discharge of obligations entered into prior to July 1, 1939; or (7) from which allocations or payments are made mandatory under existing law and with respect to which no discretion is vested in any administrative official.

(c) Any agency having authority to enter into contracts or otherwise to incur obligations on behalf of the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, for any purpose over and above the amount of the appropriation available for obligation for such purpose during such fiscal year, shall exercise such authority only to the extent of 90 percent of the amount permitted by the act granting such authority.

(d) When used in this joint resolution, the term "agency" means any executive department, independent establishment or board, independent commission or authority, corporation owned or controlled by the United States, board, bureau, division, service, office, commission, authority, or administration in the executive branch of the Government.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. KING. No; I request that it lie on the table for future consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE ON ADJUSTMENTS IN THE NUMBER AND SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES OF CONGRESS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a special joint committee of Congress consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker. It shall be the duty of the joint committee to investigate and report to the second session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, by bill or otherwise, what adjustments, if any, should be made in the number and compensation of the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including joint committees, joint commissions, and other joint services of the two Houses, and of the office of the Architect of the Capitol. I ask that it be referred to the proper committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) creating a special joint committee to investigate adjustments in the number and salaries of officers and employees of Congress, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments to House bill 5269.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that the clerk state it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 28, line 12, after the word "thereof", it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "condemned", in line 15, as follows:

That no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, Territory, county, and municipality where the animal shall be condemned.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the committee will accept the amendment. The section of the bill to which the amendment applies refers to the appropriation of money to enable the Federal Government to carry out its program for the eradication of tuberculosis and Bang's disease in dairy cattle. The plan has been to cooperate with the States.

Tuberculosis in cattle is transmissible, of course, to humans, whereas Bang's disease is limited to cattle, and so the two have been placed on a different basis. The contribution of the Federal Government to the eradication program has been on an equality with that of the States with reference to tuberculosis, but, because of the fact that Bang's disease pertains to cattle alone, the plan has been to contribute with a limit of double what the State contributed.

The committee has reported an amendment eliminating from the bill the provision which the House included providing for a double contribution in amount on the part of the Federal Government, but the bill carries a definite limitation of $25 for grade cattle and $50 per head for full-blood cattle. With that limitation, and with the provision that there shall be no contribution on the part of the Federal Government unless the State contributes, I believe that there should be stricken from the bill the limitation that is contained in the lines which my amendment proposes to strike out so that the matter may be worked out in the conference committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, let me understand the Senator. He proposes to agree to the Senate committee amendment, so far as the action taken by the committee is concerned, and to strike out further—

That no payment hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, Territory, county, and municipality where the animal shall be condemned—and leave the whole matter in conference?

Mr. GILLETTE. Yes; and with the $25 and $50 maximum limitation left in the bill, of course.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this matter has been very highly controversial for a number of years. It started out as an emergency proposition, whereby the Federal Government paid the entire cost of the animal that was condemned and killed. The Senate has consistently sought to secure contributions from the various States and local subdivisions of government for that purpose, just as contributions are made in the case of the slaughter of tubercular cattle.

In view of the statement of the Senator from Iowa and the representations of other Senators that some of the States are unable to comply on a 50-50 basis, I shall not oppose the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and will take it to conference and see if we can work out a formula that will be fair to all concerned. Perhaps we can arrange for contributions or the assumption of some of the loss by the owners of the animals. I do want to say, however, and to put the States on notice now, that so far as next year is concerned, I shall insist that they contribute fully, 100 percent, to match the Federal funds appropriated for the slaughter of these animals. The matter ought to be put on exactly the same basis as the contributions in the case of tubercular animals. The House provision in the case of Bang's disease requires too much of the Federal Government.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, apropos the remarks made by the able Senator from Iowa and the very nice concession made by the Senator from Georgia, I ask unanimous consent to have read from the desk the telegram which I present from Dr. Lytle, of the Department of Agricuture of the State of Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The legislative clerk read the telegram, as follows:

SALEM, OREG., May 9, 1939.

Hon. CHARLES L. MCNARY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Senate subcommittee changed House Bang's indemnity bill from two-for-one matching to even money. Oregon cattlemen, dairymen wish use your influence restore. Letter follows.

W. H. LYTLE,
State Department of Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 97, between lines 16 and 17, it is proposed to insert the following new paragraph:

Of the sum appropriated by the preceding paragraph, $2,000,000 shall be available for paying 10 percent of the approved schedules of prices for salvaged timber products purchased or to be purchased from the owners thereof by the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration, said 10 percent being in addition to a payment of 90 percent of such schedules of prices made or to be made from funds loaned by the Disaster Loan Corporation to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the pending bill places at the disposal of the Surplus Commodities Corporation $113,000,000. This amendment seeks to have $2,000,000 of that amount distributed by the Surplus Commodities Corporation to the individuals in New England who have lost timber which has been sold to one of the Government's corporations as a result of the tropical hurricane of last year.

The tropical hurricane which hit New England last September caused a greater destruction of property than any other disaster, such as flood, earthquake, or hurricane that has ever occurred in the United States. Other disasters have caused a greater loss in lives, and for that reason have aroused a greater public interest. The country at large has little conception of the extent or amount of the damage to property in New England. It is estimated that property losses were in excess of $400,000,000. The hurricane was accompanied by an unusual flood condition. The destruction of buildings, highways, bridges, railroads, and utility properties can be replaced within a short time.

In one respect, however, New England suffered a serious loss which will be felt for more than a generation—that is, in the destruction of its standing timber. A large part of New England is still covered with woodland. From 60 to 70 percent of its area is forest lands. The hurricane striking the southern New England coast swept northward across Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, a strip on the western boundary of Maine, the whole of New Hampshire, and more than half of the State of Vermont. In this area a large part of the merchantable timber and the growing timber was blown down. There are few large lumber companies in New England, and the blown-down timber was widely distributed. It is estimated that there were twenty to thirty thousand individual owners who were affected by the hurricane.

The Forestry Department estimated that there were approximately 4,000,000,000 feet of merchantable timber on the ground—an amount six to eight times the normal cut in New England in recent years. In addition there was a vast amount of immature and partially grown timber blown down. It was obvious that a considerable part of the down timber could be saved, provided there was one organization which could fix reasonable prices and buy and hold the logs over a period of years, so that the lumber could be fed into the market without seriously depressing prices. The Forestry Department estimated that 1,600,000,000 feet of merchantable logs might be salvaged.

It was obvious at once that this devastation of forest lands had created a dual problem. First, it completely demoralized the market for logs; and, second, it created a fire hazard of appalling proportions and one that would continue for many years.

Private industry was entirely unable to deal with the situation, primarily because the lumber industry in New England has never been highly organized and centralized.

No single State could deal with the situation because the areas involved covered six States. The Federal Government alone was in a position to salvage the down timber. The Agricultural Department had competent foresters, and it had the authority under existing law, through the Surplus Commodities Corporation, to purchase surplus commodities. Unfortunately, at the time of the hurricane the Surplus Commodities Corporation had either spent or made commitments which used up its available funds. A plan was worked out whereby the Disaster Loan Corporation, a subsidiary of our Reconstruction Finance Corporation, would loan the money to the Surplus Commodities Corporation to carry out the plan. Under its law, however, the R. F. C. could not loan up to the full value of the logs, and in turn the Surplus Commodities Corporation could not pay on delivery of the logs more than the amount advanced by the R. F. C. While the arrangement between the R. F. C. and the Surplus Commodities Corporation was a loan agreement, the arrangement between the Surplus Commodities Corporation and the owners of down timber was a contract of sale and purchase.

Early in November the Government plan was announced in New England. Prices were fixed by the Surplus Commodities Corporation for pine, hardwood, and pulp. It was also announced that the Government would pay on delivery of the timber at designated receiving points 80 percent of the prices, with a further provision that after the entire operation had been liquidated and the logs or lumber finally disposed of, the Surplus Commodities Corporation would distribute to the sellers of the logs any surplus that remained above the loan with 3-percent interest and the cost of administration.

The prices for all kinds of timber were placed on a business basis and as near actual value as could be determined. Since at the moment there were no market prices whatever for logs, the prices were fixed on the average prices paid for similar timber in New England during the 4 years previous to the hurricane. From a business point of view, this was a sound basis, but, as every informed person knows, stumpage values in recent years had been low throughout the country generally, and especially in New England. In applying this standard the Government was fairly liberal, but the results were not unduly generous.

There are several comments to make with regard to this plan. The Surplus Commodities Corporation has in the last 4 or 5 years purchased large amounts of various surplus commodities, and in all instances upon the receipt of the commodity have paid the full price, no part thereof has been withheld. Furthermore, these purchases have been made for the purpose of getting rid of certain surplus commodities without regard to the financial results to the Surplus Commodities Corporation. In some instances the commodities have been given away. In important respects, therefore, the timber salvage plan was unique. It is a business proposal, and the prices fixed offer a reasonable prospect that the Government can carry out the plan without loss.

It should be emphasized that in no sense did the people of New England ask the Federal Government to make up to the owners of down timber the losses inflicted by the hurricane. All that the plan contemplated was a method of helping those owners to save the value that still existed in the down timber. In all cases the prices were for logs delivered. The additional cost of logging down timber over standing timber came out of the owners and not the Government.

The plan went into operation early in November. By December it was apparent that the cost of logging down timber had been greatly underestimated, and this additional cost plus the 20 percent of the scheduled prices withheld left little inducement for a great many owners to undertake the necessary logging operations. As a result early in January the R. F. C. agreed to loan up to 90 percent of the scheduled prices. This announcement was followed by a marked increase in the number of contracts for delivery of logs.

The result of the operations so far may be briefly summarized. As of April 15, there were contracts calling for delivery of approximately a billion three hundred million board feet of logs. Three hundred million board feet have already been delivered. The number of separate contracts is close to 9,000. These figures indicate how widely held standing timber is in New England, and also that the individual holdings are not large, the average being less than 150,000 board feet per contract.

The total cost to the Government for delivered logs including overhead is, on an average, about $14 per thousand. As far as possible, the logs have been delivered in ponds and streams where they can be held without serious loss or damage for a period of 4 or 5 years. In many places water storage has not been available, and dry storage places have been established. The logs delivered at dry storage places must be sawed by early July in order to prevent damage from worms. The Surplus Commodities Corporation has already sawed and has on the sticks about 40,000,000 board feet of square-edged boards. The logs have been sawed under careful specifications and supervision of the officials of the Forestry Department. As a result, the quality of rough lumber secured is good. The total cost to the Government of the lumber sawed so far has been about $24 per thousand. Lumber of this quality has been worth in the past and should be worth in the future from $30 to $35 a thousand. From these figures it seems reasonably clear that the Government will be able to dispose of the logs or sawed timber with some profit. Cost figures, especially overhead, are gradually decreasing as production increases.

The time remaining for logging operations is short. Existing contracts call for deliveries not later than July 1. So far, the results show that the actual deliveries are from 20 to 25 percent less than the amounts called for in the contracts. This is due to the fact that many owners overestimated the amount of timber that could be salvaged from their lots.

In one respect, however, the plan is falling short of expectations—the amount of timber salvaged. Within the short time remaining—7 weeks—and under the existing terms of payment, it is not likely that the amount of timber delivered to the Government will reach a billion board feet. This means that from six hundred million to a billion feet of timber that is worth salvaging will remain on the ground causing a serious loss to the owners, and also adding to the fire hazard. Obviously, every reasonable step should be taken to stimulate logging operations for the short period that remains. It is not suggested that prices should be increased, or that the R. F. C. should increase the amount of its loans. Under its law the R. F. C. has clearly gone to the limit of what is permissible, and the Forestry Department has evidently carried out the plan so far with skill and efficiency. There is, however, one step which the Government could take which would stimulate the delivery of logs, namely, the payment of 100 percent of the value on delivery. This policy is in accord with the practice in private business, and with the policy of the Surplus Commodities Corporation in all of its purchases. The arguments in favor of such a course are many:

First, it would increase substantially the amount of log deliveries. Most of the owners of down timber are in no condition to undertake logging operations unless they are certain to get on delivery something for stumpage value above logging costs. The prospect of receiving some time, 4 or 5 years in the future, an additional payment is not a sufficient motive for immediate action.

Second, timber salvage work and fire hazard work are intimately related. The removal of the merchantable logs and the piling of brush necessary in any logging operations, considerably reduces the fire hazard, and where additional fire-hazard work must be done, logging operations reduce the cost of such work by at least 40 percent, in the judgment of the officials of the Forestry Department.

Third, only a small percent of the money paid out by the Government in these logging operations remains with the owners of down timber. Most of the money goes for labor. The salvage plan already has given employment to thousands of persons who would otherwise be on relief. Any steps to encourage an increase in the amount of timber salvage will also give further employment.

Fourth, the payment of 100 percent of scheduled prices will bring the practice of the Surplus Commodities Corporation in accord with the policy it has followed in all other surplus commodity purchases.

Failure to pay the full price has naturally caused some feeling of dissatisfaction in New England. It is difficult to explain to the thousands of owners of down timber why in this case, and this case alone, the Government withholds part of the purchase price. There is every reason to suppose that the Surplus Commodities Corporation would in this case also have paid the full price if it had had funds available.

The purpose of the amendment to the appropriation bill is to provide for the payment out of the lump sum appropriated in the bill for the purchase of surplus commodities the final 10 percent now withheld under existing contracts. This course will not affect in any way the security held by the R. F. C. or the prospects of receiving repayment with 3-percent interest of its loan and advances to the Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Mr. President, had the Surplus Commodities Corporation had the money, 100 percent would have been paid. The restrictions upon borrowing from the R. F. C. prevented their lending more than 90 percent. This is very important, because it removes the earmarking of this money from any other case which can be conceived.

The Surplus Commodities Corporation agreed to purchase the timber as a surplus commodity, but they had no money. By arrangement with the R. F. C. they got 90 percent of the money, and those who have been able to contract with the Northeastern Timber Corporation, which was set up by the Forest Service to handle the problem, have received their 90 percent. Those who had such small holdings that it did not pay them to apply for assistance have let their timber remain where it fell. The cost of cutting, the cost of slashing, and the cost of hauling all had to be taken out of the 90 percent. The result has been that a comparatively small percentage of the people have taken advantage of this situation, because the costs actually amount to more than 90 percent, particularly the cost of hauling.

Consider the case of a widow with a family of children, left with a small farm, or an old gentleman who has encouraged the growth of his trees so as to sell the growing timber when in need. He does not know how to cut, he cannot afford to make a contract for cutting, slashing, and hauling when he has only a small holding. No one would pay any attention to him. He could not pay the expense of hauling the timber for 5 or 10 miles to the designated points where the Government would receive it.

The amendment seeks to have the Surplus Commodities Corporation pay the remaining 10 percent, so that these owners of fallen timber will be treated as every other agriculturist or farmer who has dealt with the Surplus Commodities Corporation is treated. That is all there is to the proposal. It seems to me to be eminently fair. I appreciate that it is legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am so interested in the Senator's statement, and am so sympathetic with his objective, that I wish to ask what amount of money is being requested.

Mr. WALSH. Two million dollars out of the $113,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. There is more than $113,000,000. That was added to approximately $90,000,000, which represents 30 percent of the customs receipts, made available under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. WALSH. How much is it altogether?

Mr. McNARY. Two hundred and three million dollars.

Mr. WALSH. I was taking the figures from the bill.

Mr. McNARY. The $113,000,000 is just an addition that is provided this year.

Mr. WALSH. Had the Surplus Commodities Corporation had the money at the time the hurricane occurred we would not be here making this request. They would have paid 100 percent, as they do in the case of lemons or oranges or apples or eggs or other agricultural products. But they did not have a cent; and I am not criticizing them. I speak in highest commendation of the President and the departments of the Government for what they did. But their hands were tied. Ninety percent was the limit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could lend, and all the aid possible was given. Now we are asking that the remaining 10 percent be given to these people, who are not asking for any profit, are not asking for any gain, but are asking for an amount of money which will reduce the loss they have met by reason of the hurricane. That is the simple proposition involved.

As I have stated, 20,000 to 30,000 individuals have been affected; but I wish to stress that, unfortunately, because the Government was unwilling to handle the terrific task of buying the fallen timber on the stump, many persons have lost all they had. Another serious problem is that some of the woodlots which have been destroyed are reverting to the local communities, because the owners cannot pay their taxes.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. MALONEY. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he might like to point out to his colleagues in the Senate that this differs to a considerable extent from the ordinary assistance rendered by the Surplus Commodities Corporation. When other articles and commodities are purchased, as I understand, they are distributed free. In this particular instance the Government will recapture all the money, because the timber will not be given away, as is the practice with other products, but it will be sold.

Mr. WALSH. The observation of the Senator is very helpful. The Disaster Loan Corporation will be reimbursed when these logs are converted into lumber, as the Government is doing, and the 90 percent will be paid back, so that it will not be a gift from the Surplus Commodities Corporation, as is the case with every other agricultural product they purchase. The 10 percent might be considered a gift if the full amount of money should not be realized after the logs are converted into lumber.

Mr. President, I know the reluctance of the Committee on Appropriations to earmark any of the appropriation, and I approve that policy; but it seems to me this is an exceptional and extraordinary situation. Had there been money available for distribution by the Surplus Commodities Corporation, a hundred percent would have been paid, and the whole problem would have been ended. All we are asking is that these victims of a disaster, not the victims of overproduction, but the victims of a great and serious disaster, be treated like the victims of overproduction when it comes to operating through purchase of commodities by the Surplus Commodities Corporation. The amount is not very large; it is only $2,000,000, and it will do a good deal to help stimulate this work.

To indicate how unfavorable the situation is, the amount of logs contracted for, when the time will expire on July 1, is a small percentage of the 4,000,000,000 feet which are on the ground. It is interesting to note, too, a fact which is not generally appreciated, that 60 to 70 percent of the acreage in growing timber is in very small holdings—a few hundred dollars' worth of timber on the farms of various people who live throughout New England.

I hope the committee, by reason of the unusual circumstances in this case, exceptional and out of the ordinary, and by reason of the fact that they are dealing with money to be taken from the Surplus Commodities Corporation for victims who suffered a loss of a very unusual and exceptional nature, will accept the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am sure that the members of the Committee on Appropriations, in common with all the people of the country, deeply sympathize with those who suffered loss in the great disaster which befell New England last fall. This is not a new matter, however, to be presented to the Congress, and, in my opinion, the Congress has dealt very liberally with those whom the Senator from Massachusetts seeks to aid with this amendment.

We appropriated in one of the deficiency bills the sum of $5,000,000 for the purpose of cleaning up and removing the fire hazard from the privately owned forest lands in New England. That in itself was an unusual concession by the Congress, due solely to the magnitude of the distress which was brought about by the hurricane.

In addition to the $5,000,000, which was appropriated outright, an average of 14,000 W. P. A. workers have been engaged on work in connection with the devastated lands. The enrollees in 21 C. C. C. camps, approximating 4,000 men, have likewise been engaged in that work.

The amendment which the Senator has offered proposes to earmark $2,000,000 from the funds appropriated for expenditure under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act—and those expenditures are not confined to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation—for the purpose of paying 10 percent of the approved schedule of prices for salvaged timber to those whose forests were affected by the hurricane.

I want to point out that there is a great difference between paying the market price and the approved schedule of prices. When the Forest Service set up these two corporations to salvage this timber, they fixed a schedule of prices which was based upon the average price of timber over a 3-year period. This fixed price is not subject to fluctuation. It has been slightly below the market price.

In addition to that, the Government is providing an amount that is equal to 10 percent of the amount of these loans for supervision and for administrative costs in this area. The Government has established 741 scaling stations and has employed one scaler at each one of those stations to measure and classify the timber. The Forest Service has engaged 153 sawmills to saw up the timber in an effort to be of assistance in increasing the salvage price of the timber and in making timber available for shipment. Already approximately 300,000,000 feet of the timber has been placed in what is called pond storage, where it can be preserved over a period of years and brought out of the water and sawed up as there is demand for timber of that type. Two hundred million feet have already been sawed and have been stacked, ready for shipment.

The Government is now protecting the price of this timber by having fixed the schedule price rather than subjecting the owner to the hazard of fluctuations in the market price. It has provided a loan of 90 percent of the schedule price to those who have the timber available, and is paying 10 percent on that loan in administrative costs to assist those who have the timber to keep it and to make it available to the markets.

As I understand it, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts would insure the owners of the timber 110 percent of the schedule price, rather than 100 percent, and the schedule price in some cases is higher than the market price. I do not think the amendment can be justified.

Mr. President, in addition to that it occurs to me that it is a legislative proposal. I have grave doubts as to whether the provisions of section 32 will authorize the operations which are contemplated in the amendment. I desire to make a point of order—I must say I do not desire to do it, but I am charged by rule XVI with responsibility for making it. The rule instructs the committee to make a point of order on all legislative proposals to the appropriation bill. The matter was not submitted to the committee, and I am in duty bound under the rule to make the point of order that the amendment is a legislative proposal and cannot be attached to the appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I anticipated that the Senator from Georgia would make the point of order. I appreciate the sympathy he has shown toward the proposal. However, I think I ought to make a further statement before the Chair rules on the question.

There are two problems before us in respect to this matter. One is a public one of removing the fire hazard. The State governments and the Federal Government have been generous in that matter. They appropriated $5,000,000. They took away the timber that had fallen on the sides of the highways, and they removed timber from abandoned places. They did a very excellent job, and for that we are very grateful. The States shared this expense. Massachusetts raised $19,000,000 by a bond issue to repair the public losses.

The second problem is the payment for a surplus commodity by the Surplus Commodities Corporation. We are grateful for the assistance that has been given us, but it is not a matter of expense to the Federal Government, because it is going to be reimbursed. The Government has all this timber. What is involved is a business transaction. It is a loan.

Mr. RUSSELL. It would be reimbursed, provided the market price of timber at which the Government could dispose of it increased to a point where the Government would be able to sell the timber for the entire amount of the loan and investment. The price of timber today is much below the amount that would be involved in the proposed expenditure.

Mr. WALSH. Unless the timber when converted into lumber brings a price in the market sufficient to pay back what the Government spent in giving 90 percent to the owners of the timber, and to pay back 3 percent on the loan as well, and to pay the overhead, no individual will get anything more than 90 percent. It is a strict business proposition. I repeat, we are grateful for what has been done; but I want it made clear that all that has been given is to reduce the losses of these people. Not one of them will make a dollar out of the proposal. But they are grateful even to get a few hundred dollars rather than to lose it all. They are grateful for that assistance. It is a contribution toward their loss. The only direct loss to the Government would be the 10 percent referred to.

I have no desire to propose an amendment which would provide a payment of 110 percent. We want only 100 percent of the scheduled prices, which are based upon the price of 3 previous years, which were years of the depression, when prices were low.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, as the Senator from Massachusetts knows, I have some relatives in Massachusetts. Many persons with whom I have spoken in that State have told me that the Government was not paying them a price for their lumber equal to its value.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly so. But those people are grateful for the few hundred dollars they are receiving as help toward reducing their losses. Of course, as the Senator knows, there are cases in New England where small landholders have 10 acres as woodlots, and all that timber has been wiped out. They have those woodlots, and had expected some day to sell the wood for a few hundred dollars to help them in their old age.

I know the Senator from Georgia is sympathetic toward my proposal. I hope he will not feel obliged to press the point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Massachusetts knows that under rule XVI, I am required to do so, and that I am instructed by the committee to make a point of order on all proposed legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the point of order made by the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. RUSSELL]. In the mind of the Chair the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is legislation which may not be received to an appropriation bill. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, on page 46, line 25, I move to strike out the figures "$648,483" and to insert in lieu thereof "$678,403."

The amendment provides for an additional $30,000 for forest management studies at the Northern Rocky Mountain Forest Experiment Station located at Missoula, Mont. The station covers research work for the region comprising Montana, northern Idaho, and northeastern Washington.

The forest resource of the northern Rocky Mountain region forms the basis for one of the most important local industries. The lumber industry not only employs in itself a substantial number of wage earners but also contributes in a material way to the economy of the region, furnishing forest products not only for export but also for consumption in local industries, as for example, mine props and other construction material of immense local importance. This forest resource, properly handled, can support a forest industry in perpetuity.

At the present time its very existence is threatened by destructive practices and severe fire losses. The development of proper fire-protection and forest-cutting practices in the white pine, ponderosa pine, and larch-fir types of this region is highly complicated. The region is one where occur some of the worst forest fires in the United States, requiring the highest of skill and best of knowledge in protecting it from outright destruction by fire. It is also one of the most complex for developing forest-management practices because of containing six or more species varying widely in requirements for reproduction and growth. Several of these, namely, western white pine, ponderosa pine, and western red cedar are among the most highly valued timber trees in the United States.

Problems in fire protection and management vary widely by locality and region-wide attack is essential for their effective solution. The Northern Rocky Mountain Forest and Range Experiment Station has done some work in this region, but investigations to date have been restricted to only a portion of the forest types. Many important problems basic to adequate fire protection and proper harvesting still remain to be worked out. Methods of predicting fire danger and rates of spread under different weather and fuel conditions need to be improved in order better to organize fire-suppression crews. Studies need to be made of methods of cutting to insure leaving stands in good growing condition, and to insure regeneration of the more valuable tree species.

Mr. President, I may say that this suggestion is made not only by the lumber people and the forestry people in that western section of the country, but it also has the approval of the Department. I hope the Senator from Georgia will be able to accept the amendment and take it to conference. If he does, I hope he will be able to work out the matter in conference, because the additional amount asked by my amendment is very much needed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I understand there have been some emergency funds available for this work, and that there is some question as to whether they will be available next year.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to taking the matter to conference in order that we may thoroughly explore it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] on page 46, line 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 78, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "$757,510" and insert in lieu thereof "$772,510."

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, if the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. RUSSELL] and other Senators will refer to the report on page 5, it will be noted that under the heading "Marketing farm products" there is the following language, which enumerates the farm products to which the increase in the committee amendment—$114,711—refers:

> Crop and livestock estimates: For expanding the statistical information on grain, hay, seeds, apples, potatoes, dairy products, poultry, and peanuts, $114,711.

In the State of New Jersey and many other Northeastern States there are many important farm products which are not enumerated or included in this service. For that reason I make the earnest plea to the Senator in charge of the bill that the amount be increased by the $15,000 so that the foregoing appropriation can be used for expanding existing crop-estimating services and making frequent reports on fruit and vegetable crops, including all vegetables. Certainly sweetpotatoes, tomatoes, beans, peas, and many other fruits and vegetables should not be excluded.

I beg that the Senator will accept my amendment and take it to conference and see if he cannot work things out so that this important matter shall be taken care of.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] has an amendment to the same effect, providing for an increase of approximately $100,000, which amendment was presented to the committee. A number of witnesses appeared and testified to the importance of this work in estimating the movements of vegetables and fruits by truck. Is that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes; I imagine it probably is, though I am not familiar with the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. Anyway, I am referring to the Agricultural Marketing Service, which has been confined to certain specified products only, and, by the same token, many other equally important products were excluded.

Mr. RUSSELL. There were so many items in the bill that I do not recall that the committee ever took up and considered the amendments proposed by the Senator from Washington and the Senator from New Jersey. In view of that situation, I am willing to take this item to conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The committee amendment on page 78, line 17, has been agreed to. It cannot be further amended unless the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. Does the Senator from New Jersey ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the committee amendment is agreed to, and the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending appropriation bill. The amendment, in a word, provides, in the interest of the general welfare, for the reconcentration of cotton in warehouses as near the consuming mills as available space will permit, due to the fact that our exports of cotton this year have been one of the lowest on record for 50 years whereas domestic consumption, fortunately, has been approximately 10 percent above normal——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator offers the measure he has in his hand as an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly it is subject to a point of order, and I am required by the rules to make the point of order against it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In that event, I ask that the amendment may be introduced in the form of a bill and referred to the proper committee for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands the parliamentary situation, the Senator from North Carolina now offers this matter not as an amendment to the bill, but as a separate measure, and asks that it be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill now introduced by the Senator from North Carolina will be read twice and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See Senate bill 2412, introduced by Mr. REYNOLDS and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, under its appropriate heading in the proceedings.)

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a request.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield I make a point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the senior Senator from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Johnson, Colo.	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lee	Schwellenbach
Barbour	George	Lodge	Sheppard
Barkley	Gibson	Logan	Shipstead
Bilbo	Gillette	Lucas	Slattery
Borah	Glass	Lundeen	Stewart
Bridges	Green	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Guffey	McNary	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gurney	Maloney	Tobey
Burke	Hale	Minton	Townsend
Byrd	Harrison	Murray	Truman
Byrnes	Hatch	Neely	Vandenberg
Capper	Hayden	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hill	Nye	Walsh
Chavez	Holman	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Connally	Holt	Overton	White
Danaher	Hughes	Pepper	Wiley
Donahey	Johnson, Calif.	Reynolds

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I rise simply to present a unanimous-consent request for a reconsideration of the parity-payments provision and the disposal of surplus-commodities provision of the bill. I understand it is too late to make a motion to reconsider, and that if done at all it must be done by a unanimous-consent agreement.

The occasion of this proposal is that, due to severe illness, I was not able, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee, to consider the bill when it was presented by the subcommittee to the general committee, nor have I been able to appear upon the Senate floor since. So I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the parity-payments provision on page 96 and the disposal of surplus-commodities provision on page 97, in order that——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendments referred to by him, found on pages 96 and 97, be reconsidered. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

ATTITUDE OF BIG BUSINESS TOWARD RECOVERY

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, today, as never before in the history of our country, we have been challenged as to the soundness of the form of our Government.

Democracy in America has been put to the test to show to the world the soundness of our theories of governmental administration under laws made by the people. If freedom of speech, of the press, of religion, and the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and our own treasured ideal of the pursuit of happiness are to be maintained, if people are to prosper and be contented, if the United States is to remain a successful government, then democracy must be made to work.

Love of country should, under present conditions, inspire all to give their best, their all. This is no time for slackers.

More than a year ago I made the statement that big business was on a sit-down strike. For my observation I was roundly criticized by the reactionary press of the country. I stated then that there would be no disposition on the part of any business not to take a fat profit, but they were determined to do an absolute minimum toward improving business in this country, as it was their avowed purpose to force the New Deal to scrap T. V. A. and change its labor and tax policies; and if the New Deal would not scrap its great liberal program, they would destroy the New Deal.

Last week I attended a meeting of some delegates to the convention of the National Chamber of Commerce. The speakers on that occasion who spoke for business openly stated that business would not invest its money until the tax laws were changed so as to enable big business to make large profits; that the Government must not tax, and must repeal the Wagner Act. Here was an admission of what I had said, namely, that big business was on a sit-down strike to compel this Government to change its liberal policy.

I was gratified on yesterday to find in the Washington News an article by one of the keenest observers in the Press Gallery, the recent well-deserved winner of one of the Pulitzer prizes, Thomas L. Stokes, entitled "Sit-Down of Big Money Balks Recovery Plans." I ask that this splendid article by Mr. Stokes may be incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of May 11, 1939]

SIT-DOWN OF BIG MONEY BALKS RECOVERY PLANS

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

Lots of men with big investment reservoirs at their command, including many bankers with large reserves, are on a sit-down strike and show no disposition to get off their haunches soon.

This situation, rumored for some time by new dealers and somewhat discounted by others, is substantiated by a survey among administration officials whose duties bring them into contact with business, industry, banking, and finance.

It forms the darkest portion of the present business picture, which is in some aspects favorable, and has tied the administration's hands in its attempts to produce real recovery from a number of otherwise propitious factors.

"APPEASEMENT" FAILS

This is why the so-called business appeasement has gone sour. Those to be "appeased" won't appease.

Private spending, the investment of capital in new enterprises, is essential to start a real upswing. This is necessary to supplement Government spending. Retail trade is good, and in some cases record breaking.

Inquiry develops various reasons why men with investment capital are holding back. They usually employ such vague expressions as "fear," "lack of confidence," "wondering what that man in the White House is going to do next," etc.

Some, it develops, now have come to the point where they say they are going to wait for a change of administration. In short, they are just going to sit.

WON'T RISK MONEY

Other reasons assigned are:

They won't risk their money when the Government takes nearly all of it back in taxes. These are putting their money into Government bonds.

They are afraid the Government will move in some new direction which will compete with them. This is especially noted among the utilities.

FEAR DEVALUATION

They are afraid of further devaluation of the dollar, and use of the power to issue $3,000,000,000 in greenbacks.

Also cited as reasons for withholding new investment are the monopoly investigation, which some seem to fear will bring new regulatory legislation, and existing laws such as the Wagner Labor Act and the wage-hour law.

While officials regard many of the fears as groundless, they concede they exist.

PICTURE IS SPOTTY

The banking picture is spotty. Some bankers are reported actively seeking loans, while others are doing very little. The directors of one big New York bank recently discussed a proposal to send out notices to big clients who had maintained a line of credit, reminding them that they had not availed themselves of it, but finally voted the proposal down.

Some cases are reported where small banks in nearby communities have gone into the cities and made industrial loans where the city banks were not making credit available.

BANKS LOADED WITH FUNDS

Generally, however, banks are loaded with funds and are not doing much lending. The demand for credit seems to remain slack. In April loans by Federal Reserve member banks were a billion dollars below those in the fall of 1937, which, in turn, were much below the average before 1929.

Some cases are reported where banks have used the bank examiner as an alibi against making certain loans.

To remedy what appeared to be a need for credit to business, particularly small business, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal Reserve banks were authorized in 1934 to make loans to industry. The volume was small and the powers were rescinded.

INDUSTRIAL LOANS

When the 1937 recession struck, President Roosevelt authorized the R. F. C. to start industrial loans again, and the major part of the $500,000,000 which has been lent has been in the last year.

Now, the administration is reported throwing its support behind loans to small business, provided in a number of pending bills, which would permit a Government guaranty up to 90 percent of the loan—as provided for mortgage loans by the Federal Housing Administration.

ADJUSTMENTS NEEDED

This tendency is cited by some within the administration as pointed toward socialization of many functions, which they say makes this an altogether uncertain era. They do not criticize this trend, but say that it naturally produces hesitancy which cannot clear up immediately until the adjustments are made.

One businessman who is working here with the administration says business should try to find out what the administration is doing instead of staying on the side lines and criticizing. Reforms were necessary, he said, in fact, long overdue. Businessmen, he said, lack a national viewpoint.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5269) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a widespread impression seems to prevail that the pending agricultural appropriation bill tremendously increases the amount of appropriations over and above any amount which has heretofore been made available for the Department of Agriculture in any one fiscal year. A few moments ago the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] had read from the desk an editorial from a great daily newspaper severely criticizing the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations for these increases, or so-called increases. Numerous inaccurate statements have been made to the effect that the Senate was blindly making extravagant increases in the agricultural appropriations, and the inference has been that the increases could not be at all justified.

I am not at all sensitive to such criticisms; but, in justice to the Committee on Appropriations, and in order that the country may be correctly informed as to the facts in the case, I feel that I should make a statement giving the real facts as to the appropriations, in order that these erroneous illusions may be dispelled.

The pending bill, comprising the amount appropriated by the House and including all the amendments added by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, does not constitute any greater drain on the Treasury of the United States than did the appropriations for the current fiscal year. The grand total of all funds made available in all bills for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1939 is $1,529,292,683. The grand total carried in the pending bill as it was reported from the Committee on Appropriations, including the parity-payment amendment, including the appropriations made to carry out section 32, and including all of the Senate committee amendments—most of them justified by Budget estimates—amounts to $1,387,903,372. The bill, therefore, appropriates $141,389,311 less than the total amount which was appropriated for all purposes for the fiscal year 1939.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Just a moment.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has omitted, I believe, an item of $198,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will yield in just a moment. I am coming to that matter.

I offer for the RECORD a summary, prepared by the finance officer of the Department of Agriculture, disclosing the total amount of appropriations for all purposes for the year 1939, and the amount of the Budget estimates for 1940. I may state that the Budget Bureau decreased the estimates for agricultural appropriations by over $512,000,000 this year below the current year's available funds, while allowing huge increases for other purposes. The summary also shows the amount of the bill as passed by the House and a break-down of the bill as it was reported by the Senate committee.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

J. Flood control (transfer from War Department)	7,000,000	3,000,000
Grand total, Department of Agriculture	1,529,292,683	1,015,550,851	1,006,593,413	1,387,903,372

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in this connection it should be pointed out, as stated by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], that the figures for 1939 which I have just given include the amount appropriated for the Farm Security Administration for loans, relief, and rural rehabilitation. This sum amounted to $197,804,714. That is the amount of the appropriations for the current fiscal year, which was included in the sum which I stated—roughly, $1,500,000,000—and the appropriation for the fiscal year 1940 for this activity does not appear in the pending bill or the statement just mentioned. The estimate was submitted by the President in connection with the work-relief measure, just as the estimates have always appeared in connection with the emergency appropriations for the purpose of carrying on work relief. The President's estimate for this purpose in connection with the Relief Act for 1940 is $123,000,000, together with the reappropriation of any funds that might be carried over from the current fiscal year. I telephoned the Department this morning and ascertained that the amount of this carry-over or reappropriation would be $15,457,000, and if the estimate submitted by the President is agreed to that must be added to the $123,000,000. In addition to this, there is another item of $3,000,000 carried in the War Department Appropriation Act, but which is made available for the Department of Agriculture, for flood-control work, the work that is done by the Department of Agriculture, which does not appear in this bill and which should be added to reach the grand total from all sources that will be made available to the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1940.

Adding to the amount of the pending bill as reported by the committee the full amount estimated by the President in connection with the Work Relief Act, including the amount that was carried in the War Department bill, we arrive at a grand total of $1,529,360,522. Therefore, anticipating that the Congress will allow the full amount of the President's estimates in connection with the work-relief measure, and assuming—which is a most violent assumption—that the House will agree to every amendment which was added to the bill by the Senate committee, we arrive at the gigantic sum of $67,000 as the total increase for next year over the appropriations made for this Department for the current year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator give me this figure: As the bill now stands, how much is there in it in excess of Budget estimates, or without any Budget approval whatever?

Mr. RUSSELL. I cannot give the Senator accurately that figure to the exact dollar. I can tell him the three items in which practically the entire increase over Budget estimates is embraced—the $225,000,000 for parity payments, the $113,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 32, and the $25,000,000—which is a reimbursable item, to be repaid by the borrowers for the purpose of making loans to tenant farmers to enable them to become home owners. With the exception of those three major items, the amount is comparatively inconsequential.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, speaking generally, the bill has in it about $363,000,000 without Budget approval? Would that be a correct statement?

Mr. RUSSELL. It has more than that without Budget approval, because there are a number of other items. The Senate has increased the item for the purchase of forest lands by $3,000,000 over and above the Budget. There has been an increase of $4,000,000 for forest roads and trails. The amount would be approximately that stated by the Senator but somewhat larger.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It would be in the neighborhood of $375,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. As the bill now stands, it carries an appropriation of $1,216,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the amount of money that is carried by the bill. The figures I have stated include the entire amount available for the Department of Agriculture, including the permanent appropriations under section 32.

Mr. McNARY. I stated "as the bill now stands," which is, of course, its present condition. Of that amount, what sum represents nonagricultural activities, such as the Forest Service, good roads, and items of that kind, which cannot be charged to agricultural activities or agricultural benefits?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Oregon handled this bill for many years and is familiar with all of its details. I am afraid the Senator from Georgia cannot give the exact amount; but a very large part of these appropriations is not for strictly agricultural purposes. Included in the bill is a large item of over $200,000,000 for public highways to match appropriations made by the States.

Yet the editorial critics refer to that as an "agricultural" appropriation, and state that the Senate is yielding to the farmers' demands, when the item is not any more for the benefit of the farmer than for any other class. It would be fairer to charge the item to commercial trucking or to tourists' travel.

Mr. McNARY. That is one of the points I wanted the Senator to discuss. Appropriations for expenditures in the forests, or for reclamation purposes, are more advantageous to people who live in the cities than to those living in the country. The same reference is made by the writers to items for forest-fire protection, for trails, for lookouts, for reforestation, as though they were appropriations which would directly benefit the farmers who till the soil.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Oregon is undoubtedly correct. I could go through the bill and point out item after item, large appropriations for the Forest Service and other appropriations, which are not only for the purpose of conserving the natural resources of the country but for the purpose of affording means of recreation to those who live in the urban centers. We have large appropriations for the Weather Bureau, whose activities are largely in the furnishing of information to the air lines, to the Army and to the Navy, in order to prevent catastrophes which might result from their having insufficient information.

Mr. McNARY. I might add also that there is the appropriation for the inspection of packing houses and stockyards, and for the enforcement of the Pure Food and Drugs Act, the benefits of which primarily go to those who live in the cities, only incidentally to farmers.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is wholly correct. For example, there is a large increase in the bill this year for the administration of the new Food and Drugs Act, which was passed at the last session of Congress. Included is a considerable sum for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of cosmetics. I do not assume that our editorial critics would say that we were yielding to farm pressure when we appropriated funds to see that cosmetics, face powders, rouge, and things of that kind were pure and not injurious. There are a number of appropriations contained in the bill which are for the benefit of the consuming public generally. I have referred to them from time to time in the past during the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill and shall not advert to them now.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it correct to assume that one reason why the appropriation is larger than the Budget estimate is that the Budget Bureau made no estimate for parity payments, and for the other items which go into the $338,000,000 which the bill carries for parity payments and for these other payments to agricultural interests? As I understand, last year there was a Budget estimate for them. Was the $212,000,000 above the Budget estimate also?

Mr. RUSSELL. That item was enacted without benefit of Budget last year.

Mr. BARKLEY. So there has been no Budget estimate for these payments in the past, and notwithstanding that fact Congress appropriated the money?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So, whether it was $225,000,000 or two hundred twelve and a half million for these other items which the Congress has seen fit to appropriate, and which, in its power, it has the authority to appropriate, if the Budget had estimated for these things, the excess of this appropriation over the budgetary estimates would not have been out of line with the experience in the case of previous bills of the same sort?

Mr. RUSSELL. I believe I am correct in saying that if the Budget had followed the same policy in submitting estimates for the agricultural appropriation bill that was followed in the case of other bills, this bill would be about in line with Budget estimates, probably less. The Budget disregarded the fact that Congress appropriated funds for parity payments last year. It overlooked the reduction in funds for section 32 in the permanent allocation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I desire to commend the statement made by the Senator from Georgia, and I trust that the country, as well as the press, will analyze the figures which have been given by the Senator in full explanation of budgetary conditions along with these appropriations.

I should like to refer to one further fact, which apparently editorial writers and column writers and the country as a whole have lost sight of in various arguments made against the $225,000,000 appropriation for parity payments. Under the amendment which has been adopted by the Senate, if corn were selling for 60 cents a bushel, in Illinois there would not be one single dime of the $225,000,000 paid to corn growers; if cotton were selling for 12 cents a pound, the growers of cotton could not get a single penny from the $225,000,000; if wheat were selling for 75 percent of parity, which would be a dollar a bushel, not one dime would come out of the $225,000,000 for the wheat growers.

Last year nothing was paid to the tobacco growers, because tobacco was bringing 75 percent of parity. So there is a possibility that no part of the $225,000,000 now appropriated would be paid to the farmers as an adjustment toward parity prices, in the event these figures I have disclosed were reached as the market prices of the various basic commodities. That may be one fact which those who figure the budgetary conditions in connection with this appropriation bill took into consideration. There is the possibility that we will not have to pay the farmers any portion of this $225,000,000, and every farmer in this land hopes that price conditions will be such that no subsidy will be necessary. He hopes he can get 60 cents for his corn, a dollar for his wheat, and 12 cents for his cotton. That is what he is asking for, and that is what he would like to see come about. Hand-outs and subsidies are no part of his make-up, but so long as the economic laws of this Nation remain unbalanced he is compelled to fight for his economic life through Federal legislation and as a Member of the Senate representing a great agricultural State I shall stand by him in his fight for reasonable and just legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the observations of the Senator from Illinois are most pertinent. As I pointed out a day or so ago in explaining the parity payment amendment, it is in the nature of an insurance fund, which will be used only in the event it is necessary to safeguard the farmer from disastrously low market prices, prices below 75 percent of parity. If anything like normal conditions are restored, if farm commodiites reach even three-fourths of parity, not one dime of the funds will be expended, and the entire amount of $225,000,000 will revert to the Treasury.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Georgia has already alluded to a fact which ought to be taken into consideration, that the amount of money carried in the bill as it now stands will very likely not be the amount in the bill when it finally becomes a law. Many of the appropriations as the bill now stands consist of increases which have been made in the Senate. The bill has yet to go to conference; and, while we would like to see the amendments, particularly those inserted in the bill by the committee increasing the appropriations, agreed to in conference, we all know from long experience here that such a condition is very seldom, if ever, realized; and that when the bill comes out of conference the appropriations contained in it will not be greater but will be smaller than at present.

This discussion would be more intelligently appreciated by the country, in my opinion, if it took place upon the conference report, rather than at the present time, because all of the figures given are based on the appropriations in the bill as it now stands, and it is premature to say that they will all be in the bill when it becomes a law. In fact, it is more or less certain that they will not be in the bill as they now appear.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I appreciate the contribution of the Senator from Nebraska. I had already stated that my assumption, in arriving at a total figure for the bill, that all of these amendments would be agreed to by the House was a very violent assumption, and, as experienced legislators like the Senator from Nebraska know, it is wholly improbable that the House will accept all of the Senate amendments in full. Even conceding the acceptance of all of these amendments by the House, $67,000 is the gigantic increase out of which has grown all this furor about alleged greatly increased appropriations. It would have gone unnoticed in any other bill.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, as the bill now stands the appropriations amount to $67,000 more than the appropriations contained in the act making appropriations for the present fiscal year. That being true, I think it can be said without the possibility of successful contradiction that when the bill comes out of conference, instead of the appropriations being increased by $67,000, they will be decreased as compared with last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the $67,000 figure is predicated upon the further assumption that the Congress will appropriate in an emergency work relief appropriation bill the full amount of the President's estimate, together with a reappropriation of the unobligated funds for the current fiscal year. I was including in the sum total every appropriation now pending or which has been suggested to be expended by the Department of Agriculture for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In Lord Macaulay's great Essay on Byron he made the statement that the English people about every 7 years become outrageously virtuous, and thereupon select some person for the purpose of persecution. I believe we are to appropriate somewhere in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000 for military purposes at this session of Congress. And every time we discover a visitor representing some foreign country and looking somewhat impecunious we loan him a few million. I do not recall that there has been 5 minutes' discussion of any of those subjects during this session. I suspect that we are imitating the virtues of which Lord Macaulay spoke but applying it to economic subjects.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it is my opinion that those who have never favored the Congress making appropriations for the purpose of assisting the farmers of the country have seized the opportunity, in connection with a measure for which the Budget did not submit estimates even approximating the amount appropriated last year, to raise a great clamor and outcry for the purpose of creating the impression that the farmers had made a demand for more money and that the amendments are born in expediency. These critics are trying to make a mountain of increased appropriations out of a molehill of $67,000 in an attempt to create sentiment against farm appropriations generally.

Despite these attacks on farm appropriations, I should like to point out that recently a survey made by those conducting the Gallup poll, wherein they submitted a questionnaire to the people of the United States, in which they enumerated the purposes for which appropriations were made by the Congress, and asked the people whether or not they favored a reduction of 10 percent in every one of those appropriations, showed that the American people understand the importance of farm appropriations. With the exception of national defense and the farm program, the people of the United States voted overwhelmingly in favor of reduction. But when it came to the farm program, the people of the cities, in the small towns, and on the farms, all of those who were reached in this sampling of public opinion, voted 68 percent against any decrease in the appropriation to be made to the Department of Agriculture for the aid of those who live on the farm.

The Budget estimates this year cut the appropriation from that of last year by $512,000,000, while at the same time it made the staggering increases to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has referred for the Military Establishment. The appropriations for that purpose for this year are double those of last year. My recollection is that the appropriations for national defense last year were approximately a billion dollars, and they will be $2,000,000,000 this year.

Despite that fact, not a word of criticism has been made with respect to that increase. Where is that money to be spent? It is going into steel, it is going into shipyards, it is going into aviation factories. I have not read any editorial criticism of those expenditures. I voted for them. I believe they are necessary. Certainly they are no more important than the farm appropriations, because if we strike down the agricultural economy of America and let the farm population drift into absolute destitution and starvation, we will have much more trouble at home than can possibly threaten us from outside the limits of the United States. Our institutions of government will be in much greater danger than they could possibly be from any invasion from abroad. The entire business of this Nation has a vital interest in affording purchasing power and income to the farmers. The bill which came to the Senate committee would have arbitrarily cut the payment to farmers under the farm program by more than 30 percent below the amount of those payments for the current fiscal year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It may be pertinent to observe at this point that one of the items which is contained in the bill is an appropriation of $47,975,000 for the administration of the Sugar Act, and that the estimates which have been submitted to the Appropriations Committee of the revenue to be derived during the year 1940 from the tax upon sugar fix the amount at $62,200,000. This is a tax which is paid by the processor and by the producer. It is not a tax upon the consumer. So we have a net revenue over and above the entire cost of the administration of the Sugar Act to the Federal Treasury of almost fourteen and one-quarter million dollars.

Before I take my seat I desire to give notice that on next Tuesday, if the opportunity is presented, I shall seek recognition by the Chair in order that I may discuss at greater length the administration of the Sugar Act and the need for amendment of that act during the present session of Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there are in the bill any number of items of the character referred to by the Senator from Wyoming. There is a charge made for grazing in the national-forest area and all funds derived go to the Treasury. There is a considerable income from the sale of timber in the national forests. Those funds are covered into the Treasury as income. None of the critics make reference to the various sums raised by the activities of the Department of Agriculture, such as inspection fees and the like, which are sources of revenue.

There is a special tax levied upon the sportsmen of the country, upon ammunition, shotgun shells, rifle cartridges, which brings into the Treasury over two and a half million dollars a year. The basic law provides that that fund is to be expended by the Biological Survey in promoting wildlife, but only part of it is carried as an appropriation item in this bill. Never yet has the Congress appropriated the full amount of the tax. Some years as much as a million dollars or a million and a half dollars have reverted to the Treasury to help sustain other departments of the Government and other swollen appropriation bills.

Mr. President, I do not desire to tire the Senate. I did feel it my duty to put certain figures in the RECORD.

I concur wholly with what the Senator from Nebraska has said. We may be assured when the bill has finally gone through the Congress, when the amendments have all been considered by the House and the conference committee, that the total amount of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1940 will be considerably below the amount that was available for the fiscal year 1939. I here and now confidently predict that the pending agricultural appropriation bill will be one of the few, if not the only supply bill of the Government that will show a reduction in appropriations for 1940 below the amount that was appropriated for 1939.

My complaint against the measure is that it does not provide adequate funds, on account of all the budgetary limitations and because of the difficulties we always encounter with some Members of the Congress when we come to make agricultural appropriations.

The measure, as reported, was the best that the committee could do. I feel we have been fair to the Treasury of the United States. In view of the limitations and the obstacles with which we were confronted, I feel we have done the best we could for the farm interests of the United States and for the wide variety of other interests which are provided for in the bill.

We tried to protect the consuming public in the inspection of meats, and of containers for fruits and vegetables, and in all of the many other items in the bill that are not for the benefit of the farmers but for the general public. We maintained the appropriations to be given to the States for construction of public roads. That is charged up as a farm appropriation in all the criticisms of the bill. We have endeavored to maintain a balance, to have due regard for the necessity of observing some measure of restraint in making appropriations, and at the same time have endeavored to deal fairly with the agricultural population of the country. Though they may not be as numerous as those who live in the cities, they are still the backbone of our civilization and one of the most important factors in our economic life.

I shall not tire the Senate, but I do want to make clear again that the bill does not constitute any staggering increase in expenditures, as has been stated in so many quarters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, in a few moments I shall ask unanimous consent to reconsider the item on parity payments on page 96 for the purpose of eliminating, in lines 15 and 16, the clause in parenthesis reading as follows: "(in the commercial corn-producing area)."

Mr. LUCAS. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have not yet asked for unanimous consent. The Senator is objecting before I make the request. The phrase I refer to looks perfectly innocent.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Will the Senator please restate his proposed amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. In a moment I am going to ask for unanimous consent to open for further consideration the parity-payment paragraph on page 96, lines 15 and 16. My purpose will be to strike from that paragraph the words "(in the commercial corn-producing area)."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to inquire whether or not it is possible, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, to open up a question by a motion to reconsider certain portions of a section of the bill without opening up the entire question with reference to parity payments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator misunderstands my request. I will make the motion to open up the paragraph on parity payments, and I am stating for his information and for the information of the other Senators the purpose I have in mind in making that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Colorado to say that he expects to make a motion to reconsider. The time for that motion has passed. But the Senator from Colorado stated, as the Chair understood, that later he would propose a unanimous-consent request, which he has not yet made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I wish to explain the question that I have in mind. My understanding is that the Senator from Colorado proposes, when he shall have concluded his remarks, to ask for a reconsideration of this particular section of the appropriation bill. The question I submit is, Is it possible to open up one part of the section and not open up all the section?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent practice, if the Senator so frames his request and the Senate agrees to it, the opening of the section would be limited to the particular purposes stated in the request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, my recollection is that the amendments on pages 96 and 97 were voted on as two separate amendments in the agricultural bill. One related to parity payments and the other to the disposal of surplus commodities. Of course, any Senator may ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which any amendment was adopted. My impression is that the request would have to be a request to reconsider the vote by which the amendment as a whole was agreed to, so that further amendments to that section could be offered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Has not the time passed within which a motion to reconsider this item could be entered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct; but the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] does not propose to make a motion. The Chair will reserve ruling on the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Colorado until it is actually propounded.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As I stated, the language referred to appears perfectly innocent; but, as a matter of fact, it has a very arbitrary purpose. Its object is to restrict parity payments on corn to a certain preferred territory of the United States and not make them apply generally to the whole country. As a matter of fact, under that language, farmers in only 12 States, and only 586 counties in those 12 States, may receive parity payments. In my own State of Colorado we are denied parity payments on corn. Corn is not our principal crop, but we have farms in Colorado which produce as high as 80 bushels of corn to the acre; and under this language they are denied the benefit of parity payments on corn.

In the basic law which was passed last year, loans were provided to the producers of corn. The corn farmer could borrow 57 cents a bushel, except in certain restricted areas, including Colorado, and 80 percent of the area of the country, in which only 43 cents a bushel could be borrowed. Last year my farmers wanted to know how that happened. They said, "Are we not still in the United States of America? Are we in a foreign country? Should we not be treated on the same basis as the rest of the country?" What answer could I make?

Mr. President, an arbitrary trick or joker in the bill denies to 80 percent of the country the benefits of parity payments which have been provided by the Congress. That is bad enough; but at the present time it is proposed to deprive our section of the country of any benefits at all under the parity payments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]; but I am sure the request he makes would not bring about the result he seeks. I understand the Senator is to request a unanimous-consent agreement to eliminate the language which restricts the corn area.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is my purpose.

Mr. McNARY. In my opinion that is a perfectly reasonable request, and one which comes within the rule. The Senator does not have to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the whole amendment. He may ask unanimous consent to reconsider any portion of it. I am with the Senator on the matter of the propriety of his request; but his request comes too late.

The act passed in 1938, which is now the law, limits the corn area to 18 States. I objected to that limitation when we considered the organic act in 1938. The Senator's State, my State, and many others, were outside the benefits to be derived from the law. The limitation is contained in the substantive law. If we should strike out the language to which the Senator refers, we should still go back to the substantive law, which contains a restriction on the corn area, and we should accomplish nothing. That is the point I make.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not agree with the conclusion of the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I agree with the Senator as to the rule. He has a right to ask unanimous consent. That point is perfectly clear to me. The Chair has ruled that the Senator has a right to ask unanimous consent that a portion of the amendment be stricken out. However, if the Senator is successful in having the language referred to stricken out, he bumps up against the substantive law, which eliminates the area referred to. How can the Senator accomplish anything? He cannot, by the elimination of the language referred to, repeal an act of Congress. That point is as plain as daylight.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to ask the Senator why the language is in the bill.

Mr. McNARY. The language probably is in the bill because the Senator did not aid me in opposing it in 1938.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Why is it in this particular bill?

Mr. McNARY. It sets forth in brackets simply the limitation in the substantive act. If the Senator strikes out the language referred to, he still has the substantive act, because he cannot repeal the law by striking out the language in brackets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator. Then, I presume there would be no objection on the part of any Member of the Senate to striking out the language referred to, if it does not mean anything.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection; but I stood on the floor when the able former Senator from Idaho, Mr. Pope, was in the Senate and objected to restricting the corn area to a few favored States in the Corn Belt. I called attention to the fact that the State of Colorado, my State of Oregon, and others were receiving no benefits because of the restrictive definition of the corn area. I do not recall having heard the dulcet voice of the able Senator from Colorado supporting the Senator from Oregon. The Senator is up against neglect, or what the lawyers would call laches. I am with him, but he appears too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Oregon; and I hope that the other Senators, including the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], will take the same position the Senator from Oregon takes—that the phraseology referred to is perfectly harmless, unnecessary, and meaningless, and that they will agree to the unanimous-consent request which I shall make in a few moments that it be stricken from the bill as legislation which is unnecessary.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I deeply regret that I shall be compelled to object to the unanimous-consent request when it is made by my distinguished friend the Senator from Colorado.

As I understand, the Secretary of Agriculture and his subordinates in the Department of Agriculture have taken an unusual amount of time in selecting the commercial corn-producing area in America. I have every sympathy with the position taken by the Senator. As I understand the Secretary of Agriculture, there might be one section in the Senator's State which would be rightly subject to this particular provision. Two miles away, or perhaps half a mile, or perhaps 3 miles away, would be a section which produces corn, but not in sufficient quantities to meet the adequate requirements. That is to say, the corn area in the Senator's State is not compact and contiguous as it is in Illinois and Iowa and other corn commercial areas. In the Senator's State doubtless there are fields which produce better corn than we produce; but because of the administrative expense in connection with trying to take in every separate 40 acres in the country which might be eligible, standing alone, the commercial corn-producing area has been confined to a particular section, including the 12 States which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has discussed.

Mr. President, there is one thing which we cannot overlook: As I understand the distinguished Senator from Colorado, he does not believe very much in the present Farm Act. He does not favor the control of surpluses of the basic agricultural commodities. If I have understood him correctly throughout the debates, he is opposed to that sort of philosophy.

It is true that the parity payment feature does not reach the farmer in the Senator's State. Nevertheless, that farmer may raise all the corn he wants to raise, and he is not subject to control at all, and if the Senator believes in no control of surplus corn he should be happy that his State is outside the corn commercial area.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But the Colorado farmer must compete with Illinois corn.

Mr. LUCAS. He may compete; but while the Illinois farmer is raising 100 acres of corn on a farm on which he could possible raise 200 acres if his acreage were not curtailed, the farmer in Colorado may raise all the corn he wants to raise. He may put every acre of his farm into wheat, corn, or any other commodity, because he does not come under the control provision. Therefore, if we in Illinois and the other commercial corn-producing areas must suffer as the result of curtailing our acreage, we feel that we are entitled to benefit payments. If we make the sacrifice, we are entitled to the benefits.

That statement is also true of the noncooperating farmer in Illinois. He does not have to comply with the program if he does not wish to do so. He may raise all the corn he wants to raise; but if he does not comply with the acreage curtailment and the soil-conservation program, and go along with the program as designed and regulated by the Secretary of Agriculture, he does not receive the benefit of the payments which come along. He does not receive the benefit of the corn loan. He is not entitled to those benefits unless he cooperates with the program. If I understand the situation correctly, the corn farmer in Colorado is unable to cooperate because the tremendous administrative expense is prohibitive.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Because the law does not permit him to cooperate.

Mr. LUCAS. The reason for it, as I have said, is because of the tremendous expense which would be entailed by the Department of Agriculture in permitting him to partake in the program.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator is entirely mistaken about the expense, because the program extends to wheat, and it extends to other commodities besides corn. The same agricultural set-up which pertains to parity payments on wheat, and provides for a survey of farms, pertains to corn as well. So there is no extra expense.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. As I understand, most of North Dakota is not in the corn area. We raise some corn in the southern part of the State for commercial purposes; but, generally speaking, we are not in the commercial corn-producing area. But corn is considered a soil-depleting crop, and if we are under the wheat provision of the Agricultural Adjustment Act we cannot raise corn that we want for our own feed.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, is not this situation just another proof of the failure of the present farm program when it is admitted that the farmers in the Senator's State must suffer injustice because it would be more expensive to give them a corn quota? It seems to me it is merely another proof of the injustice of a plan that cannot be made to apply with equal effect upon all the farmers producing a particular crop. I think it should cause us to put our heads together in an effort to formulate a farm program that will give the farmers a real benefit on that portion of a crop that is consumed in this country and then take the bridle off and let them produce above that all they want to produce for the world trade.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator. He means, as I understand, that we should give all farmers everywhere an equal opportunity. They are all in the United States of America, and we should treat them all fairly. The Senator from Illinois says, "Oh, yes; but your farmers can produce all the corn they want." Suppose they do that; does not that affect the production in the United States? Is not that the very thing we are trying to get away from? Do we not want to bring the farmers of Colorado and in every other

State of the Union into the program? Do Senators want the program simply to apply to 12 States and 586 counties? Is that the object?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator that I am sure my figures are correct; if not, I will stand corrected and put the proper figures in the RECORD as they should be. But I think all the corn produced which finds its way into commerce outside the commercial corn-producing area in this country is approximately 7 percent of the total.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But the States outside the commercial, corn-producing area are still in the Union, are they not?

Mr. LUCAS. I hope so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not know what the answer to that is.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. HUGHES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this question has been a subject of controversy ever since the original Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 was introduced. I should like to point out the effect striking this provision from the bill would have on the distribution of funds. We only have $225,000,000 available, and every time there is any alteration in the formula for the distribution of funds, it, of course, has the effect of taking money away from some other commodity. The estimates of the Department of Agriculture as to the distribution of this fund of $225,000,000 based on section 303, and using 1938 data except for wheat, of which there will be a shift in production this year, shows that cotton will get $90,000,000, corn in the commercial area will get $65,000,000, and wheat will get $64,000,000. If the amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado were adopted, it would have a most disastrous effect on the wheat farmer; it would take away one dollar of every three that is appropriated for the wheat farmer, and would take about 17 cents from every dollar that would otherwise go to the cotton farmer. If the amendment were adopted, the figures would be as follows: Cotton would get $73,000,000 instead of $90,000,000; corn would get $101,654,000—and I might say that my State would get a considerable amount of it because there is a larger acreage planted to corn in Georgia than there is to cotton—and the wheat farmer would get but $46,571,000.

So if this amendment were agreed to it would mean a reduction of over a third in the subsidy payments paid the wheat producers and would be most disastrous to the effort to secure cooperation by the farmers with the wheat program. My State does not produce any wheat in commercial quantities; most of the production is ground there and consumed on the farm; but I understand that the wheat farmers of the West are expecting to be in difficulty this fall, and their difficulties will be added to considerably if we take $20,000,000 away from them, to be expended on the basis of some new formula we do not understand. The first adjustment payment provision, adopted last year, has the same limitation; payments are limited to the commercial corn area.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Illinois to say that all the territory outside the favored 12 States and 586 counties only produce 7 percent of the corn. If what I propose can only affect 7 percent of the corn producers, I cannot follow the Senator from Georgia in his conclusion as to the disastrous effect of extending a square deal, a fair deal, to the farmers of the other territory.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not in a position to controvert the figures of the Senator from Illinois, but I am of the opinion that the Senator from Illinois refers to corn which gets into the usual channels of the corn trade and into corn storage and not to the total production of corn. Corn is more widely produced than is any other agricultural commodity in the United States; practically every State produces some corn; and I assume that the 7-percent figure refers to the corn which goes into the normal channels of trade and commerce and not that which is fed or consumed on the farm.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the table to which I have referred in order that Senators may have the benefit of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

Distribution of price-adjustment funds by commodities

[Thousand dollars]

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HUGHES. I am moved to ask the Senator if he can tell me what, according to the Secretary of Agriculture's determination, is the commercial corn-producing area. The Senator suggested it represented so many acres, but I should like to know where they are located, and what States are denominated the corn-producing area.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I regret I cannot answer that question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I obtrude for a moment on that point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. It may seem, because of the statement I made a moment ago as to the Senator's proposal coming too late, that I am not in sympathy with the objective of his amendment, but such is not the case.

The commercial corn-producing area is not defined by States, but by producing areas. The definition is found in section 301, paragraph (4) (A) of the act of 1938, and was discussed on the floor at the time very intelligently by the then able Senator from Idaho, Mr. Pope. I objected to the definition. I shall read it for the RECORD. It is found on page 11 of the act:

> "Commercial corn-producing area" shall include all counties in which the average production of corn (excluding corn used as silage) during the 10 calendar years immediately preceding the calendar year for which such area is determined after adjustment for abnormal weather conditions, is 450 bushels or more per farm and four bushels or more for each acre of farm land in the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Not corn farm land but all farm land.

Mr. McNARY. That excluded the area as to which I complained then and my very able friend from Colorado complains now. It excluded it because we did not have a 10-year average upon which we could base a request for parity payments, which were then called benefit payments.

So I am saying to my very learned friend from Colorado that if the Senate strikes out the language which he proposes, we will then revert to the law of 1938, which defines this area, and he will accomplish nothing. It is not necessary for the language to be in the bill; it might as well be out, because the provision goes back to the act of 1938, anyway. While my sympathy for the Senator's proposal is unbounded, yet the area is defined by statute, and merely placing the words parenthetically in the provision now before the Senate for some reason adds nothing and detracts nothing from the subsidy act passed in 1938.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think the Senator from Oregon would agree with me that the paragraph he has just read is nothing more nor less than a definition of what is meant by the term "commercial corn-producing area."

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator has read nothing but a definition; he has not read any provision of law; and when the pending bill refers to that definition naturally it describes the very thing he has in mind.

I hope that all Senators will agree with the Senator from Oregon that the words in this bill are entirely useless, so that we may strike them out and go right along. I will take my chances, if we strike them out now, as to whether or not they are useless and as to whether we are too late in taking action.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has not as yet made his request. Unless he wishes to discuss the matter further on principle, I suggest that he make his request, so that, if granted, we can then consider the matter on its merits, and if it is not granted we will know the parliamentary status. I do not wish to cut the Senator off if he wishes to discuss the question further, but the concrete proposition will come if, when he makes his request for unanimous consent, the request is granted.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I wish to make a brief statement concerning the matter involved in this discussion. I am in full agreement with the Senator from Oregon that the matter the Senator from Colorado has in mind comes too late. I opposed this restriction at the time the bill was before the Senate committee for an entirely different reason, however, than the Senator from Oregon. All of my State of Iowa, of course, is fully within the commercial corn-producing area, but there were two elements taken into consideration. One was that most of the States of the Union produce small amounts of corn, and the effect of the act on the little areas that produce an acre or two of corn for home use was to prohibit inclusion in the benefits of the act. There was however, another vital matter. Those who came within the commercial corn-producing area could impose on themselves marketing quotas, not only on the cooperators but those within that area who did not choose to cooperate were limited in the amount of corn that they could market if marketing quotas were imposed. But the farmers outside the commercial corn-producing area were not brought within that responsibility or that penalty for not complying with the marketing restriction. The result is that while the Senator is complaining, and with some justification and logic, that his section of the country is not benefiting under the program, it is not charged with responsibilities under the program. My strong objection to defining the area was that if that were done we might impose restrictions and marketing quotas on ourselves in the commercial corn-producing area, and farmers in the noncommercial area could produce and increase their production as much as they saw fit, and go into the market, and take the market away from us who were restricted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But the Senator overlooks one point in his argument. That is that we are restricted as to wheat growing. We cannot go from wheat to corn, or from corn to wheat, because we are in a restricted area so far as wheat is concerned; and we might just as well be restricted so far as corn is concerned.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. LOGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield first to my colleague.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] that the suggestion which my colleague makes is too late, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that if the Senator from Oregon is correct in stating that the law as it stands is wrong in fixing corn-producing areas, then it ought to be amended; and if this clause is left in, we shall have to amend two statutes instead of one. In other words, this clause nails down the error. So, it seems to me that if the law is wrong, the Senator from Oregon and the rest of us should be eager to leave the matter in such shape that a proper amendment could be made to the law of 1938.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I assure the Senator that I am anxious.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. I am in full sympathy with all that the Senator from Colorado says; but I must agree with the Senator from Oregon that whether we strike out the words in parentheses or whether we leave them in can make no difference whatever.

This is an appropriation of $225,000,000 pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 specifically defines to whom these benefits may be paid—that is, to the growers of corn—and they are those within the commercial corn-producing area as defined in that act. So the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is evidently correct when he says that nothing could be done unless we should amend the previous act, because the act is binding. This appropriation is made under the previous act, and the act limits the payment of corn benefits to those who are in the corn-producing area defined in the act; and there is no way that I can see for us to reach the matter in this measure.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am very glad the junior Senator from Kentucky will not object to striking this language from the pending bill.

Mr. LOGAN. No; I should agree to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is fine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph dealing with parity payments on page 96 be opened to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair has understood the discussion of the Senator from Colorado, his request perhaps may be thus stated. The Chair will ask the Senator to see if the Chair is correct in his understanding:

The Senator from Colorado requests unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the paragraph constituting the committee amendment relating to parity payments was adopted, only for the purpose, however, of striking from the paragraph the words appearing in parentheses in lines 15 and 16, page 96, which are "in the commercial corn-producing area."

Does the Chair correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Chair is correct. That is my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am forced to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have at the desk a motion which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado moves to recommit House bill 5269 with instructions to the Appropriations Committee to eliminate all items in excess of Budget estimates or items not recommended by the Budget.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President on that motion I ask for a roll call.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. On the motion to lay on the table I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think we are entitled to a chance to make a record on this motion; and it will save a good deal of time if we may have a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request Senators who favor seconding the demand for a roll call to rise.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The vote now being taken is on the motion to lay on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURKE. The senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is necessarily detained from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. Therefore I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on important official business.

Mr. MCKELLAR. My colleague the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART] is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD]. If present and voting, the Senator from Ohio would vote "nay," and the Senator from New York would vote "yea."

Mr. CAPPER. My colleague the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent on official business for the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 28, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado was laid on the table.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment on page 37, line 15, to increase the appropriation by $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 37, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$1,373,982" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,383,982."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the amendment proposes an increase of $10,000 under the Bureau of Plant Industry for the operation of a citrus fruit laboratory now in course of construction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposal of the Senator is to amend a committee amendment which has already been agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as much as I regret to do so, I do not feel that the committee can now grant unanimous consent to opening up amendments in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, during the consideration of the bill a number of us, including the Senator in charge of the bill, discussed the possibility or desirability of reducing the aggregate appropriation. In the committee two motions were submitted providing for horizontal reductions. They were opposed by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Georgia, and were defeated. Suggestion was subsequently made that an amendment might be offered to send the bill back to the committee with instructions, not in just the form of the motion that was laid on the table, but to reduce the aggregate by a certain percentage or a certain amount, and to leave to the committee the selection of the items where the reductions should be made.

The matter was discussed with the Senator from Georgia, who said he did not feel that that ought to be done as to the agricultural appropriation bill alone, that he was in entire accord with those who were interested in reducing governmental expenditures and appropriations, and would be glad to cooperate if the scope of such a motion to reduce were broader, and included other measures.

I merely wish to say that it is contemplated that at a subsequent date a motion will be made to reduce the aggregate of different appropriation bills, either by a percentage or by amounts, the form of the motion to be formulated, which will include all appropriation bills, making appropriate exceptions, such as in the case of the interest on the Government debt, in which case, of course, no reduction can be made. I think I am correctly quoting the Senator from Georgia, that he would be inclined to cooperate in a movement of that kind.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. I think the able senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has anticipated the Senator, for he offered a resolution to that effect this morning.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Utah may have anticipated the offering of such a motion, but I think he has anticipated the time, also, because the movement should not be inaugurated until the other major appropriation bills have been considered, so that the reductions would apply to all the bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I want to say one word while the Senator from Georgia is before me. The Senate does not, and I am afraid cannot, appreciate the burdens which the Senator from Georgia has carried in connection with the pending bill. He has done a wonderfully conscientious job. He has been under pressure, as is the case in connection with other appropriation bills, from departments and from individuals who were seeking appropriations, and while the amount appropriated in the pending bill is somewhat large, there is only one complaint I have had as to the Senator from Georgia, and that is that he did not state his case to the Senate when the consideration of the bill began as he has stated it this morning. The result was that in the Senate and in the press of the country a false impression was given.

I wish to pay tribute to the Senator from Georgia, both because of the work he has done and because I know of his desire to cooperate with those who would like to reduce the aggregate of governmental expenditures.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado, if he will pardon me, that the resolution I have offered not only covers the pending bill and the bills which have been passed, but those which are to be passed in the future.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, there is the practical consideration that those in charge of the departments are a very worldly wise lot—they are financially wise—and I am apprehensive that if we were to say to them today that we wanted them to scale down appropriations 5 or 10 percent their requests would be accordingly increased to meet the anticipated reductions.

Mr. KING. I had that point in mind, and therefore I did not ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. I wanted my resolution to lie upon the table as an admonition to the distinguished gentlemen to whom the Senator refers that the Senate is taking cognizance of the fact that their appropriations are too large and too extravagant and that we intend to cut them down.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado answer a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I will attempt to do so.

Mr. BILBO. The Senator's proposal is that there be a 10-percent cut in all appropriations?

Mr. ADAMS. No; I had no figure in mind. Some of us have had the feeling that it is possible to make substantial reductions, for the Congress to exact more economic administration here and there, and that at an appropriate time an effort should be made to require the departments to spend something less than the amounts which have been appropriated for them in the past. We had no fixed amount in mind. Perhaps 10 percent is a rough estimate of what is in the minds of those who have discussed the matter.

Mr. BILBO. Does the Senator think that is fair, in view of the fact that in this particular bill the Appropriations Committee has already cut the parity payment from $250,000,000 to $225,000,000? It is now proposed to impose another 10-percent cut.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that no one has talked of a horizontal cut. I tried to make that clear. We are not talking about a horizontal cut but a cut in the aggregate appropriation and to be made in those places where the cuts can be stood without doing an injury; and under such a provision there might not be a single cut in the parity payments.

Mr. BILBO. In the proposed cut in all appropriations, or in a part of them, to get a reduction of 10 percent, is the Senator contemplating to have the cut apply to his salary?

Mr. ADAMS. I shall be glad to join the Senator from Mississippi to cut more than that from our salaries. I voted for a cut of 15 percent before the Senator from Mississippi was a Member of the Senate.

Mr. BILBO. It is only upon that condition that I will agree to the Senator's proposal. If every appropriation we have made is cut, I will agree to the Senator's proposal.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator come along with us if we agree to cut our salaries?

Mr. BILBO. If every appropriation we have made is cut, I will include myself, but if we cut only the salaries I will not go with the Senator from Colorado. I will not go with him unless he agrees to cut all the appropriations.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest that we cross that bridge of cutting when we get to it, and that we now vote on the bill. All of this talk about something which may or may not happen is academic.

Mr. ADAMS. I apologize for disturbing the Senator from Kentucky, because I know he never will indulge in any wasteful talk about anything that may occur in the future.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not have in mind that the Senator from Colorado was engaging in wasteful talk, but he served notice of what he would talk about in the future, and when the time comes I believe it will be discussed not only by him but by others. Inasmuch, however, as much of the discussion today has been on questions not really before the Senate, and that other measures are waiting to be acted upon, I expressed the hope, which I still entertain, that we may vote on the pending bill and then proceed to consider something else.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the amendment to the bill dealing with parity payments was acted on by voice vote only. The same statement applies with regard to the amendment dealing with the disposal of surplus commodities. Inasmuch as no record vote was taken, I wish to state for the RECORD that on the voice vote on the parity-payments amendment, and on the amendment dealing with the disposal of surplus commodities, I voted "no," because I am opposed to appropriations for which there are no funds available.

On the motion submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] a direct individual attitude could not be registered because of the motion which cut off debate. I wish simply to announce for the RECORD that if the motion submitted by the Senator from Colorado had come to a vote I should have voted "yea."

Mr. CHAVEZ. I wish to state that in the voice vote that was taken on the payment of parity payments I voted "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that the clerks be directed to correct the totals.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HILL (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on important official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURKE. I desire to repeat the announcement previously made with respect to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], who is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CAPPER. My colleague the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WAGNER. My colleague [Mr. MEAD] is detained on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea." If the junior Senator from Ohio were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] is detained from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] is absent on official business for the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent because of illness in his family.

I am advised that if present and voting, the Senators from Nevada, the Senator from Washington, the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Idaho, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Arkansas, the Senator from New Jersey, and the junior Senator from Maryland would vote "yea."

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has a pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. If present, the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea," and, if present, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 61, nays 14, as follows:

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II—RESOLUTION OF DISAPPROVAL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it has been my purpose and is my purpose to move that the Senate consider Calendar No. 349, Senate bill 1100, the Florida ship canal bill. However, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] desires to have a vote on the resolution reported by the Select Committee on Government Organization, with the understanding that it will not be debated. For that purpose I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 16.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, may the resolution be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the concurrent resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 16), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. II transmitted to Congress by the President on May 9, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 16. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the concurrent resolution. The Senate is familiar with it. I think it is important that it be disposed of at this time. If the Senate approves the reorganization plan submitted by the President, the officials in the various bureaus and departments affected by the plan will know that it is to become effective and can proceed to arrange the affairs of the departments in accordance with the plan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Has the concurrent resolution been surveyed by any committee?

Mr. BYRNES. It has; and it was adversely reported by the Select Committee on Government Organization.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was there any division in the committee?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] voted contrary to the majority of the committee. His was the only such vote.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the concurrent resolution submitted by the able Senator from South Carolina was in opposition to the approval of reorganization plan No. II.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. MCNARY. I supported the chairman of the committee, who submitted the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that is true. The Senator supported the concurrent resolution. I knew then that there was something wrong with it, and I intend to vote against it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Were any tears shed over the demise of the Bituminous Coal Commission?

Mr. BYRNES. I know of none.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on this question those who favor reorganization plan No. II will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement of the Senator from Kentucky is correct. Those in favor of the reorganization plan will vote "nay." The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was rejected.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Calendar No. 349, Senate bill 1100, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1100) for the completion of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce without recommendation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate, S. 1100, provides for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, in his report to the Secretary of War on April 1, 1937, which was transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on April 3, 1937, and which is contained in House Document No. 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

This report was made by Major General Markham in the course of his official duty while he was Chief of Engineers and was made pursuant to section 4 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of January 21, 1927, an act signed by President Coolidge, that section providing for a preliminary examination and survey of a "waterway from Cumberland Sound, Ga. and Fla., to the Mississippi River," and section 2 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of July 3, 1930, signed by President

Hoover, providing for preliminary examinations and surveys of:

First. Waterway across northern Florida to connect the Atlantic Intracoastal Waterway with the proposed Gulf Intracoastal Waterway by the most practicable route;

Second. Waterway for barge traffic across southern Georgia and northern Florida to connect the Atlantic Intracoastal waterway with the proposed Gulf Intracoastal waterway by the most practicable route;

Third. From the mouth of the St. Marys River on the Atlantic Ocean, waterway for barge traffic to connect with the proposed Gulf Intracoastal waterway by the most practicable route.

General Markham states in his report of April 1, 1937, that the investigations directed under section 4 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of January 21, 1927, and section 2 of the Rivers and Harbors Act of July 3, 1930, to which I have referred—were for the purpose of ascertaining the best route for a canal across the base of the Florida Peninsula in the States of Florida and Georgia and of determining the most suitable dimensions, cost, and advisability. The route finally selected is entirely in the State of Florida.

Thus, the canal provided in the pending bill is a river and harbor project recommended by the Chief of Engineers as the outcome of an extended series of studies by the most competent engineering boards, covering a period of something like 10 years, and by the Chief of Engineers himself. Each of these boards made its study and submitted its report for the purpose of enabling the ultimate reviewing authority—the Chief of Engineers—to make a final report and recommendation to Congress in compliance with river and harbor law and practice. None of the conclusions reached by the engineering boards which studied the proposed canal as a river and harbor measure in the course of the examination and survey authorized by the acts of 1927 and 1930 was regarded as final under river and harbor law and procedure. They constituted the basis on which the final reviewing authority—the Chief of Engineers—having all these studies and conclusions before him relating to physical feasibility, financial benefits, effect on ground waters, volume of shipping, interests affected, general desirability, and the like, as well as his own deductions and the results of his own judgment, made up his report to Congress.

Paralleling this river and harbor procedure, and independently of it, were a series of efforts by Florida citizens to secure the construction of the proposed canal through a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and otherwise. Later they were required by law to transfer their application to the Public Works Administration, and this Administration turned down the proposal as a self-liquidating project for the type and size of canal then under consideration, and also turned it down when presented in two other forms. Then allotments were secured from the President under the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 to the extent of $5,400,000, and work began on the canal as a relief project under Government engineers. When these funds were expended no further relief money was available and the work ceased. Then the river and harbor studies of the canal culminated in the favorable report of the then Chief of Engineers, General Markham, April 1, 1937. Here it will be helpful to review in some detail these river and harbor studies.

1927

On February 5, 1927, the Chief of Engineers appointed a special board of Government engineers, which I shall call the first special board, to make a preliminary examination and survey of the waterway from Cumberland Sound, Ga. and Fla., to the Mississippi River, authorized by Rivers and Harbors Act of 1927 which was signed by President Coolidge. The first special board continued its work throughout the remainder of 1927, and throughout 1928 and 1929.

1930

In 1930 the first special board of Army engineers was assigned also the duty of making preliminary examination and survey of waterways for barge traffic across southern Georgia and northern Florida.

1931

On December 1, 1931, the first special board reported on the preliminary examination it had made pursuant to Rivers and Harbors Act of 1927 and in that report recommended that a survey be made to determine the best available location, cost of construction, and economic justification for (a) a ship canal across the northern portion of the peninsula of Florida and a barge canal along the same route; and (b) a barge canal between the western terminus of such a waterway and the eastern terminus of the existing Gulf intracoastal waterway.

As a result of the work and recommendations of the first special board, and the recommendation thereon of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the Chief of Engineers who at that time was Maj. Gen. Lytle Brown, authorized on January 28, 1932, a second special board to make surveys to determine (a) plans and estimates of cost for a ship canal along the most practicable route, (b) plans and estimates of cost for a barge canal along the route selected for a ship canal, with connections at either end with the intracoastal waterway; (c) plans and estimates of cost for a barge canal to connect the Atlantic and Gulf Intracoastal waterways along the most practicable and economically feasible route, independent of the question of a ship canal. The Chief of Engineers further directed that the territory to be covered by the survey be extended to include all practicable routes, and that separate economic studies be made and recommendations be submitted covering (a), (b), and (c) above. The territory covered by the surveys resulting from these orders of the Chief of Engineers extended over all of the Florida Peninsula and a large portion of southern Georgia. However, preliminary studies eliminated routes outside of the area lying south of the thirty-first parallel of latitude and east of the Appalachicola and Flint Rivers. The total number of routes surveyed was 28.

On July 21, 1932, the Emergency Relief and Construction Act was approved by President Herbert Hoover. Paragraph 3, subsection A, section 201, empowered the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—

> To make loans to private corporations to aid in carrying out the construction, replacement, or improvement of bridges, tunnels, docks, viaducts, waterworks, canals, and markets devoted to public use and which are self-liquidating in character.

On August 1, 1932, the National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association made application to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan to construct a Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal as a self-liquidating project.

On December 19, 1932, the National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association appeared before the engineers' advisory board of the R. F. C. for a formal hearing upon its application for a loan. Gen. Charles P. Summerall, president of the corporation, presented the application.

Bear in mind that the application of this association to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation did not change the status of the canal project then pending before the Army engineers as a river and harbor project.

On February 4, 1933, the Board of Directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation decided that since the project was being studied by the United States Engineers Corps, under instructions and with appropriation from Congress, no consideration of it should be made until the Engineering Corps had finished its work and filed its report.

On February 10, 1933, the Southern Railway Co., the Seaboard Air Line Railway, the Florida East Coast Railway, and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. appeared through representatives in opposition to the Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal before the second special board of Army engineers appointed on January 28, 1932, by the Chief of Engineers to make the survey previously recommended by the Army engineers for such canal.

On March 18, 1933, Gov. David Sholtz, of Florida, addressed a communication to the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, requesting the President to give very serious consideration to the inclusion of the Florida ship canal in the President's public-works program, and stating that a very large amount of common labor could be used on the project of a class that lent itself admirably to the cantonment system for the unemployed, that benefits from this project would be permanent, that they would accrue to the Nation's shipping between the Gulf and the Atlantic, that the project would complete a vital and necessary link in the Nation's intracoastal system from Boston to the Rio Grande, that plans for the project were so far advanced that work could start promptly, that construction would necessitate large expenditures of private capital for auxiliary work thereby causing additional employment of labor, that the Florida ship canal was endorsed by all outstanding waterways associations of the United States, and that he, the Governor, urged the President's favorable consideration of the proposal.

On May 12, 1933, the Legislature of the State of Florida created the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida, and this authority took over the application of the National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan with which to construct the canal.

On June 3, 1933, the second special board of Army engineers, created on January 20, 1932, to make a survey for the canal, had not completed its work but had determined on the best route for the canal and had completed collection of all basic data necessary to an estimate of its cost of construction and had substantially completed its economic survey. On that day—that is, June 3, 1933—the Chief of Engineers, by direction of the President, caused the second special board to make a preliminary report in order that the data contained therein might be submitted to the engineers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to be used by them as a basis for computing the cost of construction, and on that same day the preliminary report was submitted to the Chief of Engineers. The special board, having made this preliminary report for the benefit of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, continued its studies of the canal as a river and harbor project.

On June 16, 1933, the President approved an act amending the Emergency Relief Construction Act of 1932, under which amendment the application for a loan by the Ship Canal Authority of the State of Florida, originally the application of the National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association, was transferred at a subsequent date, to wit, August 14, 1933, according to a letter dated June 11, 1936, from Assistant Administrator Hackett, Public Works Administration, in answer to an inquiry regarding the matter from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Public Works Administration, and was thereafter examined by and prosecuted before that agency. This did not displace the work of the second special board of Army engineers, however, which continued its studies and examinations of the project as a river and harbor proposal under river and harbor laws.

On October 19, 1933, the report of the engineer examiner of the Public Works Administration on the Florida ship canal was made and was favorable. The canal contemplated in the application to the Public Works Administration was to have the following characteristics:

First. It was to be a lock canal—following the same route as that of the canal now under consideration—with two sets of locks across the northern portion of the Florida Peninsula, and was to be a toll canal.

Second. The western or Gulf approach section was to be approximately 27 miles long with a bottom width of channel varying from 1,000 to 500 feet.

Third. The summit section was to be 67.8 miles long with a bottom width of 250 feet.

Fourth. The remaining portion of the canal from the east lock to the Atlantic was to be approximately 106.6 miles long with a bottom width of 400 feet.

Fifth. Except for the summit section, the canal was to be at sea level with channel depth of 30 feet plus a 2-foot overdepth in sand and a 3-foot overdepth in rock.

Sixth. The summit section was to be at elevation 40 feet above mean sea level with depths as above.

Seventh. The project contemplated a ship canal with all necessary locks, dams, bridges, ferries, shops, buildings, and so forth, necessary for its operation.

Eighth. The total cost of the project was estimated to be $115,000,000, the amount recommended by the engineer examiner of P. W. A. for a loan.

Ninth. This estimate of cost was based on data furnished by the second special board of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, in its report to the Chief of Engineers, dated June 3, 1933, which had been ordered by the President for submission to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for its use in computing the cost of the project and transferred with the orginal application to the Public Works Administration. This estimate was also based on later modifications and revisions made by United States Engineer Department.

The report on the Florida ship canal of the engineer examiner of the Public Works Administration on October 19, 1933, estimated the total tonnage that would have passed through the canal in 1932 at 40,338,000 tons of cargo, with a total revenue of $8,100,000 based on a toll of 21 cents per ton of cargo.

This report stated that the construction of the proposed canal and its necessary appurtenances would present no new nor unusual engineering problems; that its economic soundness was demonstrated in a reasonable and conservative manner; and the conclusion and recommendation of the report were:

> It is concluded that the project covered herein constitutes a public necessity and is of real social value. The project will afford much employment to many classes of skilled and unskilled labor; that the design is in accord with sound engineering practice and that the project is economically sound. It is recommended that the loan with or without grant be made.

The Administrator of the Public Works Administration at a later date rejected the application of the Ship Canal Authority on the ground that it was not a self-liquidating project.

On December 30, 1933, the second special board of Army engineers made its report, embodying the following plan:

A ship canal 35 feet in depth, with sea-level approaches on the Atlantic and the Gulf sides connected by a summit-level section 65.5 miles long, the approaches to be 400 feet in width, and the summit-level section 400 feet for a distance of 23 miles and 250 feet through the remaining 42.5 miles; the approach channel in the open Gulf, 27 miles long, to be 500 feet wide for the inner 15 miles and 1,000 feet wide from there to deep water; the summit level to vary from 40 to 45 feet above sea level, to be entered through locks in parallel, one of each pair to have clear dimensions of 110 feet by 1,000 feet and the second of 110 feet by 610 feet; the construction cost, exclusive of interest, but including lands and damages being estimated at a total of $208,043,000.

In reference to this plan the second special board held that while the expense of constructing either a barge or a ship canal between the Atlantic and the Gulf would be unjustified economically, a ship canal would result in large, though economically insufficient benefits to water-borne commerce and to the convenience of the Nation, particularly to that of the States bordering the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and in the Mississippi Valley. The second special Board held that the construction of neither a barge nor a ship canal was economically justified at that time. This report was submitted to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and taken under consideration by it. It was by no means a final decision.

On February 1, 1934, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, having been requested by the Chief of Engineers theretofore to make an economic survey of the proposed ship canal, submitted its report to the Chief of Engineers. This report, which was based upon a lock canal, estimated that the total number of ship transits through the canal, as of 1931, would have been 9,573, that the savings in hours of travel would have been 204,777 in 1931, and that the savings in money would have amounted to $6,424,369. It estimated that the savings per ton of general cargo would have been 19.3 cents and per ton of petroleum cargo 14.2 cents. The Bureau's report stated that a ship canal along the route selected by Army and P. W. A. engineers—the route followed by the project now before us—can be considered practicable from a navigation standpoint. The report stated that the portion of the shipping industry which the Bureau had been able to contact had held that the probable cost of building the waterway then under consideration was not justified through any benefits which might thereby accrue to cargo or vessel.

On March 2, 1934, nine southern Senators wrote the President calling his attention to the variance of the estimates by P. W. A. engineers and Army engineers as to the cost of the proposed Florida ship canal and requesting him to appoint a special board of review to make further examination.

In response to this request the President appointed a special board of review consisting of two Army engineers to be designated by the Secretary of War, two engineers to be designated by the Administrator of Public Works, and one engineer from civil life selected by the other four.

On June 28, 1934, the President's special board of review submitted a report to him. This report recommended a sea-level canal 30 feet deep, to be deepened to 35 feet if traffic later should justify; 400 feet wide from the Atlantic Ocean to Palatka; 250 feet wide from Palatka to the Gulf; and 500 to 1,000 feet wide from the Gulf shore to deep water, to follow route 13–B, as recommended by the second special board of January 28, 1932, estimated the cost at $142,709,000, exclusive of interest, during the period of construction, and estimated the period of construction at 6 years. The report stated that the previous report by the second special board and the report by the P. W. A. engineer on the P. W. A. application of the Canal Authority were for a lock canal, selected on account of certain ground-water conditions; but that this Board—that is, the President's board—after considering these reports and later data, was of the opinion that these ground-water conditions were not controlling and preferred the sea-level canal for the additional reasons, first, slightly lower first cost and much lower operating and maintenance cost; second, greater ship capacity; third, lesser difficulties in construction.

On September 12, 1934, seven United States Senators joined in a letter to the President stating that the special board of review appointed pursuant to the authority and direction of the President in response to the letter of March 2, 1934, from said Senators had completed its work and comunicated its findings to the President, urging the President to authorize the prompt initiation of the work if in his opinion the report of the board justified the project. The letter stated that the benefits of the project were national, affecting favorably the commerce of practically every State in the Nation; that it was the logical complement to all plans for development in the territory between the Alleghenies and the Rocky Mountains, including the Mississippi River development and the Tennessee Valley project; that by means of reasonable tolls it would pay all or the major part of the entire cost of operating charges and interest; that since it would pay for itself it would provide without cost to the Government the missing link across Florida in the inland waterway system from Boston to Mexico; that it would serve as an important element in the national defense for the quicker and safer transport of munitions and supplies as well as the passage of fighting craft; that a large part of the canal's cost would be expended in the industrial centers of the United States for materials and equipment of construction and would thereby stimulate the heavy and specialized industries in addition to furnishing large employment on the job; that the new business opportunities created by the construction of the canal would encourage the investment of private capital in large amounts over a long period of years, thereby aiding in the general recovery program; that the benefits of the canal to the Nation and its commerce would be perpetual; that for these reasons the financing of this project by the Federal Government was particularly appropriate; that such financing might properly include the crediting to the project of an amount equal to that which the Government would have to expend to construct the intracoastal canal link across Florida, an interest rate as low as the actual cost of the money to the Government, and a grant which the Public Works Administration is authorized by law to make for such projects. This letter was concurred in by Senator PAT HARRISON in his letter to the President of September 17, 1934. Senator Black, in a telegram to Senator Fletcher on September 19, 1934, also joined in the letter of September 12 to the President, thus making nine in all, and Senator Fletched so advised the President.

On September 15, 1934, the President requested his special board of review to examine the project further in respect to the matter of tolls. On the same date the board reported to the President that the canal probably could not be financed as a self-liquidating project by tolls collected from shipping.

On December 11, 1934, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors issued a notice of a public hearing on January 12, 1935, for consideration of the report of the second special board of Army engineers made on December 30, 1933.

On December 15, 1934, the Ship Canal Authority of Florida proposed to the President that (1) the Government through the War Department and with the joint cooperation of the Public Works Administration, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and the ship canal authority construct this sea-level ship canal at a cost of $143,000,000; that (2) upon completion of construction the ship canal authority would issue to the appropriate department of the Government either $80,000,000 of 2-percent 99-year bonds, or $60,000,000 of 3-percent 99-year bonds; that (3) the ship canal authority would give to the Government such rights as it might desire in the maintenance, operation, and regulation of the ship canal until the bonds were retired; and that then the ship canal authority would deed the canal to the United States. As an alternative to the above proposal the ship canal authority suggested that if the President desired to construct the project as a toll-free canal the ship canal authority would lend its assistance and (1) that under the act creating the Public Works Administration, the Chief of Engineers could recommend to the Administrator of Public Works an expenditure for this purpose up to an amount which he believed the project economically justified; and (2) that such additional funds as might be required be allotted by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration upon the basis of work relief to be provided by the project both in the State of Florida and in the industrial centers of the United States.

These proposals were transmitted on the same day by the President to the Administrator of Public Works for examination and action. It will be observed that these proposals were separate and distinct from the original ship canal authority application to the Public Works Administration on August 14, 1933. On December 15, 1934, this original application of the Ship Canal Authority still held the approval of the examining engineer of the Public Works Administration which it had received on October 19, 1933, and was still awaiting action by the Administrator.

On December 21, 1934, Maj. P. B. Fleming, Deputy Administrator of Public Works, addressed a memorandum to the Administrator of Public Works stating that the application of the Ship Canal Authority of Florida which had reached the Public Works Administration on August 14, 1933, had been disapproved by an independent board of engineers, meaning the President's special board of review, on the ground that it was not self-liquidating, and that he, Major Fleming, Deputy Administrator, concurred in the conclusion of that board and recommended that the original application of the Florida Ship Canal Authority be disapproved.

On January 2, 1935, Senator Fletcher, of Florida, requested the Chief of Engineers, Major General Markham, to postpone the public hearing set for January 12 on the report of the second special board of Army engineers made on December 30, 1933. On January 3, 1935, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors issued a notice to the effect that at the request of the proponents of the waterway across Florida the hearing on the waterway which had been scheduled for January 12, 1935, had been indefinitely postponed. Later General Pillsbury, chairman of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, stated that the hearings had been postponed until further data could be prepared and presented.

On January 3, 1935, Representative GREEN, of Florida, introduced a bill for a special commission to construct a ship canal across northern Florida, providing for an appropriation of certain funds with which to begin the work, and the issuance of 2¼ percent bonds by the Federal Treasury to defray the cost.

On January 29, 1935, the Administrator of the Public Works Administration disapproved the application of the Ship Canal Authority for a loan on the ground that the project in the form then before him was not self-liquidating.

On February 2, 1935, the Director of the Legal Division of the Public Works Administration signed a memorandum disapproving the alternative proposals of the Ship Canal Authority made to the President on December 15, 1934, and referred by him to the Public Works Administration on that day.

On April 8, 1935, the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 became law, and by its terms made possible the authorization and construction of river and harbor projects by the President.

On April 10, 1935, the Finance Division of the Public Works Administration disapproved the alternative proposals of the Ship Canal Authority made to the President on December 15, 1934, and referred by him to the Public Works Authority on that day.

On May 23, 1935, Senator Fletcher and General Summerall, president of the National Gulf-Atlantic Ship Canal Association, addressed separate letters to the Chief of Engineers, General Markham, asking if Government engineers had made a study of the effect of the proposed sea-level canal on the underground waters of Florida, and if so, to what conclusion they had come.

On May 25, 1935, Major General Markham replied to Senator Fletcher and General Summerall that Army engineers had found that a sea-level canal would be more advantageous than a lock canal, that any possible damage to agriculture beyond the right-of-way to be secured by the canal would be negligible, that any damage to water supply would consist only in lowering the level of nearby wells. That is all taken care of in the estimate for the project now before us—that is, the damages which will occur from that source.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to be sure that I understood the Senator's last statement. Did he say that all damages to water supply have now been taken care of?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not all damages; I said damages to nearby wells. General Markham testified that his estimates included amounts for that damage.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator means in the adjacent wells?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is not referring to the larger problem which may or may not exist?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all; just the damages to the nearby wells. That was the expression I quoted—damage from lowering the level of nearby wells.

On June 1, 1935, the Legislature of the State of Florida created the Florida Ship Canal Navigation District, the essential purpose of which was to authorize the counties included in the district to issue bonds for the purchase of the right-of-way for the proposed canal and for the dedication of same to the Federal Government without charge, the amount covered by this bond authority being a million and a half dollars.

On August 26, 1935, Mr. Harry Slattery, personal assistant to the Secretary of the Interior, addressed a communication to Representative J. HARDIN PETERSON, saying that Secretary Ickes had referred to him, Slattery, for reply, Mr. PETERSON's letter of August 22, in which Mr. PETERSON had requested a report on the views of the United States Geological Survey upon the possible effect on the water supplies of Florida of a canal connecting the Atlantic and Gulf across the northern part of the peninsula; that the United States Geological Survey reported that the proposed canal for 40 miles or more would be in effect a huge drainage ditch cut deeply into the Ocala limestone; that the Ocala limestone was in large part a soft, chalky limestone, containing many solution cavities and channels through which water circulates freely; that it is one of the principal sources of water supply in Florida; that its surface was pitted with sinkholes; that rain sank into it and joined the underground circulation; that large springs rose from it, and numerous wells derived their supplies from it; that Silver Springs, discharging about 500,000,000 gallons of water a day, approximately the amount of water used each day by New York City, were within a few miles of the proposed route; that Silver Springs were the largest springs in Florida; that they issued from the Ocala limestone about 40 feet above sea level; that Blue Spring, almost as large, was not far away; that a canal excavated 30 feet below sea level would cut into this porous, water-bearing limestone to a depth of about 70 feet below the present outlet of these springs; that unless the canal could be effectively sealed throughout many miles of its course, a procedure presenting difficulties that appeared to be practically insurmountable, it would inevitably drain enormous quantities of water from the limestone, would lower the water level in it, and might even divert the water that now rose in many of the springs; that the water that would thus be drained off now circulates underground to considerable distances and was the source of important municipal and domestic supplies; that after an unlined sea-level canal with the passage of time had drained down the fresh water now in the limestone, ocean water, particularly from the western end, would tend to enter the canal at high tide and seep into the limestone along the canal banks and thus contaminate its fresh waters; that with the loss of head of fresh water, due to the drainage from the upper part of the limestone along the zone of the canal, the salt water already present in the lower part of the limestone would have a tendency to rise and enter the wells; that, to summarize, there appeared to be no reasonable doubt that serious, adverse effects would be produced upon the important underground water supplies of the Ocala limestone in a wide zone extending outward from the canal line by the construction of the sea-level canal along route 13–B; that the particular danger discussed in this report applied to a sea-level canal only and not to a lock canal so constructed as to avoid deep cuts into the Ocala limestone and thus to leave undisturbed the present water level in this important water-bearing formation.

On August 30, 1935, the President of the United States wrote the Secretary of the Treasury stating that by virtue of the authority vested in him under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, approved April 8, 1935, it was requested that $5,000,000 be transferred from the appropriation made in that act to the War Department, Corps of Engineers, for the purpose of providing work relief and increased employment to carry on the project of a sea-level ship canal across Florida by way of St. Johns River from its mouth to Palatka, thence by way of the Oklawaha and Withlacoochee Rivers to the Gulf near Port Inglis, connecting the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico to provide a shorter and safer route for oceangoing vessels, saving from 1 to 2½ days and representing an annual saving in transportation costs estimated at seven and a half million dollars, including clearing right-of-way, housing, and excavation in central area, to give employment to those on relief rolls, work to be started immediately to absorb a large portion of the local relief load and also workers from transient camps and adjacent States.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I did not understand the Senator's statement as to the seven and a half million dollars of saving. What does it include?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is the saving on transportation rates and costs through the canal.

Mr. BRIDGES. Was the statement based on present conditions?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was based on conditions existing at that time, in 1935. It was based on the tonnage at that time, and the estimated cost at that time.

The President added that during the first 12 months the money included in the estimate for wages would amount to 73 percent of the total allotment for the first 12 months. The President then prescribed the expenditure of the $5,000,000 as follows: Clearing right-of-way, $500,000; housing, shops, storehouses, and minor structures, $500,000; excavation in central area, $3,500,000; bridge foundations, question.

On September 3, 1935, the Chief of Engineers established the Ocala district and designated Lt. Col. Brehon B. Somervell as district engineer with headquarters at Ocala.

On September 3, 1935, the Chief of Engineers issued orders to the district engineer of the Ocala district, Lt. Col. Brehon B. Somervell, to begin construction of the canal pursuant to the authorization issued by the President on August 30, 1935, and actual work on the project was begun on that day.

On October 22, 1935, in conformity with the conditions imposed by the Federal authority, the six counties comprising the Florida Ship Canal Navigation District, to wit, Duval, Clay, Putnam, Marion, Levy, and Citrus Counties, voted by a majority ratio of 27 to 1 a bond issue of one and a half million dollars for the purchase of all necessary land for right-of-way for the canal and for the dedication of such right-of-way to the Federal Government for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and operating a ship canal.

In his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, which he presented on October 31, 1935, the Chief of Engineers states that the then existing canal project was authorized by the President on August 30, 1935, under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Act approved April 8, 1935, that on that date the President had allotted $5,000,000 for the beginning of the project, and that $143,000,000 would be required to complete the project; that the project was for a sea-level ship canal across Florida by way of the St. Johns River from its mouth to Palatka, thence by way of the Oklawaha and Withlacoochee Rivers to the Gulf of Mexico, near Port Inglis, connecting the Atlantic Ocean with the Gulf of Mexico; that this canal was to be 30 feet deep below mean sea level, 400 feet wide from Jacksonville to Palatka, 250 feet wide from Palatka to the Gulf and from 500 to 1,000 feet wide in the Gulf channel, the total length from deep water to deep water to be 195 miles; that the project included all work of dredging, excavation, construction of bridges, and regulating or control work and all of the work necessary for the completion of the project.

On November 7, 1935, 72 Members of the Senate, the Governors of 36 States, and the heads of important national waterway associations addressed through Senator Fletcher a letter to the President expressing approval of his action in authorizing and beginning construction of the canal.

I give here the letter and the names of the signers:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 7, 1935.

HON. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The President, The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Today I have the privilege and pleasure of presenting to you on behalf of those whose names appear below a token of appreciation commemorating your action in authorizing and beginning the construction of the Florida Canal. This token is a shell from the coast of Florida, encased in gold, and containing a portion of the first earth excavated in the construction of the canal as a result of a blast set off by you at 1 o'clock on the afternoon of September 19, 1935.

I am sure you will be gratified to read the names of those who tender this memento to you. Here is no array of party or sectional interest. Every State in the Union is represented. All are joined on the common ground of patriotism to applaud this splendid undertaking in the service of our country.

This great waterway will be a new primary trade route favorably affecting the commerce of the entire Nation. In magnitude it is comparable only with the Panama Canal, which it surpasses in the amount of material to be excavated and in the commerce it will serve. With a construction cost not much more than one-third of that of the Panama Canal, the Florida Canal will transit annually nearly 50 percent more tonnage. With respect to the commerce it will bear, it will be the greatest artificial seaway in the world. Surveys conducted by the Federal Government show that approximately 1,500 ships making 11,000 voyages per year are now waiting to pass along this new route and that the direct benefits to these ships in time and money saved will constitute an unusually large return on the cost. This is in addition to the general and very real benefits to agriculture, industry, and commerce, which are estimated to be more than $30,000,000 per year.

The canal will make it no longer necessary for life and property to be subjected to the hazards which beset navigation in the longer and dangerous passage through the Straits of Florida. In time of war it will provide the vital necessity of a route for our commerce, protected from enemy attack, which would gravely menace shipping in the straits. It will afford a connecting link between the intracoastal waterway systems of the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico, and it will do more than any other one thing to promote and develop the economical interchange of agricultural and industrial products between the seaboard and interior sections of the United States.

Desired by Philip II, of Spain, when all known North America was under his dominion, advocated by President Jackson in the early days of our country, sought for many years by the agricultural and commercial interests of the Nation, approved by all appropriate agencies of the Federal Government, it has remained for you, Mr. President, with vision and courage, to launch this great undertaking, and by so doing to express the determination of our people to solve their material problems and evidence their faith in the future of our country.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely and respectfully,

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to turn for a moment to what the Senator stated about the number of Governors. He said there were 72 Senators.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Governors of 36 States.

Mr. BRIDGES. Just to get the record straight, what percentage of these 72 United States Senators and 36 Governors were members of the Democratic Party and what number were members of the Republican Party?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have made no effort to ascertain that percentage, because this is a nonpartisan, national proposition, into which party considerations do not enter.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree that perhaps that is the Senator's viewpoint, but I hope it will be a partisan proposition, and that the Republicans of this country will oppose it as a group, because I think it is absolutely unsound. It is one issue I should be very glad to see made a partisan issue, and that was my purpose in raising the question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am sorry the Senator has injected partisanship into the matter. He has a right to his opinion as to the unsoundness or unworthiness of the project, but I do not believe he is making a statement worthy of himself in his better moments when he attempts to place this on a partisan basis.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I join in the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that some of the Republicans should oppose this measure, because I think that would be of great help to the Democratic Party.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not desire the partisan issue to enter into the matter at all.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment again?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I do not base my opposition on partisan grounds, but I believe that the proposal to build the Florida ship canal is unsound, and my reason for asking the percentage of Republicans and Democrats among the Governors and Senators was because of the fact that I should like to see my party—and I happen to be a Republican, and have no apologies for that fact—oppose such an unsound measure, not as a partisan matter but to oppose it as an unsound measure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am trying to demonstrate to Republicans and Democrats alike, and to members of other parties and other persuasions, that it is a sound project, and, believing it to be a sound project, I am thoroughly in favor of it and am endeavoring to make the best showing I can for it.

On December 18, 1935, a special board of geologists and engineers which had been appointed by the district engineer at Ocala, Fla., to make a study of the effect of a sea-level canal on the underground water resources of the State of Florida submitted a report. This report stated, among other things, that, first, the canal would cross the peninsula of Florida where drainage systems from the north and south met and diverged to the east and west to the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico; that of the 195 miles of canal from deep water to deep water excavation along only 14 percent, or 27 miles, would have any appreciable effect on the level of the ground-water table; that the artesian reservoir would not be cut anywhere; that the ultimate effect of a sea-level canal on springs and lakes in the area contiguous to the canal could not be predicted with certainty at that time; that an analysis of the possible effects on those features was reserved until further extensive investigations then in progress had been completed; that studies already made led to the belief that should the lowering of the water table encroach upon such features of intrinsic value as Silver Springs and Blue Spring, regulatory works could be constructed which would minimize if not entirely obviate the damages; that the flow into the canal from these points of heavy discharge would have to be controlled in any event, and that, therefore, any expense incurred in the preservation would serve a double purpose; that the shallow farm wells adjacent to the canal right-of-way between Dunellon and Silver Springs would need to be deepened.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Referring to the damage which might come to certain springs to which the Senator has referred, because of correspondence which has been coming to me, and because of what certain citizens of the lower part of Florida have had to say, I am led to ask whether there is danger of affecting the whole water supply of some territory below the site of the canal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In my judgment, after very careful study of the situation, it will not affect southern Florida at all; and I shall submit further observations on that phase of the question.

The special board reported that the pursuit of agriculture and the growth of vegetation even in the area contiguous to the right-of-way where the ground water table would be lowered by the canal cut would not be affected—that the water supply of the city of Ocala would continue to be adequate—that the domestic water supplies of Jacksonville, Tampa, Orlando, Palm Beach, and Miami would be entirely unaffected by the canal cut.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. BRIDGES. On what does the Senator base that statement? Is that his opinion, or has he some technical advice that it would not affect those water supplies?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am giving the report of able geologists now. I have studied the report very carefully, and I base my conclusions on the studies of these geologists' opinions.

Mr. BRIDGES. By whom were these geologists hired?

Mr. SHEPPARD. By the local district engineer—who was placed in charge of the canal by the Chief of Engineers—in the course of a study which he was directed to make by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. BRIDGES. It is the Federal Geological Survey, then?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Federal Government authorized it. I think two civilian geologists were employed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am sure the Senator would want the Senator from New Hampshire fully informed at that point. The only United States geologists, as such, who have expressed themselves in respect to the project, are related to the United States Geological Survey, and they have warned that there is a grave element of danger involved; and they have not changed their minds. That is a correct statement, is it not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; except that these United States geologists stated they had made no specific, direct study of this situation, but based their opinion on their general knowledge of the geology of Florida. They added that there was no question that the canal would not have any effect on the southern part of Florida, in the vicinity of Miami, and that section.

Mr. VANDENBERG. So far as the argument over water is concerned I think General Markham summed it all up himself, and I think we could all agree that General Markham made a correct statement, when he said, "There will be some damage; the question is, How much?"

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have said that he did.

The special board selected by the district engineer, Colonel Somervell, reported further that the information before the board indicated that the quality and quantity of artesian water supply of the city of Sanford and vicinity would not be adversely affected, that salt water encroachment inward from the Gulf and Atlantic ends of the canal or by upward movement from the bottom of the fresh-water reservoir, underground, insofar as it might take place could not cause salted water to enter and thereby contaminate the main body of the readjusted ground-water reservoir against the fresh-water discharge into the canal.

On January 6, 1936, Senator VANDENBERG introduced a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Commerce (S. Res. 210, 74th Cong., 2d sess.). That resolution provided that the Senate Commerce Committee, or any subcommittee thereof, be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate as promptly as possible respecting the Florida ship canal to determine the following facts: (1) The nature and extent of expenditures to be made from emergency relief funds and subsequent expenditures for construction and maintenance to be made from regular funds; (2) the sufficiency of plans and information to determine whether the canal should be a sea-level or lock canal and whether it should be 30 or 35 feet in depth; (3) the sufficiency of authentic information to determine whether the canal would contaminate the ground water supply of adjacent areas; (4) the nature and extent of available traffic to warrant the ultimate expenditure of between $140,000,000 and $200,000,000 upon the project; that in pursuit of this inquiry the Commerce Committee be instructed to study and report its conclusions upon the advisability of continuing this project or starting any other project for the establishment of waterways without an enabling act of Congress. Senator Copeland, chairman of the Commerce Committee, appointed a subcommittee consisting of himself as chairman and of Senators Fletcher and VANDENBERG to consider the resolution.

On January 14, 1936, the House Appropriations Committee in making up appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, had before it the following items recommended by the Chief of Engineers and approved by the Director of the Budget, to wit, projects authorized by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, for which additional funds were required for continuation as follows: Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal of Florida, $12,000,000; Sardis Reservoir, Miss., $2,500,000; Conchas Dam, N. Mex., $3,500,000; Bluestone Reservoir, W. Va., $2,000,000; and Passamaquoddy tidal power project, Maine, $9,000,000. General Markham stated before this committee that the report on the survey—meaning the survey of the canal as a river and harbor project authorized in 1927—was still before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and had not yet been submitted to Congress. General Pillsbury, chairman of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, stated before the Appropriations Committee that the report on this survey was then before this Board, and that upon request of Members of Congress from Florida the Board had adjourned the hearing on the proposition until interested parties should have further opportunity to assemble data in support of it.

On February 10, 1936, the House Appropriations Committee, to which had been submitted the above items, namely, Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal, Sardis Reservoir, Conchas Dam, Bluestone Reservoir, and Passamaquoddy tidal power project, omitted these items from the bill it introduced on that date, the nonmilitary War Department appropriation bill, carrying appropriations for authorized river and harbor projects for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and the bill passed the House with these items omitted.

On February 13, 1936, Senator Fletcher addressed a letter to Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, stating that in reference to the letter of Mr. Slattery of August 26, 1935, in which Mr. Slattery referred to an opinion of the United States Geological Survey to the effect that the construction of a sea-level canal across Florida might seriously damage the underground water supply of the State, the impression seemed to have obtained in the minds of some people that the Geological Survey made a special survey and investigation of this specific question and had issued a report of its findings—that, so far as he, Senator Fletcher, was able to determine from an examination of the records of the United States Geological Survey, no such specific survey was ever made by the United States Geological Survey, nor was any final or formal report made by it on this question; that the opinion referred to in Mr. Slattery's letter to Mr. Peterson was preliminary and informal and based upon general data on the geology and water supply of Florida theretofore collected, and could not be considered as a final or formal report of the United States Geological Survey. Senator Fletcher added that it was his understanding that the Geological Survey had made available to the War Department its applicable data on this subject, published and unpublished, and asked the Secretary of the Interior to advise him if his, Senator Fletcher's, understanding of the matter was correct.

On February 18, 1936, Secretary Ickes replied to Senator Fletcher, stating that the United States Geological Survey's information on the geology and underground waters of the peninsula of Florida was based on a series of studies made independently, or in cooperation with the Florida State Geological Survey, over a period of a quarter of a century; that it was entirely true that the Geological Survey had not specifically studied the particular question of the possible effects upon ground-water conditions of the trans-Florida canal; that it was equally true, of course, that detailed studies of the geology of the State and of the relation of ground waters to the geology throughout the State could not fail to give a broad perspective on the whole problem which afforded a sound basis for at least certain general conclusions about the effects of any proposed alteration of natural conditions; that the quotation of the Geological Survey's opinion in Mr. Slattery's letter to Mr. Peterson had that basis, and that basis only; that it was also entirely true that the Geological Survey had made freely available to the War Department all of the information it had bearing upon the problems for the solution of which the War Department was responsible; that this information included a manuscript on the artesian water in the Florida Peninsula, as yet unpublished; that it was also clear from a reading of the Preliminary Report on the Geological and Ground Water Conditions in Florida in Their Relation to the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal, issued by the War Department on December 18, 1935, that, in the preparation of that report, extensive use had been made of that manuscript and of earlier reports by the United States Geological Survey and the Florida State Geological Survey; that the understanding of the United States Geological Survey's relation to this problem set forth in Senator Fletcher's letter of February 13 was substantially correct, except that it, perhaps, did not take full cognizance of the broad background of experience with ground-water problems and of knowledge of conditions in Florida that underlay the informal survey opinion presented in Mr. Slattery's letter.

On January 17, 1936, Senator VANDENBERG's resolution (S. Res. 210) was considered by the subcommittee consisting of Senators Copeland, Fletcher, and Vandenberg. General Markham testified, as did Secretary Ickes. Secretary Ickes stated that the canal project then under way, the project to which $5,000,000 had been allotted, was not a W. P. A. project but a War Department project; that the Public Works Administration had determined that the project before it for a loan for a toll canal would not be self-liquidating under the provisions and regulations governing such projects before the Public Works Administration; that the Public Works Administration never considered the project from the standpoint of a toll-free Federal river and harbor project, because such a project was outside the jurisdiction of the Public Works Administration; that the Public Works Administration had considered it from the standpoint of a self-liquidating proposition and from that standpoint had disapproved it. It should be noted here that while the War Department was in charge of the expenditure of the sum of $5,000,000 allotted by the President on the canal project authorized by him under the Emergency Relief Act of 1935, the Army engineers were still considering the project as a river and harbor project and had come to no conclusion.

Hearings were also held by this subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce on February 4 and 19, 1936, on Senator VANDENBERG'S resolution (S. Res. 210).

On March 4 and 5, 1936, the subcommittee on War Department appropriation bills of the Senate Appropriations Committee held hearings on the five relief fund projects, including the Florida ship canal, which had been omitted from the nonmilitary War Department appropriation bill as it passed the House. This subcommittee and the entire Senate Committee on Appropriations adopted three of these relief items, rejecting two—the Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal basin project—and reported the War Department nonmilitary appropriation bill to the Senate with these last two items omitted.

On March 16, 1936, Senator Fletcher offered an amendment to this bill on the floor of the Senate, adding to it the Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal power project. After extended debate, Senator Fletcher's amendment was defeated by four votes.

Senators will remember with what pathetic energy Senator Fletcher pressed the canal project when it was evident he had only a short time to live. In fact, the physical efforts he put forth in presenting the measure to the Senate practically cost him his life.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator believe that the Florida ship canal should be foisted on the State of Florida, as well as the Nation, if a substantial number of the people in the southern part of Florida are bitterly opposed to it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In my judgment, those who are opposed to it are not on solid ground.

Mr. BRIDGES. I admit that they probably will not be on solid ground after the canal is put through.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Even the United States geologists, to whom the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] referred, said that Miami would not be affected. There is no serious question about Miami being affected unfavorably at all.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator think the country as a whole is for the Florida ship canal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think if it is not it will be when it understands the matter. I think it is a question of the merits of the project.

Mr. BRIDGES. Do I understand the Senator's argument to be that he is primarily for the canal because he thinks it will mean a saving in shipping, or does he think it is a great public-works project, or what is the primary consideration?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am in favor of it on both grounds. It shortens the distance of one of the greatest shipping routes in the world; it shortens the distance between the Gulf ports and the Atlantic seaboard and Europe by 24 hours and by 300 to 350 nautical miles, and competent authorities estimate that it means a saving of about 15 cents or more per ton. It will also be of tremendous aid to national defense, in my judgment.

Mr. BRIDGES. In what way?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am coming to that later.

Mr. BRIDGES. Very well.

Mr. SHEPPARD. On March 18, 1936, Senator TRUMAN entered a motion to reconsider this vote.

On March 23 this motion to reconsider was defeated by one vote.

I see Senators about me who will recall those events very vividly.

On April 16, 1936, the Chief of Engineers ordered the creation of a third special board of Army engineers to review the Florida canal project and make a report which would be available for the Chief of Engineers and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for the purpose of making his report to Congress. That report has not as yet been made.

On May 7, 1936, efforts were made to include in a deficiency appropriation bill in the House the item of $12,000,000 recommended by the Budget for the Florida ship canal, under the Emergency Relief Act of 1935, but the item was not included. No further effort, therefore, was made to continue the canal under the authority of the Relief Act of 1935.

On May 12, 1936, Senator Robinson introduced a joint resolution providing for boards to study and report upon the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal project and the Passamaquoddy tidal power project, and so forth. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce on that day, and on that same day reported favorably to the Senate.

On May 29, 1936, Senator Robinson offered as an amendment to the first deficiency appropriation bill for 1936 the joint resolution he had introduced on May 12. That part of Senator Robinson's amendment relating to the Florida ship canal was agreed to, his amendment having been divided on a point of order. That part of his amendment relating to Passamaquoddy was rejected. On June 1, 1936, Senator Hastings moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate had, on May 30, adopted that part of the Robinson amendment relative to the Florida ship canal. Senator Robinson moved to table Senator Hastings' motion, and the motion to table prevailed by a vote of 35 to 32. However, the Robinson amendment relating to the Florida ship canal was eliminated from the first deficiency appropriation bill for 1936 in the conference on that bill between the two Houses.

It will be interesting to note how that $5,000,000 was expended in beginning the construction of the Florida ship canal. A splendid beginning was made through the expenditure of that money.

Mr. BRIDGES. Is the Senator going to describe just how it was spent?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

The Chief of Engineers, in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, stated in reference to the existing ship-canal project—that is, the relief project—authorized on August 30, 1935, under the Emergency Relief Act of 1935, and for which the President had allotted $5,000,000 and an additional sum of $400,000 later, that clearing operations by Government plant and hired labor had been carried on over the right-of-way, commencing October 1, 1935, and were discontinued on June 19, 1936; that clearing operations consisted in clearing 1,749 acres of spoil areas and clearing and grubbing 2,178 acres additional, at a total cost of $314,-597.73; that buildings for the district office headquarters were constructed September 7 to November 10, 1935, by Government plant and hired labor, at a cost of $500,000, and consisted of 4 office buildings, 78 residences, 2 dormitories, a mess hall, necessary storehouses, garages, shops, and minor buildings and camp facilities; that excavation of overburden—"overburden," as I understand, means dirt above the rock—by Government plant and hired labor had been started October 1, 1935, and discontinued February 29, 1936; that work on 8 contracts for excavation of overburden had been started about November 1, 1935; that 4 of those contracts were finished and work on the others was about 88 percent complete; that a total of 12,601,728 cubic yards had been removed at a cost of $3,007,482.74; that necessary surveys and subsurface borings had been carried on by hired labor at a cost of $140,109.95; that general sanitation work and mosquito control by hired labor had cost $12,971.09; that plans and designs of dredging units by hired labor had cost $8,423.88; that extensive ground-water investigations and observations had been carried on by hired labor at a cost of $42,032.41; that foundations for the highway bridge at Santos started by contract on January 8, 1936, would be completed about August 20, 1936; that total costs of these had been $111,411.30; that surveys, borings, studies, and design had been carried on at various bridge sites by hired labor at a cost of $48,528.81; that on June 30, 1936, approximately 32 percent of the total estimated clearing had been completed; that construction on the reservation for the district offices at Camp Roosevelt was about 46 percent complete; that plans had been prepared for area offices and contemplated shops and yards; that general surveys were 40 percent complete; that about 20 percent of the dry-earth excavation had been completed; that foundations for the highway bridge at Santos were about 67 percent complete, and plans and specifications for the superstructure were 80 percent complete; that borings and surveys for 2 railroad bridge sites at Santos and 1 highway bridge site at Dunellon were practically complete; that the work completed was about 3 percent of the entire project; that operations were discontinued shortly after the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, as Congress had not appropriated any funds for their continuation; that the cost to that date had been $4,326,707.39 for new work, and that the expenditures to that date had been $4,535,867.91, all from emergency funds.

No project was ever more carefully studied nor had a greater amount of engineering talent expended upon its consideration than this one.

On November 1, 1936, the third special board of Army engineer officers appointed by the Chief of Engineers on April 16, 1936, for the proposed reviewing of all previous reports and for making such further studies as might appear requisite or desirable, submitted its report.

That also was not a final report. It was the report of a board appointed by the Chief of Engineers to aid him in reaching his final conclusion.

The report was to the effect:

First. That the route discussed in the various previous reports as route 13–B was the most practical and economical route for either a ship or a barge canal.

That is the route in the pending bill.

Second. That a ship canal along this route should be constructed entirely as a sea-level canal, while a barge canal along the route should conform to the plans for a barge canal proposed by the second special board of engineers in its report of December 30, 1933.

Third. That the most practical and economic dimensions for a ship canal along the proposed route are those providing a depth of 33 feet, providing for bottom widths of 400 to 1,000 feet in the Gulf of Mexico, 400 feet from the Atlantic Ocean to Palatka, and 250 feet in land cuts.

Fourth. That highway bridges should be high-level, fixed structures of 135 feet vertical clearance above mean high water.

Fifth. That the United States should provide at cost the necessary pilotage service between the St. Johns Bar and the Gulf of Mexico.

Sixth. That the cost of construction of the ship canal based on the then present-day unit prices and excluding the costs to be borne by local interests would be approximately $162,985,000, of which $5,400,000 had been expended, and that annual maintenance and operation charges would be approximately $650,000 exclusive of cost of pilotage.

Seventh. That the probable traffic after the development period would be 90 percent of the potential traffic—that is, 90 percent of the entire traffic going through the Florida Straits.

Eighth. That the average saving of time per transit would be approximately 22 hours.

Ninth. That material collateral damages to agriculture, forestry, or water supply are not anticipated to result from the construction of a sea-level canal.

Tenth. That the benefits to the general public which might be expected from a sea-level canal having the dimensions and facilities herein recommended are fully commensurate with the expenditures involved—a clear endorsement of the project.

Eleventh. That in view of the foregoing this board recommended: (a) The completion, at an estimated cost of $157,585,000, in addition to $5,400,000 already expended, of a sea-level canal to provide for minimum depths of 33 feet at mean low water and as otherwise set forth in this report, subject to such minor changes in design and route as might be prescribed by the Chief of Engineers, and on the condition that local interests should furnish free of cost to the United States all necessary rights-of-way and other lands for construction and maintenance of the canal, should agree to relieve the United States from all claims for damages that might arise out of the construction of the canal, should provide appropriate terminal and transfer facilities, and should accept the obligation of constructing all future additional highway bridges and of maintaining and operating highway crossings; (b) that the United States should provide the necessary pilotage at cost; (c) that allotment of funds at a rate of not less than $25,000,000 per annum for the economical, advantageous prosecution of the work should be provided; and (d) that an average annual expenditure by the United States of $650,000 for the maintenance and operation of the canal, exclusive of cost of pilotage, should be made.

This report was submitted to the Chief of Engineers and to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and by them taken under consideration.

On February 24, 1937, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, having reviewed the report of the third special board of engineers of April 16, 1936, made on November 1, 1936, and all other previous reports, submitted its report to the Chief of Engineers. This is the authority next to the Chief of Engineers.

This report was to the effect:

First. That a ship canal of adequate dimensions across the Florida peninsula would shorten the route for the large traffic between the ports on the Gulf and the ports on the Atlantic seaboard of the United States and Europe by somewhat less than 1 day's steaming time.

Second. That to pass this large traffic with reasonable convenience and safety such a canal should have a depth of 35 feet, increased to 36 feet in the rock sections, and increased to 37 feet at the Atlantic and Gulf entrances, and a minimum width of 400 feet in the land cuts and of 600 feet in the open waters.

Third. That inconvenience and delay both to the ships transiting the canal and to the heavy passenger and freight traffic on the main rail lines extending south from Jacksonville could be eliminated only by the construction of a high-level rail crossing over the canal at that locality.

Fourth. That the estimated expenditure at present cost of labor and material—that is, in February 1937—for the construction of a sea-level canal of these dimensions, including the high-level rail crossing, would be $263,838,000.

Fifth. That in view of the undeterminable possibility that the excavation of a sea-level canal might open underground channels in the Ocala limestone of such size and extent as to drain a wide area, with consequent extensive damage to ground-water supplies, any authorization for the construction of the canal should empower the Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, to modify the plans to provide for the construction of a lock canal if at any time during the progress of the work such modification should be found warranted in the interest of protecting the ground-water supply.

Sixth. That the added cost of such a modification could not be definitely estimated in advance of the determination of the elevation at which it might be necessary to maintain the summit level.

Seventh. That construction of a canal should be contingent upon the fulfillment by local interests of their present agreement to furnish without cost to the United States the rights-of-way, exclusive of the cost of construction, of bridges as particularly set forth in the plans of the board of April 16, 1936, and upon the assumption of the maintenance, operation, and future reconstruction of all highway bridges without cost to the United States.

Eighth. That the responsibility for the indirect damage which might result from an impairment of the water supplies was beyond the financial resources of any organized taxing district and appeared to be beyond the constitutional powers of the State.

Ninth. That the Federal Government must face the onus of meeting claims for such damages.

Tenth. That since the principal purpose to be gained by the construction of such a canal lay in its benefit to through traffic, there was no occasion for a requirement that suitable terminals be constructed thereon by local interests.

Eleventh. That the reasonably assured present and prospective benefits from a canal across Florida did not establish the economic justification for the large expenditures necessary for its construction.

That was the opinion of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and it was submitted to the Chief of Engineers for his consideration in making up his final official report to Congress.

On April 1, 1937, the Chief of Engineers, having reviewed all previous reports, including the report of the third special board of engineers of April 16, 1936, made on November 1, 1936, and also including the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors of February 24, 1937, submitted his report to the Secretary of War, who, on April 3, 1937, submitted that report of the Chief of Engineers to the Congress of the United States.

That report is the report on which the bill is based—a favorable report by the final reviewing authority of the Army engineers who deal with river and harbor improvements.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at this point?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand the Senator's recital, General Markham on his own responsibility vetoed the adverse report of seven members of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. Is that correct?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; and he had a right to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He did it on his official responsibility. It cannot be said that he did it on his personal responsibility.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not say anything about his personal responsibility.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understood the Senator so to say.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not mean to. What I am trying to establish is that the vote among eight engineers is 7 to 1 against the canal.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, but the board which had previously acted, the third special board, was for it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am talking about the official Board of Engineers of the War Department.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; but the Senator said that General Markham overruled one board. When he did that he sustained another.

That report was favorable to the construction of a canal defined therein and was to the effect, first, that the commerce through the ports of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico increased from 38,600,000 tons in 1920 to 83,500,000 tons in 1935, principally because of the growth in the shipments of petroleum products from the great oil fields of the adjacent territory, such shipments of petroleum products in 1935 aggregating nearly 70 percent of the total.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to carry out a little further a suggestion which comes to me from the question asked by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. As I understand, the final report, upon which the Senator says the bill is based, was made by General Markham. In making that report, as suggested by the Senator from Michigan, General Markham reversed the report of one board of engineers.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, there was another board of engineers, which made a favorable report.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. So the Senator was technically correct, at least, when he said that General Markham overruled one board, and by that operation sustained the conclusions of another. I should like to have clearly in mind the set-up of the two boards, the report of one of which he approved, and the report of the other he reversed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator mean the names of the engineers composing them?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the Senator give a general idea of what those two boards consisted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They consisted of Army engineers.

Mr. NORRIS. Were they of the same grade?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator mean the same rank?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I cannot say as to that, for Army officers have different ranks according to the time they enter the service.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not mean that. I mean was the report of one of those boards superior to the report of another?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. They were all equal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No report was final.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the board whose conclusions General Markham reversed, itself, in its report reversed another board?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It did.

Mr. NORRIS. So that, as I get the picture, it is in the nature of a court. The lower court, consisting of a board, approved the project; the next court, a step higher, like our court of appeals, reversed that decision, and then General Markham, like the Supreme Court, reversed that decision and sustained the original report. So, it seems to me, that the boards that passed on the question were not of equal authority, because, as I understand, the first board that considered the project sustained it; it went up on appeal, as it were, from that board to another one, and the second board reversed it; it went still further up on appeal to General Markham, the supreme court, and he sustained the decision of the first board and reversed the decision of the intermediate board, as it might be called. Is that correct?

Mr. SHEPPARD. General Markham's decision was the final one and he made it after considering the reports of all boards.

In a general way that seems to be correct except that no report was final.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that. I am thinking of it as being somewhat like a lawsuit in a Federal court. Suit is brought first in the district court, and the district court makes a decision; that decision is reversed on appeal by the circuit court of appeals, and that decision is itself reversed by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Someone has to appeal a lawsuit. An appeal is not taken in the case of boards of this kind.

Mr. NORRIS. That is a technical difference, of course.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If an appeal is not taken from a decision of a lower court, that decision becomes final; but in these river and harbor proceedings that is not the case.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to know whether the two boards were equal. In the case of a lawsuit, with which I have been trying to compare the proceedings of the Army boards, the court of appeals is of a higher grade than the district court, and the Supreme Court is still higher than the court of appeals. Does that same line of procedure apply to these boards?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think the analogy is entirely accurate as it relates to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator from Michigan, in the time of the Senator from Texas, what his idea is about those boards?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think perhaps the analogy for which the Senator from Nebraska is striving would be a little closer if the advisory board were compared to a referee appointed by a court for a report and findings of fact. The advisory board was a special group created solely for the purpose of making an inquiry into this particular situation. It reported upon its conception of what would be an acceptable canal project. The regular standard Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers received that report and filed adverse findings based upon a somewhat different conception of the canal, for there are different widths and depths involved in the various plans. Then came General Markham, who overruled the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers, which is his regular standard force of advisers, and recommended a totally different canal than the one which the Board had rejected. In other words, the Board had, for instance, considered a 600-foot-wide canal, while General Markham said 400 feet would be sufficient. The official board said the canal should be 35 feet deep, whereas General Markham said 33 feet would be sufficient. The standard board said it would cost two-hundred-and-forty-odd million dollars, while General Markham said it would cost only $198,000,000. General Markham found that his set of facts justified his conclusion that the canal would be an economically justified project.

So there is something of an analogy similar to that which the Senator had in mind, although it is impossible to draw it accurately, because each one of these three authorities is talking about a different kind of project in detail.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I say to the Senator from Nebraska that two other special boards were convened while this subject was being considered during the years, and each time the board considered the subject the traffic had continued to increase enormously.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator means the traffic going around the Florida Peninsula?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; around the Straits of Florida. That traffic had continued to increase tremendously, and it has increased tremendously since General Markham's report in 1937.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. ANDREWS. Along the line of the question asked by the Senator from Michigan, is it not a fact that subsequent events with regard to the increase in tonnage have, in fact, borne out most of the recommendations and conclusions of General Markham.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I agree with the Senator. I should like to give here a statement of that tonnage during the last 18 years which will throw some light on the tremendous importance and significance of this shipping route.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not desire to interrupt the Senator controversially, but I should like to keep the record straight as we go along. The Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] asked if events have not borne out all General Markham's figures and calculations, and I understood the Senator from Texas to give his assent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think they have; in fact, General Markham so testified this year.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to refer to General Markham's estimates of cost. He estimated the cost of excavation first at ten and a fraction cents per cubic yard, which, of course, was for work to be under contract, but when he actually spent $5,000,000 in excavation it cost him 20 cents a cubic yard. He was only 100 percent wrong in his calculations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Except that in his excavation work he was using relief labor, which is much more expensive than skilled labor. The present estimate for the canal is based on regular skilled labor and the use of the latest and most powerful machinery.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; except that the President's letter, under which the project is revived, contemplates using it as a relief project, and so it will be necessary to go back to the 100 percent expansion in estimates of cost.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the bill before us is not a relief project except to the extent that it will give employment to a large amount of labor. The project embodied in this bill is a regular river and harbor project, contemplating the use of the latest machinery and regular skilled and unskilled labor. It is not on the basis of what we call relief labor at all, as I understand.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wonder if the Senator is fully justified in that statement, because it would make a great deal of difference if he is justified?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly it would, and I am coming to that in a few moments; I am going to discuss it later.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me that there is nothing in the bill which prohibits the construction of the canal precisely as the President said he wanted it built, and he said he did not care if it took 15 years, and he wanted it primarily as a relief project.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I differ from the Senator, and I shall endeavor to give the reasons for my position when I have concluded my statement as to tonnage going through the straits from 1920 to 1938.

In 1920 40,000,000 tons—and I give merely the round numbers—in 1921, 47,000,000 tons; in 1922, 45,000,000 tons. For the purpose of comparison, I will say that the tonnage that goes through the Panama Canal is 36,000,000; and through the Suez Canal it is still less; and they are the two greatest canals in the world up to this time.

In 1924 the tonnage passing around the Florida Straits was 55,000,000; in 1925, 68,000,000; in 1928, 71,000,000; in 1927, 73,000,000; in 1928, 77,000,000; in 1929, 77,000,000; in 1930, 72,000,000; in 1931, 70,000,000; in 1932, 76,000,000; in 1933, 80,000,000; in 1934, 84,000,000; in 1935, 91,000,000; in 1936, 111,000,000; in 1937, 138,000,000. There was an average increase per year for the 18-year period of 5,417,000 tons. Army engineers and the Department of Commerce compute approximately 66 percent of the total annual tonnage would move through the proposed ship canal.

General Markham's report further was to the effect—

(2) That shipping plying between the Gulf ports and ports of the Atlantic seaboard or of Europe passes around the southern end of the Florida Peninsula through the straits of Florida;

(3) That a canal across the upper part of the State of Florida would provide a route between the Gulf and the Atlantic seaboard from 300 to 350 nautical miles shorter than the present route around its southern end;

(4) That the cross-Florida canal project differs from many others in that there can be but little doubt as to the tonnage it would carry; that the traffic of the Gulf ports is not speculative; that "it exists and doubtless will expand";

(5) That the various boards reporting on the waterway were in substantial agreement on the amount of the commerce that the waterway would carry if constructed; that differences related only to the question whether the benefits to this commerce justified the cost;

(6) That the answer to this question rested on a number of factors, such as the cost of excavating operations in soft rock on an unprecedented scale as determined by the probable output of extremely powerful hydraulic dredges in this material after it had been blasted, the speed which can be realized by vessels in the transit through the canal, the necessary width and depths of the channel, and the annual cost of maintenance after completion;

(7) That the determination of each of these questions rested on personal judgment and had led to different conclusions as to whether or not the construction of the canal would be a good investment of Federal funds;

(8) That he, the Chief of Engineers, did not share the apprehension expressed in the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors as to the possible adverse effect on ground-water supplies, because he was of the opinion that a sea-level canal would not to any consequential or vitiative degree influence the ground-water levels of the State, or result in serious intrusion of salt water;

(9) That the success of the canal depended upon its safe and expeditious transit by Gulf-Atlantic shipping; that if the canal did not offer that advantage the potential economies would not be realized;

(10) That he concurred with the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors that the canal should have a least width of 400 feet, but that he regarded a minimum depth of 33 feet, as proposed by the third special board of April 16, 1936—that is, the board acting immediately prior to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors—to be adequate; that the canal should be flared and deepened at the Atlantic and Gulf ends;

(11) That an interest rate of 3 percent to fairly represent the cost of Federal money during the construction period and 3½ percent thereafter should be charged; that the amortization charge set up by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors should be omitted because there was no apparent reason for amortizing a sea-level cut of adequate width and depth that would provide a navigation route in perpetuity;

(12) That a personal examination of the cores from borings on the line of the land cuts and personal inspections of quarries then in operation in the Ocala limestone had convinced him that not only were the estimates of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for the excavation of that material unduly conservative but that the estimates of the third special board of April 16, 1936, for that part of the work were ample;

(13) That he, the Chief of Engineers, had had computations made of the total cost of the canal and the annual charges and benefits—that such computations showed that at prices then current the canal could be built at a cost to the United States of $197,921,000 and to local interest of $3,000,000, with annual maintenance and operation at $1,090,000; that these computations showed that the annual fixed charges and maintenance and operation expenses against the United States would amount to $8,641,000 and against local interests to $274,000;

(14) That the annual benefits to shipping then in being would be $8,741,000;

(15) That these figures indicated definitely that the canal would not in any sense be a bad investment;

(16) That the great development in the Gulf States in recent years is certain to continue for many years to come, with a considerable though necessarily, indeterminable expansion of general commerce between the Gulf and Atlantic seaboards; that while the oil movement might approximately stabilize in the next several decades he, the Chief of Engineers, believed a sustained and substantial increase in the general commercial use of the canal was a safe anticipation;

(17) That it appeared likely that for a period of years it might be advisable to finance public works with the dual purpose of constructing useful facilities and of employing those who otherwise would require relief;

(18) That this canal would provide a shorter route for commerce that would be valuable to a large portion of the United States and at the same time furnish employment to many people during its construction;

(19) That if the amount to be expended for labor, in whole or in substantial part, were deducted from the capital investment, the canal would show a handsome profit to shipping;

(20) That in view of the foregoing considerations a canal of the basic dimensions stated, to wit, 400 by 33 feet, is worthy of favorable consideration as a combination of unemployment relief and navigation improvement;

(21) That he, the Chief of Engineers, therefore recommended the construction of a canal following route No. 13–B, having minimum depth of 33 feet, increased to 34 feet for the outer 8.5 miles to the Gulf approach channel; 400 feet in minimum bottom width from the Atlantic Ocean to a point in the Gulf 4.5 miles from shore, thence 500 feet for 5.4 miles, 730 feet for 7 miles, and 1,000 feet to deep water 8.5 miles; and the protection of the approach channel in the Gulf by jetties, one on the south side extending 17 miles from shore and one on the north side extending 4.5 miles from shore, subject to the conditions that local interests furnish, free of cost to the United States, all necessary rights-of-way and other lands for construction and maintenance of the canal and accept obligation of maintaining and operating the bridges started as a part of the relief project, and of building, maintaining, and operating any further necessary highway crossings;

(22) That to meet the estimated construction cost to the United States—to wit, $197,921,000—provision should be made for accomplishment of the work in a period of about 6 years; that beyond such a period interest and other charges would increase capital costs by about $3,000,000 per year.

On April 5, 1937, Representative GREEN, of Florida, introduced a bill, H. R. 6150, for the completion of the construction of Florida ship canal in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, General Markham, as above summarized. As soon as the report of the Chief of Engineers was received by Congress, Representative GREEN introduced a bill to carry it out.

On June 8, 1937, the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors made a favorable report on H. R. 6150, there being a majority and minority report.

No legislative action occurred during 1938, the last year of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

On January 16, 1939, soon after the opening of the Seventy-sixth Congress, President Roosevelt wrote Senator JOSIAH W. BAILEY, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, asking that this committee give renewed attention to two subjects—the Florida ship canal and the development of tidal power in Passamaquoddy Bay. He stated that surveys had been completed and a good deal of work had been done on the Florida ship canal; that it had long been his belief that a Florida ship canal would be built one of these days, and that it was justified by commercial and military needs; that it was his thought that the Government should continue its construction, but should take its time in doing this, using, as far as possible, relief labor, especially in periods when there is a good deal of unemployment. The President stated further that he would not personally object to a construction period lasting as long as 10 or 15 years; that the canal would, according to the engineers, receive in tolls enough revenue to pay for its upkeep, and over a period of years to amortize its cost, though it was doubtful that these revenues would take care of accumulated interest charges; that, in other words, the Government would get its money back without interest.

Inasmuch as the question of tidal power in Passamaquoddy Bay is not now before us, I shall not quote the portion of the President's letter relating thereto.

On January 19, legislative day of January 17, 1939, Senator VANDENBERG introduced Senate Resolution 63, to the effect that whereas the Department of the Interior reported on August 26, 1935, the opinion of the United States Geological Survey that "there appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects will be produced upon the important underground water supplies of the Ocala limestone in a wide zone extending outward from the canal line by the construction of a sea-level—Florida—canal," and that whereas the United States Geological Survey asserted on December 15, 1936, that it "knows no facts that require modification of the opinions it has heretofore expressed about the probable effects on ground-water levels in Florida" of the construction of such a canal, and that whereas this phase of the Florida ship canal problem is of deep concern to many citizens and of primary interest to the Congress in connection with any further study of this project, that, therefore, be it resolved that the Secretary of the Interior be requested to report to the Senate at its earliest convenience the present opinion of the United States Geological Survey regarding the probable effect of the construction of the Florida canal, as reprojected, upon ground-water levels and ground-water supplies in any affected area.

On January 19—legislative day of January 17—1939, Senator VANDENBERG introduced Senate Resolution 64 to the effect that whereas the Department of Commerce made an exhaustive and voluminous report upon the proposed Florida ship canal in 1934 and found that "the consensus of opinion of that part of the shipping industry with which contact has been established appears to be that the probable cost of building the projected waterway is not justified through any benefits which might thereby accrue to the cargo or the vessel," and that whereas the Congress is again asked to consider this project, that therefore be it resolved that the Department of Commerce is requested to survey its previous findings respecting the Florida ship canal and bring them down to date and to report thereon to the Senate at its earliest convenience.

On January 25, 1939, Senator JOSIAH W. BAILEY, chairman, Senate Commerce Committee, wrote the Secretary of War for a brief historical sketch and information on present status of Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal projects.

On February 1, 1939, I introduced the bill now before us, S. 1100, authorizing completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, Major General Markham, to Congress through the Secretary of War on April 3, 1937, contained in House Document No. 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session. This bill also called for an examination of the question of tolls and a report thereon prior to completion of the project.

On February 9, 1939, Senator VANDENBERG's resolutions, Senate Resolution 63 and Senate Resolution 64, passed the Senate with the whereases stricken out.

On February 13, 1934, Hon. E. K. Burlew, Acting Secretary of the Interior, acknowledged for the Secretary of the Interior receipt of a communication from the Secretary of the Senate, Hon. Edwin A. Halsey, requesting a report on Senator VANDENBERG's resolution, Senate Resolution 63, and stated that a report would be submitted at the earliest possible date.

On February 14 the Secretary of War replied to the request of January 25, 1935, by Senator BAILEY, submitting the history and present status of the Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal project desired by Senator BAILEY.

On February 21, 1939, Acting Secretary of Commerce Hon. R. C. Patterson, Jr., wrote Hon. Edwin A. Halsey, Secretary of the Senate, in response to Senate Resolution No. 64, by Senator VANDENBERG, requesting the Department of Commerce to survey its previous findings respecting the Florida ship canal and bring them down to date and report to the Senate at its earliest convenience, stating that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, which prepared the original report, had reviewed this study in the light of recent developments and transmitted with this letter from Mr. Patterson to Mr. Halsey the results of this further study for the use of the Senate.

Mr. Patterson stated further in this letter that the Bureau's recent study showed that according to the annual statistical report of the Chief of Engineers for 1937 the volume of commerce of Gulf coast ports had increased nearly 100 percent over 1931, the year on which the data for the original study were based; that the original study of the Bureau was based on a 200-foot lock canal, whereas the present proposal of the Chief of Engineers recommends a sea-level canal with a minimum bottom width of 400 feet; that these changes increased greatly the economy of the project.

I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that some of the studies of the boards of engineers preceding this decision by the Chief of Engineers, General Markham, were based on the idea of a lock canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not expect the Senator to do so now, but before he concludes I should be glad to have him discuss the question of sea-level canals and lock canals, as it applies to the particular location involved. I do not see any necessity for a lock canal there, although there may be some good reason for it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The distinction between lock and sea-level canals appears a number of times in the course of my remarks.

Mr. Patterson added that in his present proposal the Chief of Engineers had placed the construction cost at $197,921,000, with annual charges for interest at 3½ percent, annual maintenance, operation, and depreciation at $8,641,000; that on the basis of the potential 1937 use and benefits of the project there would thus be a net annual surplus of $6,293,000; that it appeared reasonably certain that this annual surplus would be substantially greater by the time the canal could be completed and would continue to increase thereafter; that the magnitude of these savings undoubtedly justified the cost of the project and emphasized the desirability of construction.

The statement of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce referred to by Mr. Patterson and transmitted to the Senate by him was:

First. That at the request of the Chief of Engineers, War Department, an economic survey of this project was made by the Bureau and reported under date of February 1, 1934.

Second. That in that report the Bureau determined the factors involved in a computation of the savings which would result from the construction of a lock-type ship canal, with a minimum bottom width of 200 feet along route 13–B, the route of the canal recommended in the report of the Chief of Engineers, Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, on April 1, 1937, and developed those factors by a thorough examination of all data available on the basis of the year 1931.

Third. That for a canal of the location, type, and dimensions stated, and on the basis of the Atlantic-Gulf commerce of 1931, the essential findings of the Bureau were: (a) A ship canal across Florida is practical from a navigation standpoint; (b) there would have been available for transiting such a canal in 1931 a minimum commerce of approximately 44,556,000 short-tons of cargo; (c) the minimum savings on each average short ton of this cargo would have been 13.8 cents; (d) the total direct savings that would have thus accrued to this commerce in 1931 had all of it utilized the waterways were $6,137,000—that this was exclusive of benefits to local commerce and indirect benefits.

Fourth. That the translation of these findings into figures substantially applicable to the latest available data, 1937, and present conditions is, for all practical purposes, a comparatively simple operation if we may assume that the formula for the 1934 study is substantially the same today; that the essential factors which apparently have undergone substantial change since 1931 are the type and dimensions proposed for the canal, and the volume of Gulf commerce; that the Chief of Engineers has recommended to Congress a sea-level canal with a minimum bottom width of 400 feet, instead of a 200-foot lock canal upon which the Bureau's former report was based; that the volume of commerce of the ports for the Gulf coast has increased approximately 100 percent since 1931, the year used as a basis for the original study.

Fifth. That the changes in type and dimensions of the canal, especially the doubling of the width of the minimum section—now 400 feet—reduce by at least 1.55 hours the transit time and thereby increase by approximately 7.2 percent the savings per ton of cargo passing through, increasing the Bureau's former finding of 13.8 cents per average ton of cargo to 14.8 cents.

Sixth. That the increased minimum width of the canal—400 feet—now proposed would increase the general use of this improvement by vessels provided (a) that the waterway be available for ship movement on a 24-hour basis; (b) that all expenses, if any, incident to transit represent only a reasonable proportion of the resulting savings to ships utilizing the waterway.

Seventh. That studies by the Chief of Engineers—House Document 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session—indicate that the Florida ship canal will result in economies favorably affecting commerce in areas comprising approximately 45 percent of the land area of the United States and 74 percent of the population.

Eighth. That on the basis of the detailed study for 1931 and an analysis for 1935 by the Chief of Engineers and his annual statistical report for 1937 the commerce which would have been available for transiting this canal during 1937 had it been in operation is estimated to be 91,212,000 tons, as compared with 44,556,000 short tons in 1931; that this growth of commerce of Gulf ports has been continuing at varying rates for a long period with occasional years of recession; that while the future rate of growth cannot be predicted with accuracy, it will probably continue in some degree for an indefinite time.

Ninth. That the minimum total direct savings to through commerce which could have transited the canal in 1937 is therefore 14.8 cents multiplied by 91,212,000, or $13,499,000; that to this amount should be added the savings to local commerce; that this item had been determined by the third special board of engineers of April 16, 1936, as $1,435,000 for 1935; that this may be taken as a reasonable figure for 1937; that the total direct savings which might have been effected by the canal had it been open to traffic in 1937 may therefore be placed at $14,934,000; that in addition to these direct savings there would have been indirect general benefits which cannot be accurately reduced to dollars and cents.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator inform the Senate whether the time saved passing through the canal is based on a lock canal or sea-level canal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. On sea-level canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Manifestly more time would be saved in going through a sea-level canal than a lock canal. I suppose there is no dispute about that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is very true. The chief value of the lock canal is to protect the ground-water situation in the event is was found to involve danger. The lock canal would be erected at a higher elevation and therefore would not affect the underground water in the vicinity.

Mr. NORRIS. Where would the water be obtained with which to supply the canal? If the canal were a lock canal, above sea level, no water could be obtained either from the Atlantic Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico. Is the supply of water in Florida high enough so all the water necessary for the canal could be obtained?

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is a tremendous fresh water supply on both sides of the canal. I shall ask the Senator from Florida to answer that question further.

Mr. ANDREWS. There is sufficient water to supply a lock canal with all the water that is necessary. There flow out of Silver Springs alone 500,000,000 gallons of water per day. That would not be the only flow of water into the canal, whether it were a lock canal or a sea-level canal. There is another spring a little farther west which flows 400,000,000 gallons of water. The fact that these springs would flow into the canal, even a sea-level canal, would make it absolutely impossible for any salt water or any water except the purest kind of water to get into the ground and in any way injure the water supply.

Mr. NORRIS. In case the canal were a lock canal, the supply of water coming from the springs must be high enough so as to reach the highest point in the canal.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

Mr. ANDREWS. In addition to that, the Withlacoochee, which is a large river, and also the Oklawaha, another large river, run into it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. On February 25, 1939, Hon. Harry Slattery, Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitted to Hon. Edwin A. Halsey, Secretary of the Senate, the response of the Secretary of the Interior to Senate Resolution Numbered 63, by Senator VANDENBERG, and stated in that response that the problem of the effect of the Florida ship canal as reprojected, on ground-water levels and ground-water supplies in any affected area, had not changed since the cessation of construction in 1937 by the Corps of Engineers under allocations from emergency funds, nor since the hearings in April 1937 on H. R. 6150, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives following the preparation and submission to that committee of the reports that had been published as House Document No. 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

That no new evidence had appeared since the opinion of the United States Geological Survey on the effect of a sea-level canal on ground-water levels and ground-water supplies was expressed directly by Survey representatives at the hearings before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors and in letters responding to inquiries from Members of the Congress and others that were placed in the records of the hearings; that the opinions thus expressed were based on a quarter century of general studies of the geology and ground waters of the State of Florida and the United States; that in the absence of new evidence, or of altered plans for the canal, there was no basis for a modification of the opinions thus expressed.

That to again summarize the Survey's attitude in direct response to Senate Resolution Numbered 63 the Survey had the following to say:

(A) That a sea-level canal along route 13–B would cut the Ocala limestone for more than 40 miles from the Gulf of Mexico nearly to the Oklawaha River; that this limestone is one of the principal sources of water supply in Florida; that it is the source of most of the large springs in the State; that it is in large part a soft, chalky, porous limestone, which contains numerous cavities and channels, through which water circulates freely, as is abundantly shown by the exceptionally large yield of wells and springs that derive their water from it; that such water-bearing openings are penetrated by wells not only near the surface but also at depths of several hundred feet;

(B) That for a stretch of about 30 miles along route 13–B the water level in wells now stands at 40 to 50 feet above sea level; that along this stretch the canal would be in effect a huge drainage ditch which would be cut to a minimum depth of 33 feet below sea level, or to about 70 feel below the present ground-water level; that with the cutting of the canal the ground-water level immediately adjacent to it would inevitably drain down approximately to sea level—that is, to about 40 feet below its present position; that this lowering necessarily would spread indefinite distances outward from the canal, thus depressing the ground-water level in the limestone over a wide zone; that the width of the zone in which the lowering of ground-water levels would take place could not be predicted with any certainly, but that it might well be several tens of miles on either side of the canal;

(C) That Silver Springs, which is only about 3 miles from the route of the canal and issues from the limestone at about 40 feet above sea level, is without doubt well within the area in which the ground-water level would be materially lowered; that along the Oklawaha River the Ocala limestone is not at the surface, but the canal would cut through relatively impervious overlying beds that now confine artesian water in the limestone and would permit the escape of some of this water, thus adversely affecting the artesian pressure in the area to the east and southeast; that with the lowering of the ground-water level and the reduction of artesian pressure encroachment of salt water, which is already present at moderate depths in parts of the Ocala limestone, might contaminate the fresh water in some localities;

(D) That, as has been repeatedly stated by the United States Geological Survey, the construction of the canal will not affect the water supplies in the southern part of the State, as at Miami and Palm Beach, or in the northern part of the State, as at Jacksonville;

(E) That on the basis of studies that had been made of the geologic and hydrologic conditions in Florida the United States Geological Survey found itself in substantial agreement with the conclusions expressed in paragraph 28 of the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors (H. Doc. 194, 75th Cong., 1st sess., p. 17), where it is given in substance;

(F) That the conditions discussed in this report of the United States Geological Survey, transmitted by Mr. Slattery, apply to a sea-level canal and not to a lock canal, so constructed as not greatly to disturb the present ground-water levels.

On February 25, 1939, Senator CLAUDE PEPPER addressed a letter to Dr. W. C. Mendenhall, Director of United States Geological Survey, stating he—Senator PEPPER—had noted the reply of the Acting Secretary of the Interior to Senate Resolution 63, by Senator VANDENBERG, requesting the present opinion of the United States Geological Survey regarding the probable effect of the construction of the Florida canal, as reprojected upon the ground-water levels and ground-water supplies in any affected area.

Senator PEPPER in this letter stated further that because Senate Resolution 63 inquired only of the opinion of the Geological Survey upon ground-water levels and ground water—that is, underground water as geologists used those terms—it was only natural that the reply of the Acting Secretary of the Interior of February 25 to Senate Resolution 63 did not refer to the probable effect of the construction of the Florida canal is reprojected upon the water supplies which nourish vegetation—that is, the rain water which is the source of the surface water which feeds vegetation, both natural and cultivated, growing from the surface of the soil.

Senator PEPPER said further in this letter that what he was interested in and what the people of Florida were interested in was to know whether (1) the agriculture and horticulture which was then being carried on in Florida was nourished by water supplies derived from rainfall or from the underground water referred to in the letter of February 25 of the Acting Secretary of the Interior in response to Senate Resolution 63; (2) whether the people engaged in agriculture and horticulture in Florida, after the construction of the Florida ship canal as reprojected, could continue to carry on that agriculture and horticulture without harm from the construction of the canal; (3) that he—Senator PEPPER—had noted from the reply of the Acting Secretary of the Interior that the injury might extend several tens of miles, and that he—Senator PEPPER—would like to know how many miles, in Dr. Mendenhall's opinion, on each side of the canal the water level—that is, the underground water supply—which had nothing to do with vegetation would be lowered; (4) that, in Senator PEPPER's exact words:

> I ask you these questions because most of us are not interested in the theory of geology. We want to know as practical farmers, growers, and citizens of Florida whether there is any substantial reason in geology why this canal should not be built. I will appreciate your cooperation in trying to get this controversy down to a practical basis and giving me your considered answer at earliest convenience.

On February 28, 1939, Dr. W. C. Mendenhall, Director of the United States Geological Survey, wrote Senator PEPPER that he had received Senator PEPPER's letter of February 25 inviting attention to the fact that the Acting Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Harry Slattery, in responding to Senate Resolution 63, reported only on the anticipated effect of the cutting of the Florida ship canal as reprojected on the ground waters of the State.

Dr. Mendenhall stated further in this letter that Senator PEPPER had recognized with entire fairness that, since Senate Resolution 63 called only for "the present opinion of the United States Geological Survey regarding probable effect of construction of the Florida canal as reprojected upon ground-water levels and ground-water supplies in any affected area," an appropriate response to it would deal only with ground waters; that since the staff of the United States Geological Survey included no experts in agriculture or horticulture, it could not appropriately report on conditions affecting these activities in Florida, except perhaps as they might be related to the underground water supply; that in this connection he—Dr. Mendenhall—referred Senator PEPPER to the report of a special board appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture at the request of the Secretary of War, given in substance on page 147 of House Document No. 194, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session.

Continuing this letter Dr. Mendenhall quoted the three questions propounded by Senator PEPPER in his letter to Dr. Mendenhall of February 25, 1929.

Replying to Senator PEPPER's question No. 1, Dr. Mendenhall stated that House Document 194, page 147, reported that in 1934, out of somewhat more than 2,000,000 acres of cropland in Florida, 63,000 acres were irrigated from wells, and that in the remainder of the cropland, except such part of it as might be naturally subirrigated, because the ground water table was close to the surface, agriculture depended on direct rainfall for its water supply. Dr. Mendenhall further stated in reply to question No. 1 that it was his understanding that the precipitation within the State averaged about 52 inches annually, the greater part of this precipitation falling during the summer months, and added that neither horticulture nor agriculture, insofar as it depended upon direct rainfall for its water supply, could be in any wise affected by the building of the canal.

Replying to Senator PEPPER's question No. 2, Dr. Mendenhall stated that he could see no reason why those people who are engaged in agriculture and horticulture in the State, insofar as this agriculture and horticulture did not depend upon irrigation nor subirrigation from ground waters, should not continue to carry on their activities just as well after as before the construction of the canal—and that he repeated that none of the natural vegetation of the State and none of the cultivated crops that were independent of irrigation or of the maintenance of existing levels of water in the ground could conceivably be affected by the canal.

Replying to Senator PEPPER's question No. 3, Dr. Mendenhall stated that various estimates had been made as to the distance outward from the banks of the canal that the lowering of ground water levels, which all agreed would take place immediately adjacent to those banks, would extend; that some of the advisors of the Corps of Engineers had indicated that the lowering of ground-water levels might extend 10 or 15 miles; that the United States Geological Survey students of the problem were inclined to think that these effects might extend as much as 50 or 60 miles; that it was not possible by theory alone to resolve these differences satisfactorily.

Dr. Mendenhall added that the canal, however, crossed a low area in the north central part of the State; that its route was over land lower than that north and south of it; that along a stretch of the canal about 30 miles in length, near the middle of the peninsula, ground-water drainage was toward it from both directions; that it was within a zone immediately adjacent to the canal that the most marked lowering of ground-water levels, amounting to about 40 feet was to be expected; that it was within this zone, variously estimated as extending from 10 to 50 or 60 miles outward from the canal, that the natural levels at which ground waters now stood would be reviewed; that he could conceive of no possible effects that the cutting of the canal would have on the water levels in the southern part of the peninsula.

Dr. Mendenhall said further in this letter to Senator PEPPER that the canal could have no conceivable effect upon rainfall and therefore none of the activities of man in the State depending directly on local rainfall could be affected by it; that, as the United States Geological Survey had repeatedly stated, the activities in the southern part of the State, whether dependent on local rainfall or upon waters derived from underground sources would be unaffected; that the chief effect would be in the vicinity of the canal; that the effect would be the lowering of the water table by about 40 feet and by the extension of this lowering to indeterminate distances north and south of the canal with possible related effects upon the quality of the waters within the affected zone.

On February 24, 1939, Senator JOSIAH W. BAILEY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, referred to the Secretary of the Navy Senate bill 1100 and asked the Secretary to let the Committee on Commerce have his general views on the value of the canal and specifically the Secretary's views as to the necessity of the canal as a national defense measure.

On March 9, 1939, Hon. Charles Edison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, replied to Senator BAILEY's letter to the Secretary of the Navy of February 24 to the effect that by shortening the distance and providing an additional route for sea-going vessels between the Atlantic ocean and the Gulf of Mexico, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would be of definite value during war in the shipment of necessary materials for both military and commercial use, as well as for the passage of naval vessels if sufficient draft were provided; that the improvements of the St. Johns River contemplated under the plans for the construction of the canal would contribute materially to the use of this location for the operation of naval seaplanes.

On April 26, 1939, the House bill (H. R. 3223) for the completion of the canal after hearings covering several days was reported favorably to the House from the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, there being a majority and a minority report.

The United States Geological Survey adhered to its original opinion. It also stated that it was agreed that the southern part of Florida in the vicinity of Miami would not be affected in any event. All agreed on that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator in his time that he is making the fairest kind of a statement regarding the historical background of this controversy, and I congratulate him and thank him for the way he is doing it. We may disagree in our conclusions, but the Senator is making a splendid historical presentation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I thank the Senator.

On April 27, 1939, the Senate bill (S. 1100) for the completion of the canal, that is the bill I have introduced, after hearings covering a number of days, was reported to the Senate from the Senate Committee on Commerce without recommendation.

Returning to the bill (S. 1100) it should be said that after authorizing the completion of the canal it requests the President while construction of the proposed canal is in progress to examine the question of tolls on vessels using the canal and to report thereon to Congress before completion of construction.

General Markham recommends this project both as a relief and a navigation measure. He recommends a definite limit of cost provided the construction is accomplished within a period of 6 years. There is no question, therefore, as to what the Senate is voting upon.

The President's letter to Senator BAILEY stating that he believes the Government should continue the construction of the canal, but should take its time, using, as far as possible, relief labor, especially in periods when there is a good deal of unemployment, and that he would not personally object to a construction period lasting as long as 10 or 15 years, if carried out to the limited extent possible under the terms of the official report before us. The employment made possible under the amount and the time specified in the report is relief for labor to that degree.

That is, labor will be helped insofar as labor can be employed during the 6 years in the event we adopt that figure, $197,000,000. I do not think there can be any question as to that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator point out to me what there is in the bill which thus specifically confines the expense to the Markham estimate and the time limit to the Markham period of 6 years?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill specifically adopts the project defined in his report.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But suppose the President should direct that relief labor shall be used and a longer period of time covered, what is there to prevent the construction of the canal under his subsequent instructions of that character?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think he would have the legal authority to do so. If he wanted that done, he would have to ask Congress for further authorization. That is my judgment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator means that the bill is not responsive to the President's recommendation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly; that is what I have said.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That it is not responsive?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That it is not, except to the extent that it will give employment to regular skilled labor for 6 years and probably, of course, some common labor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am afraid I cannot agree with the Senator's conclusion on that point.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Are we not assuming there something which is not always borne out, when we say that relief labor is so much more expensive than other labor? I have it on the best of authority that in some counties in Florida the Government and the sponsors, whether a municipality or a county, have gotten a dollar's worth for every dollar that has been spent through relief labor. Possibly it is due to the men who have supervision of it, from the head man on down through to the immediate superiors. But they have performed well in several counties in my State, and, in my judgment, have delivered service, dollar for dollar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, on that point, so we may keep the record straight, I wish to say that General Markham himself testified that this estimate of time must be increased 25 percent minimum if relief labor is used. There can be no argument about that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He so testified.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And he also testified that if relief labor was used it would cost 100 percent more than the estimate he made. There can be no question about that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He said that his report contemplated a project to cost $197,000,000, to be completed in 6 years, and that regular skilled and unskilled labor was to be employed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether my opinion on the matter would be of any value, but since the question has been raised, it seems to me perfectly plain that the Senator from Texas is correct when he says that the pending bill provides specifically for carrying out the project as recommended in a specific document by the Chief of Engineers, which would mean that it must be, if possible, carried out in accordance with the terms of that document, which means the building of a canal in 6 years. I do not think there can be any doubt about that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad to note what the Senator says.

Mr. NORRIS. The project would be undertaken under an act of Congress. I assume that so far as they can, they would attempt to carry out the act of Congress, because it would be the relief law under which they were acting.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The act of Congress controls.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What would happen at the end of 6 years if the canal were half complete and the money were all gone?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That would be a matter, then, for Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Such things often happen, and that may happen.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is perfectly true. I do not see how it can be governed by fiat.

Mr. NORRIS. The act of Congress would provide for building the canal and completing it in 6 years, at such and such a cost. If it could not be done it could not be done.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have very competent opinion to the effect that it can be completed within that time—opinion of the character on which we have heretofore relied in connection with all such matters.

Mr. NORRIS. Congress knows, when it is acting, that it is acting on an estimate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And everybody knows that an estimate is not likely to be mathematically correct.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Besides, many conditions may change, so that it would either be cheaper or more expensive.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very true.

Mr. NORRIS. Those are conditions over which Congress would have no control.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Gulf coast ocean-borne tonnage utilizing Gulf ports originates in a vast portion of the interior of the United States, including the South, much of the Southwest, much of the West, much of the Mississippi Valley, and parts of the Central States.

In connection with the apparent reluctance on the part of shipping interests to use the canal it is of interest to observe that although no ship operator appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives in favor of the Cape Cod Canal, almost all ship operators now use it. Objection was made originally by ship operators to the use of the Livingstone Channel in the Detroit River. Now a hundred million tons of commerce go through it without hazard.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was advised today that the Cape Cod Canal has been one of the most collossal failures in the history of public works. The Senator's information seems to be quite different.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It certainly is.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I regret to say that I do not agree with the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan. On the contrary, the increase in shipping through the Cape Cod Canal has been very remarkable. I think I put in the RECORD last year or the year before a study of the increase in the use of the canal. It was a complete failure while it was in the hands of private ownership. To that extent the statement of the Senator from Michigan is correct. However, since the Government took over the canal and has widened it, it has become a very useful and very helpful means of transportation between Boston and New York.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator know whether or not the figures regarding the cost of operation have fallen within the contemplated estimates?

Mr. WALSH. I regret to say that I can give no figures on the financial side of the question.

I look upon these canals as public highways. In that respect I am somewhat in accord with the views of the Senator. A canal should be open to the public and should be used by ships in the same way that highways are used by automobiles. When dangers of navigation can be eliminated and shortening of routes of travel can be accomplished through a canal, it is desirable and important to build such a canal.

There is an element in the case of the Cape Cod Canal to which the Senator did not refer, and that is the great danger which navigators experienced in going around Cape Cod. With the construction of the Cape Cod Canal that danger was very largely removed. So there was not only a shortening of the route but also a removal of very serious danger in connection with navigating along that part of the coast of New England.

I wish to emphasize the fact that the use of the canal has grown beyond my expectations, and the expansion of travel through it has continued. I suggest to the Senators from Florida that the figures are available, and I think they would be surprised to see the extent of use of the canal.

I come back to what I previously said: Originally, the canal was poorly constructed. It was poorly managed, and operated by private interests. It now has all the benefits and advantages of management and control by Army engineers, and it has become a very valuable and useful waterway.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt to make a comment on the Florida ship canal?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to let go unnoticed the statement of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I am delighted that his statement will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I hope all the conservative newspapers in the United States will publish it in full, because it is really a remarkable statement and discloses the very remarkable fact that a canal built by private interests was a colossal failure, as the Senator says. It was unloaded on the Government, and under Government operation and management it has become a wonderful success.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. What is the situation in the case of the Cape Cod Canal in reference to the collection of tolls since the Government has taken over the canal?

Mr. WALSH. That is a very important item to which I should have referred. There is no toll collection at all. Under private management there were toll collections, and of course that fact had a deterrent effect on the use of the canal by vessels passing north and south through the canal.

Mr. BURKE. In giving publicity to the statement made by the Senator as to the failure under private management, when tolls had to be collected to pay for the investment which was made, I think attention should be called to the fact that when the canal was taken over and supported by the Government as a part of the public highway system of the country, with the expense borne out of the Public Treasury a very different situation existed.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is correct.

I ought to add to what the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has said that, in my opinion, the original construction of the canal by private interests contemplated a future sale to the Government at a profit.

Mr. NORRIS. That sale took place, did it not?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Government paid much more than the canal was worth.

Mr. WALSH. I think it is only fair to say that the sale to the Government was to the advantage of the Government and resulted in a substantial loss to the bondholders and investors. I am certain that the Government did not pay an extravagant price. However, the canal had depreciated to such a low standard——

Mr. NORRIS. Very low.

Mr. WALSH. It had depreciated to such a low standard that almost any price was a high price for it, in the condition in which it was.

Mr. NORRIS. Under the private ownership and control of financial geniuses, the canal was a financial failure. It is now a success under Government ownership. As the Senator says, it was probably built by men who wanted to unload it and who expected later to unload it on the Government. As is the case in many instances when men are moved entirely by the great feeling of private initiative, the builders of the canal did not build it properly. It was a very poorly constructed canal. The first thing the Government did when it took over the canal was to enlarge it and improve it and put it in shape, so that it is now worth something, and is a source of pride to Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. It is certainly a very useful and valuable sea highway at the present time.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. What is the depth and width of the Cape Cod Canal?

Mr. WALSH. It has been doubled in width during the past 2 years.

Mr. ANDREWS. Can seagoing vessels go through it? Is it 33 feet deep?

Mr. WALSH. No. I doubt if the larger naval vessels could go through it. I have never heard of their going through. Passenger boats of rather substantial size, such as those which ply nightly between New York and Boston, go through the canal. However, I do not think the canal is large enough for cruisers and battleships.

Mr. ANDREWS. The ships which use it go through with safety?

Mr. WALSH. They go through without any danger whatever, especially since the Government has made valuable additions, improvements, and expansions to the waterway, and is still making them.

Mr. ANDREWS. The canal affords ships the opportunity of going safely through a peaceful canal instead of going around the cape.

Mr. WALSH. It is certainly very much safer, because the trip around the cape was always dangerous, and very many sad disasters and wrecks have occurred. That danger now is entirely removed.

Mr. ANDREWS. How many miles are saved by the use of the canal?

Mr. WALSH. I have been through it frequently. I go through it virtually every summer. It is 7 miles long from land to land and 11 miles long from entrance to entrance, with a depth of 25 feet.

Mr. ANDREWS. How many miles does it save?

Mr. WALSH. It saves at least 140 miles.

Mr. ANDREWS. Would not the same situation apply to the Florida Canal? In other words, in the event of a hurricane around Puerto Rico and the Florida coral reefs, where many ships have gone on the rocks, would not the Florida canal afford a safe passage?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I firmly believe that all inland waterways are beneficial to seagoing travel, and I assume that the Florida ship canal would be beneficial in the respects the Senator has mentioned. Before the debate is over I hope the extent to which vessels move up and down the Atlantic coast and could move through the canal will be disclosed, as well as the kind of vessels which could use the canal, and the extent to which they could use it.

Mr. ANDREWS. I think those facts will be shown.

Mr. WALSH. I also hope the Senators from Florida will be able to remove some of the many objections which Senators have received from the residents of Florida and other sections of the country.

Mr. ANDREWS. I think we shall be able to do that.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The same contention about shipper nonuse was made in connection with the Panama Canal. Representative J. J. MANSFIELD, of Texas, chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, said the original decision of shipping interests not to navigate the Houston Ship Channel has broken down; that 67 ship lines now use that channel, and that it carried annually about 23,000,000 tons of freight. General Markham stated that shipowners originally opposed also the Beaumont Channel, the Sabine-Neches Channel, and the Port Arthur Canal, stating they would not use them, but that these waterways are now being used most extensively. He said that there is nothing unusual about shipowners or ship captains saying they will not use a proposed channel; that it is the customary thing to anticipate; but that a ship will go anywhere it can gain a profit, unless the captain should find something in the situation that counterweighs that profit; and that he, General Markham, could find nothing in the Florida project that counterweighs that profit.

In the proposed canal the speed would be 7 knots in the rock section and 10.6 knots in the open waters. For a ship to go around the peninsula in the same time that a 10.6-knot ship goes through the canal it would need to go at the rate of 20 knots. It would need to go twice as far as and twice as fast, and this would be economically out of the question on account of increased fuel expense.

The canal will put the Mississippi Valley, its tributary territory, and the Gulf coast 24 hours closer to eastern markets.

The Mississippi Valley Association approved the construction of the canal at a meeting of that association attended by delegates from 20 States in the valley. The sentiment was expressed that anything that would shorten the distance by water from the Mississippi Valley to the New England States by approximately 350 miles is worth while. The National Rivers and Harbors Congress approved the project at its recent meeting in Washington.

The canal will make possible a reduction of transportation charges to shippers and consumers. It will lower such charges to the farmers and the fruit growers of Florida. The production of lumber, naval stores, cotton, tobacco, and bacon also will be benefited.

The United States uses 9,000,000 tons of sulfuric acid, 71 percent of which is made from Texas sulfur. The four largest sulfur-consuming States are New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware. All that sulfur would come through the canal. About 500,000 tons are at present shipped abroad.

The canal will be a new route for the coastwise and foreign commerce of the United States, particularly the coastwise commerce between the Atlantic seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico. It will bring closer together the Mississippi Valley, the Atlantic coast, and the Gulf. Its benefits will inevitably flow to the public, as have the benefits of other similar great projects that have been instituted in the past. Those benefits will come through rate economies to agriculture, industry, trade, and commerce.

Col. Brehon Somervell testified that winds and storms would not be a substantial hazard in navigating the canal; that the intensity and frequency of storms in the canal area are small compared with those in the Florida Straits. It is his opinion that the canal would be practically free from the tropical storms of the Florida Straits.

General Markham regards the navigation of the canal as of much greater simplicity than navigation in exposed waters where blinking buoys must be depended upon. With a canal adequately lighted by night and regulated by an effective signal system by day, hazard will be reduced to a minimum. General Markham's report is based upon the condition that the canal will be continuously navigated by night as well as day.

On the relation of the canal to natural defense, Major General Markham stated that some battleships would be able to go through the canal if they were lightened. He stated that he regarded the canal as of greater value than merely for the passage of battleships or heavy cruisers; that the lifeblood of the Navy is fuel; and that it is of military value for tankers to avoid the straits route, which in time of war would be the area of trouble.

General Markham stated that he regards the canal as of tremendous benefit and value as a national defense facility, even if nothing should go through it except oil, naval stores, and materials for the consumption of the Army, and the defense benefits and advantages to the Navy. It is his opinion that these two things combined make out a very strong case for the value of the canal in national defense. It is General Markham's opinion that a war involving combat in the Atlantic would be in the Caribbean, under which circumstances, if oil, naval stores, and all other things of military or naval value were to be sent around Key West, they would go through the field of combat, with all the hazards that would mean. The alternative, he said, would be this second route, which he thinks can be decently guarded.

Admiral Frederic B. Bassett, United States Navy, retired, stated before the Senate Committee on Commerce that if the estimated tonnage through the canal were 91,000,000 tons a year during time of peace, it would be very much greater during time of war. The largest part of our raw materials, he said, comes by way of the Gulf of Mexico, and that among such raw materials is sulfur, the source of sulfuric acid and smokeless powder. Admiral Bassett said that national defense is largely dependent upon transportation; that everything except battleships and airplane carriers could go through the canal. It was General Markham's opinion, as I have stated, that battleships, when they were lightened, could go through the canal. Admiral Bassett stated that about 1,300 vessels of all classes, from tugboats up to heavy cruisers, could use the canal.

Admiral Bassett stated it as his belief that the Florida canal is necessary for national defense and for commercial use to and from the Panama Canal from either Gulf or eastern Atlantic ports; that in time of war, vessels would rather go from the Florida canal to the Panama Canal than through the dangerous Windward Passage on the east end of Cuba; and that it would be much easier to protect the narrower entrance of a canal than to protect 135 miles of water in the straits.

We have already the statement of Hon. Charles Edison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, that it is the opinion of the Navy Department that by shortening the distance and providing an additional route for seagoing vessels between the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would be of definite value during war in the shipment of necessary material for both military and commercial use, as well as for the passage of naval vessels, if sufficient draft is provided; that the improvements of the St. Johns River, contemplated under the plans for the construction of the canal, would contribute materially to the use of this location for the operation of naval seaplanes.

The House Committee on Rivers and Harbors again favorably reported the Florida ship canal bill at the present session of Congress, there being, as was the case in the last session, majority and minority reports. On the question of national defense the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in its favorable report of April 26, 1939, on H. R. 3223, a bill for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida stated that, notwithstanding the abundant economic justification of this canal, its military value in emergency will transcend its commercial value, that in the event of war, with the theater of operations on either the Atlantic or the Pacific coast, transportation problems of the Nation would involve the transport of immense quantities of troops, munitions, raw materials, and supplies from the region between the Alleghenies and the Rockies to either or both coasts, the experience in this regard of our World War participation demonstrated that peacetime facilities and equipment of the railroads cannot adequately meet such a demand. The report stated that the committee had evidence presented to it which demonstrated conclusively that as a protected route for the movement of troops, munitions, and supplies between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic seaboard, and as a safe alternate route to the Panama Canal, compared with the potentially hazardous route via the Windward Passage, ordinarily used, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would serve as a major element of national defense in time of war. The committee report stated further that whatever may have been true in the past, there is no longer any room for doubt that the present and future key to the ultimate defense of the United States is the body of water comprised in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea. The committee stated further that our military policy is based upon the defense of our own territory, that the success of that policy pivots upon our ability to prevent serious curtailment of the water-borne traffic now moving through the Panama Canal and the Straits of Florida, that the eastern defense of the Panama Canal depends almost entirely on the ability of the Navy to close the Atlantic entrances to the Gulf and the Caribbean Sea; that with the closing of these, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal would become a logical military necessity. It was asserted by the committee that the idea that naval engagements in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean are not contemplated, and therefore that this canal would not transit fighting craft, could only be the result of an incomplete understanding of the situation and the military purposes which the canal would serve; that its primary function, in the event of war, would be to afford a safe route for troops, munitions, supplies, and raw materials between the ports of the Gulf of Mexico and our eastern seaboard, and between the latter and the Pacific Coast States via the Panama Canal; that in the face of determined enemy oppositions, the maintenance of this flow via the existing channels, that is, the Straits of Florida and the Windward Passage, would be possible only at a cost in ships and men which would dwarf into insignificance the cost of the canal.

The committee said, further, that it should be remembered that all of the very numerous islands lying immediately south and east of Florida are foreign possessions; that the strategic location of these is such that, should they be in enemy hands, they would serve as bases for submarine and air attack on our shipping in the Straits of Florida, which would practically close that route; that in such an event the absence of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal might prove pivotal. The committee also stated that the Army and Navy Munitions Board, in a memorandum of recent date to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, had named those materials and supplies which it considered strategic, critical, or essential to the defensive efforts of the United States during war, that a list of these with their geographic origin and relation to the canal was as follows:

From the area tributary to the canal east of the Mississippi River: Cotton, clays, steel, lumber, iron, coal.

From the area tributary to the canal west of the Mississippi River and in Gulf States: Silver, molybdenum, potash, asbestos, bromine, tungsten, uranium, graphite, fluorspar, salt, bauxite, sugar, hemp, lead, wheat, arsenic, zinc, manganese, mica, fuller's earth, copper, antimony, mercury, vanadium, beef, hides, cotton, wool, tannin, vegetable oils, pumice, phosphates, petroleum, asphalt, alcohol, titanium.

From the area tributary to the canal (via Panama) on the United States west coast: Chromium, tungsten, platinum, wool, potash, uranium, fluorspar, borates, mercury, graphite, magnesium, lumber, copper, vanadium, iodine, petroleum.

From the area tributary to the canal in Mexico: Cadmium, tannin, copper, molybdenum, graphite, arsenic, lead, sisal, zinc.

From the territory tributary to the canal in Central America: Platinum, lumber.

From the territory tributary to the canal (via Panama) in western South America: Antimony, mica, wool, copper, potash, tin, tungsten, platinum, nitrates, silver.

From the territory tributary to the canal (via Yucatan Channel) in eastern South America: Mica, rubber, hides, hemp, shellac, quartz crystal, wool, kapok, potash, zirconium.

From the territory tributary to the canal (via Yucatan Channel) in northern South America: Petroleum, silver, platinum, asphalt.

With the closing of the Atlantic openings into the Gulf of Mexico and the Carribbean Sea, the committee said that all of these necessary materials could move with comparative safety and dispatch through the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal to our Atlantic seaboard.

The committee asserted that the evidence before it showed that more than one-half of the total petroleum reserves of the Nation were in the Gulf States and that of the remainder a large part was also directly tributary to this canal. The committee said that Army engineer officers have pointed out the absolutely necessity in time of war of safeguarding the enormous ocean-going petroleum movement, upon which the Navy and a large part of our industries are dependent and which now use the straits of Florida, and that this vast volume of petroleum and petroleum products could be moved through the canal to the Atlantic seaboard more quickly than through the straits and with comparative safety from submarine attack.

The committee states further in this report that any great use of the canal by fighting craft must be predicated upon operations in the Gulf or the Caribbean Sea; that, aside from the obvious advantage of permitting the naval defense of the Florida-West Indian line to be conducted from within, it is evident that a piercing of this line by the enemy, or even the temporary occupation by the enemy of any of the West Indian islands or any territory on the north coast of South America or the east coast of Central America, might make the use of the canal by our naval vessels not only desirable but necessary. The House Committee on Rivers and Harbors states further that at full-service draft the heavy cruisers and all naval vessels except the battleships could transit the canal with its present proposed depth of 33 feet; that battleships could be passed through by lightening their bunker-oil supply.

That committee adds in this most informative report that the gravity of the considerations it has outlined lead to the conclusion that the canal is not only desirable for, but essential to, the adequate defense of the United States; that on this ground alone the wisdom of its prompt completion is indicated.

Mr. President, such is the factual background of this proposal as I have studied it. In view of the facts presented and the authorities cited, I do not deem it an exaggeration to say that no other project ever came before the Senate more thoroughly considered by official reviewing expert authority, more logically justified, nor more replete with benefit to the American people.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to announce that, if I may be recognized when the Senate reconvenes on Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, I should like to speak at that time on the unfinished business.

ORDER FOR RECESS—AUTHORITY TO REPORT AND SIGN BILLS, ETC.

During the delivery of Mr. SHEPPARD's speech,

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it stand in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. on Tuesday next; that during the recess the Vice President be authorized to sign bills and resolutions, that all committees be authorized to report, and that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive and refer messages from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able leader whether he contemplates a recess at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assumed that the Senator from Texas would continue for some time and that, due to the lateness of the hour, the Senator from Michigan, or any other Senator who might desire to discuss the pending matter in detail, would not feel justified in proceeding. So far as I now know, the Senate will take a recess at the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

NAVAL CONFIRMATIONS—NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on Monday, May 8, and on yesterday, the Senate confirmed sundry nominations for appointment and promotion in the naval service. As in executive session, I now ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

After the conclusion of Mr. SHEPPARD'S speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE—CHIEF OF STAFF

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, as in executive session, from the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably the nomination of Brig. Gen. George Catlett Marshall, Deputy Chief of Staff, to be general in the Regular Army, while holding office as Chief of Staff of the Army, with rank from September 1, 1939, under the provisions of law, vice Maj. Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff, to be retired on August 31, 1939.

Mr. President, I wish to say briefly that President Roosevelt, in submitting the name of General Marshall for the Senate's consideration, has made one of the outstanding nominations of his administration.

General Marshall will move into the Chief of Staff's office with an outstanding reputation for getting things done with the very minimum of pressure upon subordinates and with complete absence of any of those characteristics which are attributed to the military martinet. By the Regular Army, by National Guard men, and Reservists he is acclaimed as a leader in the fullest meaning of that word.

Anyone who has visited Army posts the country over sees everywhere the influence of General Marshall and hears everywhere of his accomplishments.

Dignified, yet amiable; quiet, yet firm, General Marshall is always accessible. His superior World War record included service as Assistant Chief of Staff for Operations of the famous First Division, in which capacity he served when that organization participated in the first American offensive on the western front, when in May 1918 Cantigny and the surrounding heights were captured; duty with the operations division of General Pershing's staff at General Headquarters; service with the operations section of the General Staff of the First American Army, of which he became chief in October 1918, participating in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives; and the assignment after the armistice as Chief of Staff of the Eighth Army Corps.

Equally outstanding in his peacetime achievements, General Marshall will prove a worthy successor to Gen. Malin Craig, a Chief of Staff under whose strong and capable directing hand the Army has made remarkable progress during the past 3 or more years.

It is with very deep regret that the Members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee view the approaching relinquishment by General Craig of his heavy military responsibilities. The efficiency, the integrity, the quiet calm, the affability of the present Chief of Staff have commanded the deep admiration and the profound respect of every Member of Congress and every citizen of our country. It is with genuine sorrow that we contemplate General Craig's impending retirement from active military service; we congratulate the Army, the Congress, and the country on having had so able a Chief of Staff. He has set a lofty standard, one of lasting benefit to the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

RECESS TO TUESDAY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I was requested by the majority leader at the conclusion of the business today to move a recess; and, unless some other Senator desires the floor to speak on the unfinished business, I now move that the Senate, in pursuance of the order previously entered, take a recess until Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, the recess being, under the order previously entered, until Tuesday, May 16, 1939, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 15, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious Lord, Thou who givest freely and largely, impress us that only he who forgets to hoard has learned how to live. Shame the heart that dreams only of blessings past and sees not the cheerful offerings which Nature sings in joy and hope; how manifold are Thy mercies. Garden, field, and hillside are covered with a mantle of green which promise a rich and an abundant harvest. Heavenly Father, how much more wonderful are Thy gifts to the souls of men through Christ. Do Thou possess our hearts and minds that we may resist evil and overcome difficulty. Amid turbulent conditions and mental disquietude, unfold to men everywhere the deep things of the soul. The Lord bless and preserve the ideals of our Republic and establish the work of these Thy servants. In the name of our Saviour who became obedient to Calvary's cross. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 11, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5269. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS ON THE BILL H. R. 3835

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will afford a hearing on my bill H. R. 3835, which is intended to afford some measure of cooperation on the part of the Post Office authorities with State taxing authorities, particularly in the matter of the collection of cigarette taxes. There are 21 States directly concerned, and a large number of the Members of the House have indicated to me their interest in the bill. Since I do not have an opportunity to confer with each of them separately, I am giving this notice with the idea that those who are concerned will appear before the committee tomorrow morning and present their views.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

ACQUIRING STOCKS OF STRATEGIC AND CRITICAL MATERIALS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 572) to provide for the common defense by acquiring stocks of strategic and critical materials essential to the needs of industry for the manufacture of supplies for the armed forces and the civilian population in time of a national emergency, and to encourage, as far as possible, the further development of strategic and critical materials within the United States for common defense, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MAY, THOMASON, FADDIS, CLASON, and MARTIN of Iowa.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by Postmaster General Farley before the trainmen's convention in Cleveland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, first, by including a radio address delivered by myself last Saturday night over the Columbia Broadcasting System, and, second, by including an article by Arthur J. Ballantine, former Under Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

There was no objection.

ARGENTINE BEEF

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman mind telling us what he is going to talk about?

Mr. RICH. I want to try to discuss with the gentleman from Colorado, the gentleman from Texas, and the gentlemen from the Western States and get their opinion as to whether they think that South American beef is better than beef from cattle raised in your States.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Just hop to it. You have my consent. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, has the Buy American Act been violated; and if so, by whom? It seems pretty tough on American meat-producing farmers; it is hard on the American meat packers and businessmen and pretty tough on American labor when we have poor business, with low farm prices and 12,000,000 American men and women unemployed, to have our Chief Executive, when writing to Secretary Hull in reply to his letter of April 5 regarding purchasing supplies for the 110,000 naval officers and men, that the President of the United States would advise him to buy beef canned in Argentina, claiming that it is better than American canned beef and because its price of 9.7 cents a pound plus the duty of 6 cents is cheaper than American prices paid of 23.61 cents per pound.

How will we maintain a high price for our American farmers and cattle raisers of Texas and Colorado and Idaho and Montana and other States? How will we keep standards of living high? How will we put the 12,000,000 unemployed back to work by such statements as that coming from men in authority? Where is there any incentive to have the slogan "Buy American" if our trusted officers betray us? How will we put our men back to work if we give foreign countries our business, our money, and our good will?

God forbid that this betrayal of the American trust shall have to be endured much longer or the America of tomorrow would be a sad day for our future generations.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a letter to the Secretary of the Interior and also a letter to Senator THOMAS, of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARGENTINE BEEF

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the importation of Argentine beef.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, for several years we have heard much about the good-neighbor policy of this administration, but it seems to me that President Roosevelt's recent statement that we buy Argentine beef for our Navy, despite provisions of the Buy American Act, should be of concern to every citizen.

The farmers and livestock producers have suffered from large importations of farm products and competitive commodities during recent years and now the President infers that he does not believe the American farmer is entitled to the American market. This recent statement should clear the atmosphere and the American farmer should know that his products and his labor are being used in a game of international politics. The question here is not merely the purchase of so many pounds of Argentine beef; the real question is, Would the President of the United States drive the livestock producers to a state of peonage and peasantry in order to curry favor with a South American republic? When a good-neighbor policy with its many reciprocal features is carried so far as to urge American citizens to buy and use foreign meat products, it is high time for the American livestock producer to protest vigorously. The livestock producers of this country cannot be expected to meet competitive prices of imported meats any more than American labor and industry can compete with cheap foreign labor and manufacturing. I cannot conceive how anyone would suggest that the corn-fed beef of the United States must meet competitive prices of Argentine grass- and alfalfa-fed cattle. Nor can I imagine anyone desiring that the American farmer be forced to pay peon wages to his help or reduce his own living standards to that of some of our competitive nations. Agriculture in the United States is in a demoralized condition, and now is no time to take from the American farmer his own market. When one realizes that those engaged in agriculture comprise about 30 percent of our population and that this great group receives less than 10 percent of our national income, one need not look far for the cause of our economic condition. Six and a half million families in the United States are engaged in agriculture and they should be entitled to some consideration.

I feel I must call the attenton of the House to the number of live cattle we are now importing at reduced tariff rates. The tariff on beef or heavy cattle from Canada under the 1932 tariff was 3 cents per pound. Under the 1939 agreement this tariff is reduced to 1½ cents per pound on a quota of 51,720 head of cattle quarterly. For the first quarter of 1939 this quota was completely filled during the first part of February. On April 1 large droves of cattle were waiting at the Canadian border to be driven across the line in order to receive benefit of the second quarter quota. The good-neighbor provisions of the reciprocal trade agreement permits Mexico to bring in a quota of cattle on the same basis. In addition to the number of livestock imported we have always imported great quantities of canned meats from South America. The President's statement that this beef was "better and cheaper" than the American product will no doubt increase the consumption of this product in American homes. In my opinion his statement has gone far toward destroying the effects of the "Buy American" movement.

When this matter is presented to the House for further consideration I sincerely hope the Members will vote to protect our American farmers and livestock producers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF ARGENTINE BEEF FOR THE NAVY

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE AMERICAN FARMER HIT AGAIN

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated on many occasions that the American farmer has been "sold down the river" during the past 6 years. The President has just made public a letter which he has written to Secretary of State Hull, bearing date of April 13, 1939, in which he fully authorized our Navy to purchase 48,000 pounds of canned corned beef from the Argentine Republic, despite the provisions of the Buy American Act.

Mr. Speaker, the reports from the press indicate the chief reason assigned by our President for such an unusual and surprising authorization was "that our American cattle do not make as good corned beef as some of the foreign cattle."

This statement is a very unusual one; and since I represent the Tenth Congressional District of Indiana, and many of our Members represent the great Central, Midwestern, and Western States, where our pasture and grazing lands are the most fertile in the world, and where we observe great and large herds of fine cattle in which our farmers and stock raisers take great pride, we doubt the correctness of the statement made. Our cattle, and especially those raised in my own State, are the finest specimens produced in the world, and they provide the finest and very best beef and meat products known to man, any statement to the contrary notwithstanding.

Our farmers and our stock raisers are our very best American citizens; they have materially aided in the building of this great Nation; they have endeavored to fully comply with every regulation imposed by the Government, yet they have been struggling throughout the past 6 years under the various forms of Government control and regimentation imposed by the national administration now in power; they have been entirely loyal and patriotic. When the President of our Nation boldly asserts that the meats and meat products which are produced in a foreign country are infinitely better than our own, that is certainly a hard slap in the face for every farmer and stock raiser in this Nation.

And, Mr. Speaker, it has become known that the dread and highly dangerous hoof-and-mouth disease is prevalent in many parts of the Argentine Republic; certain regions in that Republic are barred from making shipments of meat into this country because of that terrible disease existing among the cattle. It is further reported in the press that the President said "but the hoof-and-mouth disease cannot be imported in cans of corned beef." That assertion may be true, but pray tell me who would relish meats or meat products for human consumption which came from diseased cattle? And may I especially ask who would desire to eat, as food, meats coming from cattle which might be afflicted with the hoof-and-mouth disease? Yet that is the decree of the President—that Argentine corned beef be purchased for consumption by our naval forces. If our Navy should become involved, our men would subsist upon rations provided by a foreign country which might have come from diseased animals and which might cause sickness and other ill effects among our naval forces.

While we feed and market the finest cattle in the world and our cattle are free from any dangerous and transmissible diseases, yielding the finest beef and meat products known to man, yet this character of American-produced beef is not good enough for our Navy, according to the Chief Executive. He desires that our boys in our Navy eat the meat products purchased from a foreign country which come from that region where a dangerous disease is prevalent. Therefore, is it strange in the light of such philosophy that the American farmer and stock raiser has claimed that they were sold down the river?

While the quality of American beef and the meat products from our cattle is unsurpassed anywhere, yet the canned beef and meat products from Argentina have been placed on the shelves of the grocery stores in Indiana and elsewhere because of our low tariff wall, all of which is in direct competition with our own producers and citizens. This policy has materially injured our farmers and our own citizens. Our people are now, and have been for the past 5 years, struggling for their existence and to retain their possessions; they have had their own markets largely taken away from them, and this gesture on the part of the President gives to the Argentine a market for her meats and deprives our own producers of that opportunity to dispose of their produce. The policy of "buying foreign" instead of "buying American" is a highly dangerous one.

There can be no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that Argentina is highly elated because an added channel of trade has been developed which will be highly beneficial to her farmers and stock raisers. That country has again taken our market and our own people are again deprived of an opportunity to make progress in their own enterprise and business. Our Navy, which is entirely supported and maintained by our people, will by this procedure consume the food products of a foreign country.

May I say in the light of the Buy American Act, which law was passed in the interest of our farmers and laboring men and women, business and industry—which law has been generally adhered to in our country—I am greatly surprised and highly disturbed when our President violates both the letter and the spirit of that exacting law and directs the purchase of meats and meat products from a foreign country, thereby refusing to recognize our own people by buying American? By that lone act the evidence is conclusive that the American farmer and stock raiser are being sold down the river.

I offer this simple suggestion in the face of the very unbusinesslike attitude which has been taken in this matter: Our Government can aid our laboring men and women, our farmers, business, and industry by complying with the law and by buying American. A good-neighbor policy is not one which materially helps the one and materially hurts the other. That policy, as I have grasped it, is one of equality and of fairness, where due consideration is reasonably extended by each to the other. We have been the paymaster for the past 6 years, and our own people are suffering materially because of it. We have much to do within our own borders to rehabilitate our farmers, labor, business, and industry, and to save our own country.

Our President can materially aid the people of our Nation by observing the existing laws and by permitting our Navy to consume American food—and not the food produced in some foreign land.

Let us be American and let us buy American.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include therein a brief extract from an article in Fortune magazine on taxes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, it will, I believe, be worthwhile for every Member to read carefully the following passage from Fortune magazine. There are some things in this so-called "area of agreement" with which I would hesitate to agree; but there are many more with which I do agree and the very extent of agreement that was reached on this very controversial matter is indicative of the fact that when people get down to business and really face the issues real progress can be made.

The taxes which we are now paying are in large measure the necessary price of our keeping a system of free economy and certainly they are the price we pay for our failure to adjust our national economic life more speedily to the machine age. I am extremely glad that a measure has been passed by the House providing for reciprocal taxation of salaries of Federal officials by States and localities and the taxation of salaries of local officials by the Federal Government. For there is great necessity for us to learn to take a new and much more constructive and patriotic attitude toward taxes than Americans have generally been accustomed to take.

The Fortune article follows:

[From Fortune Magazine of May 1939]

THE AREA OF AGREEMENT

Here are 15 men: A "conservative" midwestern manufacturer, a "progressive" New England manufacturer, an anti-Roosevelt southern businessman, a pro-Roosevelt labor leader, a couple of men who inherited wealth, a Socialist, several tax experts, also one of Sweden's most distinguished economists and practical Socialists, Gunnar Myrdal, invited to the table for his comments on our American tax system.

On the subject of Federal taxation these men are known to disagree; but after struggling with the complicated issues before them they were able to define an area of agreement and even to concur upon some immediate reforms. With the exceptions and qualifications noted in the text, that area of agreement is as follows:

I. Taxation should be primarily for revenue.

II. It is an obligation of citizenship that should fall more heavily on the wealthy than on the poor.

III. The amount of Federal revenue must be increased.

1. While apparently the Budget cannot be balanced immediately, a cyclical balance is imperative.

IV. If we are to maintain the capitalist system, taxes must be imposed so as to place the least hindrance upon economic progress.

V. The present tax system is inadequate:

1. Because it cannot raise enough revenue.

2. Because, bearing too heavily on the poor, it is inequitable.

3. Because, bearing too heavily on the rich, it holds back investment and therefore employment.

VI. The Round Table recommends:

1. Reform of corporation taxes to eliminate double taxation of dividends, the capital-stock tax, and the excess-profits tax; also to permit consolidated returns, reasonable allowances for depreciation, and the carry-over of losses.

2. Abolition of tax-exempt securities.

3. Relief of the poor by repeal of all Federal excise and sales taxes (except gasoline, tobacco, and liquor).

4. An increase of $700,000,000 in the income tax, to be raised from the middle-income brackets by lowering exemptions and raising present rates.

5. Establishment of a national tax commission to formulate long-term tax policy, eliminating present uncertainty and complexity.

MAJOR QUESTIONS UNRESOLVED

I. Do surtaxes on large incomes discourage venture capital?

II. Is the principle of the undistributed-profits tax sound?

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of the legislative program for the day and one other special order heretofore made, I may address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE GOVERNORSHIP OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States announced last Friday the appointment of a new Governor for Puerto Rico. His appointment of Admiral William D. Leahy will mean the retirement of Maj. Gen. Blanton Winship, who for the past several months has sought to be relieved of his duties as Governor of Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point as part of my remarks a letter which I wrote to the President of the United States under date of May 4 regarding Governor Winship and the high esteem in which he is held by all the people of Puerto Rico and the President's reply.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to follow:

MAY 4, 1939.

Hon. FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States of America,
White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On May 2 I wrote to you a letter requesting a few minutes of your time to talk to you in view of the various rumors circulating about the possibility that Gov. Blanton Winship might resign and that charges against him are being made in Washington. My most recent conversation with Governor Winship left me with the opinion that there might be some truth in these rumors.

Such a move, Mr. President, is unthinkable to me from the viewpoint of the needs of Puerto Rico. The people of Puerto Rico are now comforted with the thought that they have a strong, capable, and honest Governor.

Never before has any Governor been so highly respected by the people of the whole island. No man could maintain the respect and admiration of all our political leaders, yet every political party would deplore Governor Winship's resignation.

Under his leadership during the last 5 years Puerto Rico has enjoyed a great progress as never before. The island's laborers have won better conditions and legislation which they hardly dared hope to obtain. Governor Winship has been Puerto Rico's greatest Governor, a statement which even his critics in Puerto Rico will confirm.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that you will use all your influence to persuade the Governor to remain in Puerto Rico if he should ask your permission to resign.

Respectfully yours,

SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 12, 1939.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: I have your letter of May 4, in which you speak highly of Gov. Blanton Winship and express the hope that he will continue to serve as Governor of Puerto Rico. I share your feeling about Governor Winship personally. I know that he has served both Puerto Rico and the Government with ability and devotion, but some time ago I determined to make Admiral Leahy Governor of Puerto Rico when he went on the retired list. This will be some time this summer.

I am sure that you will find that Governor-Admiral Leahy will serve the people of Puerto Rico with ability and understanding.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include as part of my remarks at this point an article from the New York Times relating to the appointment by the President of Admiral William D. Leahy as Governor of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

LEAHY TO SUCCEED GOVERNOR WINSHIP—ROOSEVELT TAKES NAVY BY SUPRISE IN DESIGNATING ADMIRAL TO PUERTO RICO POST

WASHINGTON, May 12.—In an announcement that took naval circles by surprise, President Roosevelt said today that he would soon send to the Senate the nomination of Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, to be Governor of Puerto Rico, succeeding Gov. Blanton Winship.

The President was uncertain when he would send up the nomination, but said that Admiral Leahy would remain in his present post and not go to Puerto Rico until after Congress had adjourned. Admiral Leahy conferred with the President yesterday, and it was understood that the new post was then offered to him.

The President's intention to place the island under jurisdiction of the Navy instead of under the War Department, where it has been for years, was regarded as official recognition of the increasing strategic importance of the Carribean area in the Nation's Atlantic defenses.

While President Roosevelt's decision was a complete surprise to the Navy, all naval officers agreed that the President would find it difficult to get a better equipped man for the job.

LEAHY HEADS NAVY PROGRAM

The building of the Navy's maximum strength has largely been directed by Admiral Leahy, and this fact is responsible more than any one other thing for his continuance in his present position until the adjournment of Congress.

Admiral Leahy was 64 years old on Saturday, which is the age limit fixed by law for the retirement of Army, Navy, and marine officers.

The fact that San Juan, P. R., is to be made a major link in the Atlantic defensive chain is also considered a prime reason for the appointment of Admiral Leahy as Governor of Puerto Rico.

The Navy has been authorized by Congress to spend $9,000,000 to build an air and submarine base on Isla Grande in San Juan Harbor while shore improvements, principally for air operations, will be undertaken by the Army and will cost millions of dollars.

In other words, it was said at the Navy Department today that Puerto Rico might be destined to be the Pearl Harbor of the Atlantic. Pearl Harbor is the key outpost of the Pacific defense. Admiral Leahy made no comment today on the President's statement. The opinion is general, however, that he will accept the appointment.

Governor Winship and Secretary Ickes have been at odds for some time, their differences having been widened recently when Mr. Ickes was said to blame the Governor for the long-continued conflict in the Puerto Rican Department of Education, which resulted in a demand by the Commissioner, Jose M. Gallardo, for the resignation of his assistant, Nester Vincent.

Representative MARCANTONIO, of New York, not long ago called at the White House to demand Governor Winship's removal on the ground that he had failed to cooperate with a movement in the Puerto Rican Legislature for an investigation of the auditor's office. It was said at the White House that this demand had not necessarily influenced the President in his apparent decision to allow Governor Winship to retire to private life.

WINSHIP TWICE FIRED UPON

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Since Governor Winship was inducted in San Juan in 1934, two attempts have been made to assassinate him by members of the island's Nacionalista Party.

The last attempt occurred at Ponce last summer, when assailants fired on a reviewing stand, missed General Winship, but killed several Puerto Rican officials who shielded the Governor with their bodies. General Winship said a year ago that he wanted to resign and enjoy life on his Army general's retirement pay.

"But," he added, "I'm an old soldier and I don't quit under fire."

The last time Governor Winship was in the Capital he told friends he was thinking of buying a trailer to tour the country and "enjoy the fishing and hunting."

WINSHIP PRAISES LEAHY

SAN JUAN, P. R., May 12.—No better man could be chosen to be Governor of Puerto Rico than Admiral Leahy and the island is to be congratulated on the President's designation; this was Gov. Blanton Winship's first reaction this afternoon to the information in news dispatches from Washington that the President had announced the selection of Admiral Leahy to head the island government when he retires as Chief of Naval Operations.

Governor Winship said that he would remain on the job, to suit the President's convenience. In a recent Washington conference with Mr. Roosevelt, it is understood, Governor Winship discussed his retirement after 5½ years as Governor. This afternoon the Governor said that he thought it his duty to stay until he had accomplished certain things and not to leave until the appropriate time.

Mr. Winship had only praise for his successor and the President and Puerto Rico. He said that the island could call on him at any time for anything. Mr. Winship did reiterate that he had suggested to the President that he wanted to continue here until "the appropriate time" to get out.

WINSHIP TELLS OF PLANS

Mr. Winship said that he had spent less than a month with his family in more than 5 years and that, besides his family, there were lots of places that he wanted to visit. Many of these are merely places where he has served in the last 40 years.

Admiral Leahy's assignment at the close of an active Navy career is not unlike that of Governor Winship, who was sent to Puerto Rico on his retirement from the Army at the age of 64, after attaining the rank of major general and serving as Judge Advocate General. Governor Winship said that Admiral Leahy's selection was most appropriate in view of the naval development in the Caribbean, centering at San Juan base.

He alluded also to the creation of an Army military department of Puerto Rico, with Brig. Gen. E. J. Daley in command. So far as a hurried reference to the island's history revealed, Admiral Leahy may be the first Navy officer to govern Puerto Rico in more than four centuries. Spain almost invariably sent Army field marshals to administer the island. After the change in sovereignty in 1898 the United States governed through Army officers for 3 years. From 1901 until General Winship's designation in February 1934, all island Governors were from civil life.

WAGE-HOUR LEGISLATION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the chairwoman of the Committee on Labor gave notice several days ago that she would today ask the Speaker to recognize her to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill recently reported by the Committee on Labor amending the Wage-Hour Act. I understand the chairwoman of the Committee on Labor has stated that in the event the motion to suspend is voted down she will pocket the resolution and that the House would have no opportunity of taking action on the measure this session.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is within the right of the Committee on Rules on its own motion to grant a rule for the consideration of any bill reported to the House. If the motion of the gentlewoman from New Jersey is voted down and a resolution is offered by any Member of the House, the probabilities are that the Rules Committee would grant a rule on the bill which would provide for full consideration and the offering of amendments to the measure. [Applause.]

ARGENTINE BEEF

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, we have heard considerable about canned beef from Argentina. Many of us believe that American beef has no superior in the world. I have, therefore, offered a resolution asking that the Speaker appoint five Members of Congress to constitute a committee to inquire into the circumstances and facts in regard to American beef and also in regard to the Buy American Act.

Last Saturday the public press carried the story that the President of the United States at a press conference in the White House last Friday made public a letter he wrote to the Secretary of State April 13, 1939, authorizing the Navy Department to purchase 48,000 pounds of Argentine canned corned beef, notwithstanding the provisions of the said so-called Buy American Act of March 3, 1933.

It was stated that the President declared that—

> The Argentine product was infinitely superior in quality to the American product; * * * that the enlisted men of the Navy should have the best beef.

Many of us believe that American beef has no superior. Therefore I am introducing today a resolution providing for a select committee of five, to be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty will be to make a thorough investigation of all the facts and circumstances concerning contracts to supply the United States Navy, to determine the reason for the statement that Argentine beef is infinitely superior to American beef.

I ask unanimous consent to include said resolution at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to follows:

> Whereas the Navy Department invited bids to supply the Navy with canned corned beef; and
>
> Whereas the lowest bidder appears to have been the Argentine Meat Producers Cooperative, an alleged institution of the Government of Argentina; and
>
> Whereas section 2, title 3, of the act of March 3, 1933, commonly known as the Buy American Act, requires the purchase for public use of supplies only produced or manufactured in the United States with certain exceptions; and
>
> Whereas the bill (H. R. 6149) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1940, passed by the House of Representatives May 8, 1939, now pending in the Senate, contains a provision that no part of the appropriation, or any other appropriation for subsistence of Navy personnel, shall be available for the procurement of any article of food not grown or produced in the United States or its possessions, with certain exceptions; and
>
> Whereas it was stated in the public press of Saturday, May 13, 1939, that the President of the United States at a press conference in the White House on Friday, May 12, 1939, made public a letter he wrote to the Secretary of State, dated April 13, 1939, authorizing the Navy Department to purchase 48,000 pounds of Argentine canned corned beef, notwithstanding the provisions of the said so-called Buy American Act; and
>
> Whereas it was further stated that the President of the United States in his said letter to the Secretary of State declared that "the Argentine product was infinitely superior in quality to the American product," which statement, it is said, the President reiterated with emphasis at the said press conference: Therefore
>
> Resolved, That a select committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough investigation of all the circumstances and facts concerning bids and contracts to supply the United States Navy with canned corned beef; also whether or not the Argentine Meat Producers' Cooperative, an alleged institution of the Government of Argentina, was awarded the contract to furnish to the United States 48,000 pounds, more or less, of canned corned beef; also, whether or not, if a contract was so awarded, such action was in violation of the provisions of the so-called Buy American Act (title III, sec. 2, act of March 3, 1933); also whether or not the President of the United States did, on April 13, 1939, address a letter to the Secretary of State, said to have been written at the latter's request, in which, as alleged, the President is said to have authorized and directed the Navy Department to purchase 48,000 pounds, more or less, of canned corned beef produced in Argentina; also whether or not it is true that the President of the United States, in said alleged letter to the Secretary of State stated in language or in effect that "the Argentine product was infinitely superior in quality to the American product," and whether or not he repeated and reiterated the said statement at a press conference to the effect that Argentine canned beef is better in quality than the American product, and at the same time, as alleged, recommended trial of both products so as to demonstrate the superior quality of the Argentine product.
>
> Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby empowered to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths to witnesses, to incur such expenses as may be necessary for the employment of clerical and stenographic services, to have such printing and binding done as the committee may require, and to sit during the sessions of the House. Said committee shall report its findings, together with such recommendations as it shall deem necessary, to the House of Representatives at the earliest possible moment during the present session of Congress.
> Pending the investigation herein authorized the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to suspend the awarding, and, if already awarded, the execution of the contract alleged to have been authorized with the Argentine Meat Producers' Cooperative or with any other Argentine producer of canned corned beef for the use of its product by the United States Navy.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, we have heard a lot this week end about last Friday's order by President Roosevelt authorizing the United States Navy to purchase Argentine beef in preference to American beef. There seems to be some question as to whether this action violates the letter and spirit of the Buy American Act; however, I would not want to go so far as to say that the President's order was a direct violation of this act, but it does very definitely and directly point to the necessity of having a new law enacted by this body which will prevent a recurrence of discrimination against American producers. So long as we have a President who is so internationalistic that he chooses to feed the fighting forces of America with foreign foodstuffs instead of supplying them with food raised by American farmers on American farms, it is imperative that we have adequate legislation preventing such favoritism to foreign producers.

A "BLACK FRIDAY" FOR AMERICAN FARMERS

Therefore, I introduced at the beginning of today's session a bill to be known as the "Buy American Farm Products In America Act," which would make it mandatory for all Government purchases of foodstuffs to be made from products which are raised in America, insofar as they are available in this country. I sincerely hope that the Members on both sides of the aisle will join with me in support of this bill. Unless we can pass it and prevent a repetition of Friday's fiasco, last Friday will go down into history as a "black Friday" for American farmers because that date will mark the time when the President of this country officially put our Government in the business of pounding down prices on American farm products through the vicious expedient of using public tax money to stimulate foreign production of competitive farm products. The huge farm imports resulting from the New Deal reciprocal trade pacts have already brought American farmers to the brink of ruin and stimulated foreign agriculture to the point where it will now be a permanent threat to any future American farm prosperity.

I have been considering some such legislation as I have today introduced for some time, but President Roosevelt's order to the Navy last Friday to buy Argentine beef because it was both "cheaper and infinitely better" proved the New Deal straw that broke the farmer's economic back and caused me to introduce this bill in the first House session following the President's declaration. When the New Deal leader announces this policy of using tax money taken in due proportion from the American farmers to force down the prices of their own products through making Government food purchases from their chief foreign competitors, it is time for Congress to forget playing politics and to begin practicing patriotism toward American agriculture.

NEW DEAL EVADES ITS OWN LAWS

My colleagues, I wonder whether you have thought through the President's unique and unhappy statement to ascertain where it leads in its final implications? Remember, he ordered the Navy to buy this beef because it was both "cheaper and better." We can quickly dispose of the "better" part of this statement because every one of you knows that the Navy can buy beef of as choice a grade as it desires or as the world affords right here in this country—it is quite true that for the specified price stipulated in the bids in question the Argentine beef may have been of a better grade on a competitive price basis, and there is a clear-as-day reason for that.

The New Deal administration has passed wage and hour legislation which requires American packers to pay their workers a specified wage scale; such legislation very naturally must reflect itself, at least in part, either upon the price which the packers must charge for their products or in the price they can pay the farmer who raises the beef. In all probability it results in both a little higher price for the consumer and a little lower price for the producer. However, I am making no quarrel against such legislation if it is necessary to give decent wages to American workingmen, because I am one of those who insist on the right of a worker to receive an honest day's pay for an honest day's work. But I do have a very definite quarrel with the President when, after sponsoring such legislation, he deliberately proceeds to penalize the farmer, the worker, and the packer in America by ordering the Navy, of which he is the directing officer, to buy its foodstuffs from foreign countries because they can thus get them cheaper.

WILL ROOSEVELTIAN INCONSISTENCY NEVER CEASE?

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, will the miracles of Roosevelt ian inconsistency never cease? When, oh when, will we settle down to trying to give equitable opportunity to American workers and farmers and cease trying to play Santa Claus to all the world? Unless my "Buy American Farm Products in America Act" is passed, the President has demonstrated by his word and action that after establishing price and labor standards in this country he now openly orders the Government to spend the taxpayers' funds in buying foreign foodstuffs which neither employ American laborers to any extent nor give them so much as an hour's work at the attractive wage and hour standards which he insists they should enjoy. Good friends, continued unemployment for American labor is just as devastating at one wage and hour standard as at another. If Uncle Sam himself seeks to evade the wage and hour standards by making his purchases from the low production-cost countries of America on the basis that his own legislation makes American products cost too much, what chance is there to employ American labor, reduce unemployment, give purchasing power to American farmers, and end this Roosevelt era of debts and depression? And if our Government chisels and cheats to evade the price effects of fair labor standards, what can we expect of private citizens?

The time has come to apply the test of reason to the acts of Government, and I urge the members of the majority party of this House, who must be charged with the bill's defeat if they kill it in committee, to report out my "Buy American Farm Products in America Act" and give American workers and farmers, as well as American businessmen, the guaranty that at least insofar as Uncle Sam is able he will not only strive to provide decent working standards but he will also strive to provide work upon which these standards can become operative in providing income for the people of this country. I shall now add a copy of my bill to the conclusion of these remarks, as it is very short, although I believe it is very significant, and I want each of you to read it, because I invite you all to join me in this program to help restore honest prices and sincere Government cooperation to the laborers, farmers, and businessmen of the United States.

The bill referred to is as follows:

A bill to give the American market to the American farmer on all Government purchases of food products raised in the United States

Whereas the American farmer, engaged as he is in the basic industry of this country, is not now receiving a fair price for the products which he raises; and

Whereas the restoration of prosperity to the American farmer is the first and fundamental step which must be taken in a sound recovery program for this country; and

Whereas the American farmer is now suffering from unfair competition from low-cost farm products imported from abroad and put into American markets in direct competition with the products he raises on expensive high tax-paying and high production-cost land; and

Whereas money spent on American-raised farm products remains in this country and develops many times its original value in contributing additional labor, business, and national wealth, while money spent for foreign farm products serves only to develop increased competition for American producers; and

Whereas the American farmer is entitled to the American market for all food products which he can raise in this country and since it is the duty of the Government to take the lead in providing an equitable opportunity for the farmers of America: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the passage of this act which is to be known as the "Buy American Farm Products in America Act" it shall be the duty of all Government departments, bureaus, boards, and all other Government agencies buying food supplies from money provided through the United States Treasury, to buy all of these food supplies from farmers and other producers of the United States, provided these supplies are raised in the United States and provided sufficient American products are available to supply the demands of the Government.

Violation of this act shall be deemed good and sufficient reason for the impeachment of the authorities responsible for its violation.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I arise for the purpose of assuring the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] that I shall enthusiastically support the resolution which he has introduced and to which he has just referred.

This resolution sets up a committee of the House to make investigation as to the facts upon which the President based his recent statement to the press concerning the purchase by our Government of Argentine beef to be used by the Navy.

The press advises us that "President Roosevelt has directed the Navy to accept a bid on Argentine beef in place of American beef, because," he said, "the foreign product was found to be cheaper and superior in quality." The press also says that "the President expressed himself with considerable feeling on the subject."

It is stated the President further strengthened his position, in recommending the selection of foreign-produced beef by the Navy in preference to American beef, by adding that "it was a question of feeding the Navy men with the best quality of food." And pursuing his excuse further, the President said, "A careful examination of all samples furnished with the bids showed the Argentine beef was far superior in quality."

It appears that the President concluded his statement by advising that he had written a letter to the Secretary of State approving the purchase of the Argentine beef and asserting "that in doing so he felt certain that the intent of buy American products had not been violated."

The country should be especially interested in this position taken by the Chief Executive, because his statements do, and should, carry weight throughout the world. If it is true that Argentine beef is cheaper and superior to our American beef, and that the United States Government is buying Argentine beef to feed to our own Navy because it is better for their health, the American beef producers should know about it.

I am advised that this statement by the President has been given world-wide publicity. I heard a radio commentator make the statement that the President had written the best possible advertisement and publicity for Argentine beef to be used in every country in the world where the United States and Argentine beef are sold on a competitive market. This commentator stated further that in some of the countries of Europe advantage was already being taken of the President's recommendation to buy the "cheapest and the best" beef in the Argentine.

I am wondering what the cattle producers of the country will think of such an attitude on the part of the President. The district which I represent in the Congress is a large beef-feeding district. We purchase the steers from the western range in the fall, feed up the corn and alfalfa raised on our farms, and furnish to the market in the spring the best corn-fed beef cattle in the world—that is, we have always believed that this was the best quality of beef. Therefore we are naturally vitally interested in ascertaining the truth. If it is true that the quality of our beef is inferior to such an extent that our President does not want to feed the beef to our Navy and our soldiers, then the producers of this beef have a right to know about it.

The Allen resolution will create a forum where the truth can be ascertained. If the President is correct, he will have no difficulty in bringing in his experts and those who are advising him. In view of the seriousness of this matter I can hardly see how the House leadership and the administration can object to this resolution. All we want is the truth and the facts. The natural presumption is that the President has stated the truth and the facts about the quality of our beef. However, I challenge the truth of any such statement. Therefore, in fairness to the President and to the American farmer and beef producer, speedy action should be had on the resolution.

Of course, if the President interprets that "buy American products" refers to the Western Hemisphere, that is one thing. That may be, and probably is, the basis of his treaty-making and good-neighbor policy. I am sure, however, that the people of the United States interpret this phrase to mean to buy in our own country.

The Army and the Navy are maintained by the tax dollar, much of which is taken from the pockets of the farmer and the livestock producer. As a result, every time our Government buys beef or other supplies for our Army and Navy from foreign countries it heaps insult upon injury so far as our taxpayers are concerned. It is pretty tough to ask our farmers to pay the taxes they do and then have this money used to purchase foreign products, the effect of which is to put out of business, or at least cripple, these very taxpayers.

When the people understand just what the President has said, and just what the effect will be, there will be a justifiable protest from every quarter section of land in the Nation. This whole thing just does not make sense.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to make any comment on the appointment of a new Governor for Puerto Rico, nor was it my intention to comment on the removal of Blanton Winship as Governor of Puerto Rico. My reason for not making comment, as well as for my not publishing the charges I had made against him with the President, is that it is not my policy to kick a man when he is down. However, since the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico has just stated that Mr. Winship had "intended to resign," thereby conveying the impression that Mr. Winship quit of his own volition, I call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Winship was requested to resign by the Secretary of the Interior. Instead of resigning, he saw the President on May 4. Upon arriving in Puerto Rico, he bragged that he had defeated Mr. Ickes and conveyed the impression that he had satisfactorily disposed of my charges against him. In fact, before leaving Washington, in the presence of newspapermen, he invited people to visit him during the summer in Puerto Rico. On May 12, at a press conference, the President announced that Admiral Leahy would succeed Mr. Winship as Governor of Puerto Rico. Up to then and never before this announcement had Mr. Winship resigned. The conclusion, therefore, is inescapable. Winship was removed. Notification of one's successor without one's resignation constitutes removal.

I am not surprised to see the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS] apologize for Mr. Winship and try to convey the impression that Mr. Winship left of his own free will. The role of official apologist for removed Governor of Puerto Rico on the part of the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS] is not new for him. When Mr. Gore, Mr. Winship's predecessor, was forced out the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS] played the same identical role for him, that of official apologist.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the entire membership of the House, I believe, is very much shocked at the President's recommendation with reference to Argentine beef. One can readily see that as goes the Argentine beef so goes the rest of our trade. I hope the Members of the House will most earnestly protest against the taking over by the State Department of the commercial and agricultural attachés, the people who are supposed to sell our agricultural and commercial products in other countries. The President has proposed such a transfer under the reorganization plan. I voted against the reorganization bill because I felt just such a thing would happen.

In view of the President's statement about Argentine beef, may I ask what chance in the world has our trade in other countries? We will buy from other countries, but we will sell nothing. It was bad enough to suggest that the beef be purchased from Argentina, but it was adding insult to injury to say that our beef was inferior.

I am informed by reliable sources that because the reciprocal-trade agreements are handled by the diplomats, many of the consuls are doing only minor jobs, instead of trying to sell our goods to foreign countries. It makes a farce of the program for the farmers. Millions are appropriated to assist them, and then the foreign trade is taken away from them. It stands to reason that the commercial attachés and trade commissioners can go much further in assisting industry and agriculture in exploiting its products abroad than can the diplomats, who are told by the administration they must be very careful not to interfere with the reciprocal-trade agreements program. Reciprocal trade is fine, but is very harmful at the cost of our own trade. The President's statement certainly indicates we are well on the road to free trade. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute to propound some inquiries of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, since the Republicans have now finished eating up all the Argentine beef, may I take the time of the House to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] some questions about the parliamentary procedure?

The gentleman from Georgia made certain statements a while ago which I should like to have clarified. As I understand, when a bill is taken up under suspension of the rules there has to be a second from somebody.

Mr. COX. Not necessarily, unless someone moves for a second.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that. If the motion for a second is voted down, the bill cannot be taken up under suspension of the rules. I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say that if such took place the Rules Committee would give us a rule which would enable the Members to offer amendments to the bill. Is that correct?

Mr. COX. I made the statement that in the event a motion to suspend the rules is voted down the Rules Committee—and I think I speak advisedly—would grant a rule upon an application coming either from the chairwoman of the Labor Committee or any member of that committee or any Member of the House, and that that rule would provide for full debate and the right of Members to impress their influence upon this type of legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. Would that give individual Members the right to offer amendments?

Mr. COX. Of course.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the majority leader for a moment? There is a general demand throughout the country for a tax revision which will help business and enable the American people to get back to work at American wages. There have been conflicting reports. First we hear there will not be any general tax revision; then we hear there will be. May I ask the majority leader if he can give us any assurance as to the possibility of real tax revision at this session of Congress?

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that I cannot speak for the Ways and Means Committee or for the Treasury or for the executive department headed by the President. There will be a tax bill. The so-called nuisance taxes must be reenacted or else we shall lose a billion dollars. Many of the corporation taxes expire on December 31 this year. They must be reenacted or else some other kind of corporation tax bill must be enacted to raise $250,000,000 that the Treasury needs very much. A bill therefore will be reported renewing these nuisance taxes and rearranging or reenacting the corporation taxes. Just what revision of corporation taxes will be reported by the Ways and Means Committee I am not in position to say at this time.

In all probability, however, when the bill relating to corporation taxes comes up for consideration it may be subject to amendment and, if that be the case, Members will have the opportunity of offering amendments to anything they believe may be called a deterrent tax. And may I say to the gentleman and to the House that some one coined the phrase "deterrent tax" in speaking of "repealing deterrent taxes." If all deterrent taxes were repealed, no taxes would be left on the statute books because there is not a tax on the statute books, local, State, or Federal, that is not to that extent a deterrent, because it takes money from capital.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas desire additional time?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute, and I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, the gentleman understands this is a very acute problem. The gentleman can, I hope, give us assurance when the tax bill does come up in the House it will not be under a gag rule but will be subject to amendment. Furthermore, I hope, the gentleman believes we should stay in session until some remedial tax legislation is considered by the House?

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the gentleman that I said the measure may come up so amendments could be offered to it, and I suppose—and I believe this is a very definite thing—that we will remain in session until laws continuing expiring taxes are enacted or something is adopted in their stead.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I want it known that I highly resent the statement made and the action taken by the President of the United States in reference to the purchase of Argentine beef. There is plenty of resentment on this side of the aisle and plenty of resentment throughout the western livestock-producing States.

I want to say that the American livestock producer cannot afford to pay the price necessary to appease Argentina. I can see in this appeasement gesture to Argentina the implication to influence the Senate to ratify the Argentine sanitary pact, which would permit the importation of fresh and chilled beef from Argentina. We now prohibit the importation of chilled and fresh meats from any country where foot-and-mouth disease is prevalent. Should this sanitary pact be ratified, it would permit the importation of meats from those Provinces in Argentina that are free from foot-and-mouth disease. This, however, would be a serious threat to the livestock industry in this country, not only because of increased competing imports of meat but because it would expose this country again to a possible outbreak of the dread foot-and-mouth disease, which is so devastating to livestock. The United States is one of the few countries in the world that is free of this disease. Let us keep it that way.

The American cattle producers cannot and should not be asked to compete with Argentine prices in supplying the requirements of the United States Navy. The high labor standards maintained in the livestock industry make it impossible to compete with the peon labor in Argentina. The cost of freight, processing, and distribution is much higher in this country. The ocean freight from Argentine ports to the eastern seaboard of the United States on canned meats is $7 a long ton, and the freight rate from the Missouri River to the eastern seaboard is approximately double that. Incidentally the ocean freight rate on canned meats from New York to the River Plate ports is approximately three times as much as it is from River Plate points to New York.

The American livestock producers are entitled to the American market, and any effort to encourage increased importations of Argentine beef into this country will meet with strenuous opposition. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, in his press conference of the 12th the President went out of his way to take a shot at the beef industry of this country, saying that canned Argentine beef is vastly, infinitely superior to the United States product. And when pressed as to why, he said he "guessed the Argentine cow was just naturally better than the United States cow."

There are no cattle on the face of the earth that can approach in quality the good old range bred, Corn Belt fed cattle of this country.

If, as the President says, the Argentine canned meat is superior to United States canned meat, then it must be that choicer cuts are canned in Argentine. But in that connection, let us inquire as to the kind of cattle from which these choice cuts may come.

Perhaps Mr. John McKenzie, of the Matador Land & Cattle Co., who spent 11 years in the cattle business in South America, and who still has vast interests there, can tell us. I quote from his address before the Wyoming cattlemen's convention in June of 1937 in which he discussed rinderpest, commonly called foot-and-mouth disease. He states that during his entire stay and connection with his South American properties that there never was a time when everyone of their ranches was free of foot-and-mouth disease.

My experience in South America was practically all in Brazil. However, I visited in the Argentine and I know that the conditions existing in the Argentine are practically the same as in Brazil. For instance, in Brazil we have no sanitary regulations; none whatsoever. When we would see cattle taking the foot-and-mouth disease we immediately shipped them to the packing house. There was no rule or anything against it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have ever spoken on this floor. I can complete my statement in about a minute, and I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.

Mr. HORTON. If I am out of order, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement that appeared in the Kiplinger Washington letter of February 18, 1939, on the question of the foot-and-mouth disease and the sanitary pact with Argentine; release No. 5 under date of April 4, 1939, from the American National Livestock Association; and my own release under date of last Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORTON. The foot-and-mouth disease of which Mr. McKenzie speaks is the most loathsome and disgusting disease known to cattle. They run a high fever, slobber and drool at the mouth; the nose, teats, and udder are covered with lesions and blisters; they have lesions and open, bloody sores between the cloven hoofs; the mouth is covered with blisters and sores and if you were to put your hand in the mouth and take hold of the tongue, the mucous membrane would peel off like the skin of a rattler in August.

As Mr. Roosevelt says, "You cannot ship foot-and-mouth disease in cans." Right, but it is possible to can meat from foot-and-mouth diseased cattle and that does not sound so attractive. True, such meat may not kill a man, but a calf sucking its diseased mother will be dead within 2 days' time.

Follow the President's advice. Buy a can or two of this Argentine beef the next time you and your children go on a picnic and find out for yourself whether his statement is true. But while you are at it, ask yourself whether you want our great fighting Navy boys, the best in the world, to be protected by good old United States of America meat inspection laws or whether they are to be fed the mess which Mr. McKenzie describes and which possibly is being purchased for them by Mr. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The Kiplinger Washington letter, February 18, 1939:

Argentine beef: State Department is quietly searching for a method of lifting the embargo on Argentine beef, because there is no chance of Senate ratification of the long-pending Sanitary Convention.

Here's Hull's tentative plan: Get House Ways and Means Committee, on which livestock is not strongly represented, to approve a resolution repealing provisions of the tariff act which keeps out Argentine beef.

If this scheme is adopted, it might be forced through this year because all administration forces would be rallied behind it.

The whole plan is aimed at short-circuiting livestock forces.

AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION,
Denver, Colo., April 4, 1939.

AMERICAN BEEF SUPERIOR

Emphatically it is not the competitive feature of beef importation from Argentina that is the reason stockmen insist on maintenance of the embargo against that country, declared F. E. Mollin, secretary of the American National Live Stock Association, in a letter to the New York Herald Tribune, made public today. The reason is that Argentina, along with many other barred countries, has foot-and-mouth disease, he said.

Mollin's statements were made in reply to a Tribune editorial entitled "Good Beef Makes Bad Neighbors."

"There has been a lot of amusing publicity recently as to the superior beef which Argentina produces," said Mollin. "Apparently an attempt is being made to create the impression that the United States is afraid of the competition of this beef from a quality standpoint, and that this is the main reason why the livestock industry in this country insists on the maintenance of the embargo provision of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act.

"Nothing is further from the truth. It so happens that only last Saturday I talked to a prominent Texas cattleman who has recently been in the Argentine, and I asked him how the quality of the beef served in first-class restaurants and hotels in Buenos Aires compared with the quality of our best beef in this country. He replied that it was about the same quality as good Kansas grass beef. This is plenty good, but it is not of the same quality as the thousands of tons of prime and choice corn-fed beef which is marketed annually in this country. We are interested in the maintenance of the embargo provision because we feel that only in that way can we safeguard the health of our herds and flocks. Foot-and-mouth disease exists in some sixty-odd countries in the world. The embargo applies to all alike. There is no discrimination against Argentina. If you break down the embargo in order to permit importations from some certain sections of Argentina, you establish a precedent which eventually would mean the complete breaking down of the embargo and the infestation of our herds and flocks with disease. We have had many costly experiments with it; our fears are not imaginary. During the past 2 years almost every country in Europe has had severe outbreaks. We can produce in this country all the meat that we need, and hence, fortunately, unlike many European countries, we do not need to take the risk involved in such importations with the dire consequences that so frequently follow.

"There is an interesting contrast in the attitude of the Argentine Government in this matter and that of Brazil. They are in exactly the same position, yet Brazil has the good sense to recognize our situation and to make the best of it. She long ago executed a trade agreement with the United States and has recently concluded a new economic agreement which will lead to increased trade between the two countries. Argentina, on the other hand, has made an issue of the admission of dressed meats, placing severe restrictions on American imports and doing everything possible to stir up trouble in attempting to force a relaxation of the embargo against foot-and-mouth disease. The livestock industry is determinedly opposed to any change in the present situation until such time as any country of the ones against which the embargo applies cleans its herds and flocks of foot-and-mouth disease. When they do that, the embargo is automatically lifted. The reason for Argentina's attitude is very plain. Under the terms of the Ottawa agreement, Great Britain has steadily reduced its import quotas for Argentine beef and lamb, giving preference to the British dominions. It would be very accommodating of the United States to take up the slack, but the reasons cited above are entirely sufficient for our refusing to do so."

Representative FRANK O. HORTON (Republican), of Wyoming, today issued the following statement with reference to President Roosevelt's remarks at a press conference directing the purchase by the Navy Department of foreign beef:

"I am amazed at the statement attributed today by the press to the President of the United States lauding the superior quality and cheaper price of foreign-produced beef over that of the American product. Why a President of the United States should use his influential office as a sounding board to boost foreign products is inconceivable to me.

"The President's statement that he had directed the Secretary of the Navy to award a contract for some 48,000 pounds of canned beef to the Argentine Meat Producers' Cooperative is the more surprising because of action taken only this week by the House of Representatives in connection with the Navy Department appropriation bill.

"In that bill the House provided that no part of $773,000,000 thus appropriated shall be used for the purchase of 'any article of food not grown or produced in the United States or its possessions, except articles of food not so grown or produced or which cannot be procured in sufficient quantities as and when needed.' Mr. Roosevelt certainly would not contend that this country is unable to produce beef in sufficient quantities for the Navy.

"Mr. Roosevelt bases his preference for foreign canned beef on the contention that it is cheaper and superior to our American product. Naturally the price for American beef is higher because our producers and processors pay a wage that permits a decent standard of living. To insist upon an Argentine price is to demand Argentine wage levels and living standards for the people of this country. The price is higher here also because of the increased costs of production brought about in large part by New Deal legislation, such as the Social Security Act, the Wages and Hours Act, the National Labor Relations Act, and the Federal tax laws of the last 4 or 5 years, not to mention the New Deal's farm scarcity program.

"I am not objecting in this place to those enactments, but it does seem illogical to me for Mr. Roosevelt, after sponsoring such price-raising legislation, to turn around and insist that a Government department must purchase canned beef from a foreign country because it is cheaper.

"Indeed I am amazed at the inconsistency of the President. Again and again he has professed that his aim in regard to agriculture was to raise the prices of farm products. I distinctly remember that in July 1933 Mr. Roosevelt asserted that 'for many years the two great barriers to a normal prosperity have been low farm prices and the creeping paralysis of unemployment.' Yet by ordering the Navy Department to buy Argentine canned beef the President is making a contribution to depressing American beef prices and preventing reemployment of Americans who process that product. Has Mr. Roosevelt abandoned his professed desire to raise farm prices?

"Certainly the American taxpayer, and that means every American, who shortly will be called on to provide the seven hundred and seventy-three millions appropriated for the Navy, has a right to demand, and does demand, that those millions appropriated be spent in this country for the benefit of American labor, farmers, and industrialists, and not for the benefit of foreign countries.

"I am making a vigorous protest, and I am also urging Senators O'MAHONEY and SCHWARTZ to uphold the action taken by the House of Representatives."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD and include therein an article by Westbrook Pegler appearing in this morning's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

FAIR ENOUGH

(By Westbrook Pegler)

AN OPEN LETTER

Mr. HENRY MORGENTHAU,

Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

DEAR HENRY: I have just received your form letter in which you express a desire to borrow some money from me on your United States savings bonds. The proposition sounds interesting, but, as you know, the Government has laws nowadays where promoters and business firms are required to meet certain conditions and conform to certain standards, and I assume that you are willing to set private business a good example.

In the sad days after the great boom we learned that some business houses squandered investors' money on frivolous expenditures and that they pyramided issues until they were selling people bonds to pay the interest on previous issues.

They aren't allowed to do that now. In fact, only this morning there was a piece in the paper saying that the Securities and Exchange Commission was demanding information from a gas and electric company as to the services performed by a Mr. Ben Gray in return for a salary of $55,000 a year. A good idea, too, and if a company goes to the public for money the Government should see to it that the pay rolls are not loaded with relatives and fraternity brothers of the management at high salaries or even at medium salaries, because medium salaries mount up, too.

GOVERNMENT ALSO NEEDS INVESTIGATING

A big shot who owed somebody $50,000 could make a deal to put that creditor on the company's pay roll a couple of years at $25,000 a year and make the investors pay off his private debt.

I don't think the S. E. C. would let a big corporation doing business on money borrowed from the people maintain one or more company yachts for the pleasure of the executives, even though they pretended to concentrate and work better at sea, away from the telephone and all.

Before I decide whether to lend you some money on these savings bonds, suppose you get yourself inspected according to the same requirements that are applied to private operators. Being of the Government yourself you should be the last one to refuse to meet conditions which are held to be correct and ethical for other borrowers, and even if you hold that the Government, by reason of its authority to tax, is in a better position to extend itself, you can't honestly say that a government has any more right than a private concern to toss investors' money around to its personal and political friends.

ANY NEPOTISM, MR. MORGENTHAU?

Well, what about the pay rolls of your concern? Are there any employees on the rolls there in Washington and in bureaus around the country who were taken on merely because they were related to somebody or worked for somebody's election or wrote flattering pieces about the administration? Have you gone over the pay rolls lately and checked each man and woman to determine what duties they were performing and whether such duties are necessary? It's my money you want to be paying them, you know.

What about your position at the time of proposing this loan? Are you running in the red; and if so, to what extent, and how long have you been running behind, and about when would you say you will be able to turn the corner, and what makes you think so? You know the S. E. C. wouldn't let a private concern borrow money from the public indefinitely just to pay the interest on past issues and thus make a deceptive appearance of soundness.

What about private yachts for the executives? Have Ickes and Hopkins been vacationing off the coast of Florida lately? I don't want to lend you my money to be spent for yachting parties.

THE ANSWER IS NO, IF FOR FLORIDA CANAL

And what about that Florida canal? Here you boys are talking about saving $20,000,000 by tightening up a few bureaus, but you still insist on this canal thing at $200,000,000, although the southern half of Florida is afraid it will destroy the fresh-water supply, and the ditch, when dug, would save only a couple of hours sailing time from the Atlantic to the Gulf. Do you think the S. E. C. would let a private company borrow from the people for a comparable folly?

Your note to me just said these bonds were the most widely heralded security in America, which may be true, but I notice that you didn't say what you intended to do with the money. A lender always likes to know that and a borrower usually is willing to tell. If you are intending to spend any money of mine building that ditch for $200,000,000, the answer is no.

Let me hear from you on this, will you, Henry?

Sincerely,

GEORGE SPELVIN, Average American.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the subject of the recent recommendation of the President that the Navy purchase Argentine beef.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Inasmuch as the President has frequently expressed his solicitude for the welfare of the American farmer, his recent statement in substance and to the effect that canned beef produced in Argentina was cheaper and better than American-grown beef and that the Navy should purchase this foreign product, rather than the product of our own farmers, for whose advancement the vast Agriculture Department is maintained and for whose benefit we have appropriated billions of dollars, it is not only pertinent but imperative that we inquire as to the President's acts not matching his words; whether he was really sincere in this recommendation or whether he was—to express it in the language of the street—just "shooting the bull."

If he was not, it might not be amiss to assert that rather than accept this Argentina canned beef we "can the President."

The President has on many occasions previous to this shown his utter disregard of the welfare of our own people as a whole. His Department of Agriculture is putting the Michigan sugar-beet growers out of business. His Department of Labor, with the assistance of his man Murphy, John L. Lewis, the C. I. O. and its communistic allies, through the sit-down strikes, put the brakes on recovery, which was being brought back to Michigan by the motor industry.

This past week the administration has signified its intention, by supporting John L. Lewis in his demand that no one shall dig coal until he becomes a member of the C. I. O., to deprive the American worker of his right to earn a livelihood except under conditions imposed by John L. Lewis.

Hence we should not be surprised that the President should act as the advertising manager and sales agent for a foreign product. His head is so high in the clouds, his thoughts are so engrossed by world affairs, that he fails to see and have at heart the interests of his own people.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks on Argentine beef at this point in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of beef.

Mr. RAYBURN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in deference to my friend from Colorado, I think all Members can speak for themselves, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 6260) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. POWERS. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies, and the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. POWERS moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with amendments reducing the total amount of the bill $50,000,000.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to recommit undertakes to do indirectly what cannot be done directly.

The amount carried in this bill, with these amendments, totals $305,000,000. Part of it is for the Panama Canal, part for cemeterial expense, part for the Signal Corps and Alaskan Communications Commission, part for rivers and harbors, part for flood control, and part for the United States Soldiers' Home. Of the amount of $305,000,000, $277,000,000 is for rivers and harbors and flood control, leaving only $28,000,000 for all of these other governmental activities. A reduction of $50,000,000 would take away a large part of the money carried in the two amendments voted in the House last Wednesday. A motion to recommit to do this cannot be done. This motion to recommit attempts to do indirectly what cannot be done directly. It proposes a second vote on the same propositions that were voted on last Wednesday; therefore is subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state, in connection with the point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi, that the Chair understands the purpose of the motion to recommit, one motion to recommit always being in order after the third reading, is to give to those Members opposed to the bill an opportunity to have an expression of opinion by the House upon their proposition. It is true that under the precedents it is not in order by way of a motion to recommit to propose an amendment to an amendment previously adopted by the House, but the motion now pending does not specifically propose to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to do that. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the motion to recommit in the form here presented is not subject to a point of order.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHORT. According to the language of the motion to recommit, the $50,000,000 could be taken from either rivers and harbors or flood control, or at any other place in the bill.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RANKIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to ask whether or not, if this motion is sustained, they could cut these old soldiers out and take the funds away from them? That is what I want to find out. I want to know what we are voting on.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, the motion is simply to reduce the bill $50,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the rule to be that the House can adopt a motion to recommit with instructions to reduce the amount of the appropriation by $50,000,000, but the committee, if this motion should be adopted, could not report the bill back to the House with an amendment proposing a change in the amendments adopted by the House.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. POWERS) there were—ayes 95, noes 201.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 255, not voting 48, as follows:

Mrs. NORTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentlewoman from New Jersey rise?

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, because of the evident misunderstanding and extraordinary misstatements issued of certain provisions of H. R. 5435 which have arisen over the week end, due to the vicious and unreliable propaganda spread by those who in the first place were opposed to the law, and who now would repeal it if they dared to do so, it has been decided not to call the bill up at this time under suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands embracing the Park Field Military Reservation, Shelby County, Tenn., together with all improvements and equipment thereon, be, and they are hereby, transferred from the control and jurisdiction of the War Department to the control and jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture of the United States is authorized to supervise, control, and direct the development and administration of the said lands, improvements, and equipment pursuant to the powers, functions, and duties heretofore vested in him by Executive Order No. 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order No. 7557 of February 19, 1937.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SAN CARLOS APACHE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 18, authorizing payment to the San Carlos Apache Indians for the lands ceded by them in the agreement of February 25, 1896, ratified by the act of June 10, 1896, and reopening such lands to mineral entry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Bureau of the Budget said that these Indians are entitled to $33,725. The bill calls for $277,966.37. As far as I am concerned, if the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] wants to accept the figures of the Bureau of the Budget and will accept an amendment which I will offer, I will not object to the passage of the bill. Otherwise I will object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The Department favored the bill as reported by the committee. The Indian Affairs Committee carefully considered this bill and by a unanimous vote favorably reported it. I am somewhat surprised to find the gentleman from Missouri objecting to this meritorious bill which the Department of the Interior favors and which was unanimously approved by the Indian Affairs Committee after thorough investigation.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say that I have objected to this bill for several years, and I have tried to get those interested to accept the figures of the Bureau of the Budget. Now let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, whenever you are going to follow the Department of the Interior or its Bureau of Indian Affairs in connection with Indian legislation, then the doors of the Treasury are wide open.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. We do not rubber stamp the Bureau of the Budget. We consider bills on their merits. The committee considered this bill and unanimously reported it out. If the gentleman wants to object, we cannot stop him.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman from Arizona accept my amendment?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I will accept it with this understanding: This is an involved case. The amount in this bill to be paid was $1.25 per acre, which would amount to $277,966.37. The $33,725 indicated by the gentleman from Missouri will merely buy part of it at $1.25 per acre, but it is understood that this bill, with or without this amendment, will return to public domain and open up the entire area for mineral entry, except what has become private property. With that understanding I will accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not going to agree to any such suggestion as that. I am only accepting what the Bureau of the Budget says. The Bureau of the Budget says this:

The Budget recommends payment for such lands at $1.25 per acre which would amount to the sum $33,725.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In accepting this proposed amendment to the bill as it stands, it will simply mean that the Indians will be paid less than $1.25 an acre, which I am reluctant to agree to, but I do want this matter in dispute for so many years to be cleared up.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Arizona is in a very embarrassing position. I do not think the Bureau of the Budget, under the Constitution, has legislative power. In order to protect the gentleman and the committee reporting the bill, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

WAPATO SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 54, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3824, to provide funds for cooperation with Wapato School District No. 54, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MARKETING AGREEMENTS UNDER AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4539, to extend the time during which orders and marketing agreements under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, may be applicable to hops.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

TO AMEND SECTION 344 (H) OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5911, to amend subsection (h) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, although this bill is about to be passed over without prejudice, I nevertheless desire to make some comment upon the effect which this legislation would have should it be enacted into law. I feel that the Members should understand more fully what this bill proposes to do before allowing the bill to pass without some discussion.

The bill H. R. 5911 further amends subsection (h) of section 344 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, to provide that payments to any producer would be made upon the basis of his original allotment even though he released a portion of his allotment to another producer under the so-called "frozen" acreage amendment to section 344 (h). In other words, it is proposed that the original allottee would receive the same consideration with respect to parity and agricultural conservation payments as if he had not transferred any portion of his allotment. This amendment also provides "that the recipient of the portion of the allotment transferred shall receive such acres with the understanding that he will not receive conservation or parity payments upon them." The latter provision is not specifically included in that part of S. 2052 concerning this subject.

The Price Adjustment Act of 1938 provides that payments thereunder shall be made upon the normal yield of the farm and the acreage allotment, and shall be made with respect to a farm only in the event that the acreage planted for harvest on the farm is not in excess of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity. By the expression "the farm-acreage allotment established for the commodity under the 1939 agricultural conservation program" it is believed that the Congress meant the final acreage allotment established for the farm. It has been considered by the Department, therefore, that a producer who received an original allotment of 100 acres by signifying his intention to release, under the provisions of section 344 (h), 50 acres of such allotment actually receives a final allotment of only 50 acres for cotton for the applicable year.

The amendment would necessitate the establishment of two cotton acreage allotments for each farm involved in a transfer of acreage allotment in accordance with the "frozen" acreage amendment. One of the cotton acreage allotments would be used as a basis for payment under the agricultural conservation program and the price adjustment payment program. It should be noted that if such acreage allotment is exceeded no payment could be made in accordance with the Price Adjustment Act of 1938. The other cotton acreage allotment would be used for the purposes of planting, marketing quotas, and deductions under the agricultural conservation program.

Some of the more important difficulties which would result if this amendment is enacted are as follows:

First. It would be necessary to explain to producers releasing cotton acreage why their cotton acreage allotment may be knowingly overplanted or why there may be deductions from their conservation payments for planting an acreage less than the acreage upon which the conservation payment is based. Under the present program payments and deductions are based upon only one acreage allotment figure.

Second. It would be necessary to explain to producers who receive additional allotments why they would not be entitled to an additional payment. The division of payments to interested producers on the farm is based upon each interested person's proportionate share of the planted acreage. The question would likely arise with respect to which producer on the farm planted the additional acreage allotment upon which no payment would be made.

Third. When producers release all or a portion of their cotton acreage allotment many request an increase in their general crop acreage allotment so that their farm operations may be kept in balance. Since some of the "frozen" acreage will be released in the commercial grain and feed crop area, there would be a duplication of payments if the producer should be paid on the "frozen" cotton acreage released and at the same time should receive payment for planting the same acreage in general crops.

Fourth. The necessity of computing two cotton acreage allotments on each cotton farm and revising the general crop acreage allotments for such farms may cause considerable difficulty on the part of both county and State offices in determining that the sum of the allotments for all farms does not exceed the maximum allotment to the county for the purposes of (1) the 1939 agricultural conservation program, (2) the 1939 marketing quota, (3) the 1939 general crop acreage allotment, and (4) the 1939 total soil-depleting acreage allotment.

Fifth. The determination of two cotton acreage allotments for each farm involved in a transfer of allotments would result in widespread confusion among the operators of the farms involved and would increase the expenses in administering the program.

NONSUBSIDIZED VESSEL CONSTRUCTION

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5756, to amend section 509 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RUTHERFORD, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. RICH objected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentlemen withhold their objections in order that I may make a statement?

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is simply to place persons who desire to secure money for the construction of ships to operate in domestic and foreign commerce, and who do not ask for a subsidy, in identically the same position as the law has already placed those who apply for the construction of ships and ask for a subsidy. In other words, the sole purpose of this bill is to reduce the cash payment in accordance with exactly the same provisions that have been made for others asking for subsidies.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does this bill provide that the Government shall pay a subsidy to these people who went ahead themselves and did not arrange for the subsidy to start with?

Mr. BLAND. Not at all. This covers the case of persons who desire to get money to aid in the building of their ships on the premise of a cash-down payment and 20 years' amortization. We have already provided this in the case of those who ask for a subsidy that substantially the same cash payment shall be made. By this bill we would extend to those who do not ask for a subsidy the benefit we have already given those who do.

To provide an example, I may state that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN] has constituents who are ready to go ahead and make their contracts. They do not intend to ask for a subsidy. Should national-defense features be incorporated in the ships, of course, they would be paid for by the Government, as in any other case; but the parties in question are asking for neither operating differential nor construction differential. I ask the gentleman from Alabama if this is not correct.

Mr. BOYKIN. That is absolutely correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMPSON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 509 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (52 Stat. 959; U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 1159), is amended as follows:

(1) By amending the second sentence thereof to read as follows: "If such application is approved by the Commission, the vessel may be constructed under the terms and conditions of this title, but no construction-differential subsidy shall be allowed."; and

(2) By amending so much of the fourth sentence thereof as precedes the first semicolon therein to read as follows: "In case the vessel is designed to be of not less than 3,000 gross tons and to be capable of a sustained speed of not less than 14 knots, the applicant shall be required to pay the Commission not less than 12½ percent of the cost of such vessel, and in the case of any other vessel the applicant shall be required to pay the Commission not less than 25 percent of the cost of such vessel (excluding from such cost, in either case, the cost of national-defense features);".

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, at the end of line 3 and the beginning of line 4, strike out the words "three thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "thirty-five hundred."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Were not three objections made to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The record shows three objections were made to the bill, but the gentleman from Virginia asked the gentlemen objecting to withhold their objections to permit him to make a statement with reference to the bill. Thereupon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RUTHERFORD] withheld his objection and the gentleman from Virginia made his statement. The Chair then asked if there were objections. One objection was heard. Three objections are required to stop consideration of the bill.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PACIFIC NORTHWEST BOXED APPLES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1096, to amend section 8c of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, to make its provisions applicable to Pacific Northwest boxed apples.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection to permit me to make a statement? I am sure if the gentleman understands the bill he will not object.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, this bill applies only to the three specific Northwest States—Washington, Oregon, and Idaho—in reference to apple production. The growers of every other agricultural commodity are permitted to enter into agreements, but the growers of apples are prohibited to do so. Our growers feel that if they were allowed to enter into such agreements as growers of other agricultural products are they could save what is to them a bad situation in the undercutting of prices between the individual growers. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. It affects merely the three Northwest States.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman what effect the Sherman Antitrust Act will have on such agreements?

Mr. LEAVY. I understand these agreements are entirely outside the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman being a lawyer and a judge, and knowing the laws, I wondered why he would want such a bill, and what would be the difference between such a bill and one permitting manufacturers to establish contracts to maintain prices.

Mr. LEAVY. If time permitted, I could answer the gentleman I think in a manner that would satisfy him.

I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw his objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman renews his objection. The Clerk will call the next bill.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 247, to provide minimum national allotments for cotton.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR WHEAT

The Clerk called the next resolution, House Joint Resolution 248, to provide minimum national allotments for wheat.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, S. 198, for the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3, subsection b, of the act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 936, 939, c. 229; U. S. Code, title 28, sec. 288 b), be amended so as to read as follows:

"(b) In any case in the Court of Claims, including those begun under section 180 of the Judicial Code, it shall be competent for the Supreme Court, upon the petition of either party, whether Government or claimant, to require, by certiorari, that the cause be certified to it for review and determination of all errors assigned, with the same power and authority, and with like effect, as if the cause had been brought there by appeal. In such event, the Court of Claims shall include in the papers certified by it the findings of fact, the conclusions of law, and the judgment or decree, as well as such other parts of the record as are material to the errors assigned, to be settled by the court.

"The Court of Claims shall promulgate rules to govern the preparation of such record in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"In such cases the Supreme Court shall have authority to review, in addition to other questions of law, errors assigned to the effect that there is a lack of substantial evidence to sustain a finding of fact; that an ultimate finding or findings are not sustained by the findings of evidentiary or primary facts; or that there is a failure to make any finding of fact on a material issue."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 2567) was laid on the table.

SALE OF CARSON CITY (NEV.) MINT SITE AND BUILDING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5328, authorizing sale of old Carson City (Nev.) Mint site and building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, S. 2050, for the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the old Carson City (Nev.) Mint site and building may be sold under the provisions of the act of August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 800; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 345b), or the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 885; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 304a), notwithstanding Joint Resolution No. 18 of February 23, 1865 (13 Stat. 569), providing that said site shall be reserved from public sale and shall remain the property of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 5328) was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO ACCEPT REAL ESTATE DEVISED BY THE LATE LIZZIE BECK, OF MENA, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5836, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept real estate devised to the United States by the late Lizzie Beck, of Mena, Ark., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill, S. 2244, for the House bill.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States the real estate devised to the United States by the late Lizzie Beck, of Mena, Ark., and to deal with the same in the manner provided by the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 885; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 304a), or the act of August 26, 1935 (49 Stat. 800; U. S. C., title 40, sec. 345b).

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 5836) was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING PRESIDENT TO RENDER CLOSER AND MORE EFFECTIVE THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN AMERICAN REPUBLICS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5835, to authorize the President to render closer and more effective the relationship between the American republics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire whether this bill proposes a raid of $500,000 on the American Treasury so that South American dictator countries will be able to sell more canned bully beef in America?

Mr. BLOOM. This has nothing to do with that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does this bill provide a half million dollar handout from the Federal Treasury to the South American countries?

Mr. BLOOM. No. It has nothing to do with that at all. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin it is an entirely different thing. It is absolutely divorced from any other legislation that we have along this line.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. BLOOM. If the gentleman will read the report, he will see it provides for closer relationship between the South American countries and the United States. That is all there is to it. There is no appropriation of any kind involved. If the gentleman will read this paragraph of the report, he will find this sentence:

All that is contemplated at this time is a general advisory committee, and in addition, special advisory committees on exchange of students, professors, books, library translations, and educational films.

That is all.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman states "at this time." What does it provide for some other time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COOS BAY WAGON ROAD GRANT LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2317, relating to the disposition of funds derived from the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an identical Senate bill, S. 242, may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if the Senate bill conforms to the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. COSTELLO. The language of the Senate bill is identical with that of the House bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the fiscal year next following the date of the passage of this act, not to exceed 75 percent of the receipts derived in any one year from the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands in Oregon and deposited in the special fund in the Treasury created by the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1179), and designated "The Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund" shall be paid annually, in lieu of taxes, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, to the treasurers of Coos and Douglas Counties according to the ratio that the total assessed valuation of the reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, belonging to the United States, in each of said counties bears to the total assessed valuation of all said lands in those counties, to be used for the purposes mentioned in said act: Provided, That until such time as the general fund of the Treasury of the United States shall have been fully reimbursed by Douglas County for expenditures which were made charges against the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund by section 5 of the act of February 26, 1919, said Douglas County shall be entitled to receive only 50 percent of the amount to which it would otherwise be entitled under this act: Provided further, That prior to making any payment under this authorization an appraisal of the land and timber thereon shall be made, within 6 months after the passage of this act, by a committee to consist of a representative of the Secretary of the Interior, one representative for the two counties interested, and a third person satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and the county officials, but who shall not be an employee of the United States nor a resident of, nor a property owner in, either Coos or Douglas County. Upon appraisal thereof, the land and timber thereon shall be assessed as are other similar properties within the respective counties, and payments hereunder in lieu of taxes shall be computed by applying the same rates of taxation as are applied to privately owned property of similar character in such counties.

SEC. 2. Appraisals of the land and timber thereon shall be made, in the manner prescribed in section 1 hereof, not less frequently than once in each 10-year period, and the amounts due hereunder in any year shall be computed as specified in section 1 of this act upon the basis of the last appraisement. The expenses of making the appraisements provided for in this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, from that portion of the receipts derived from such lands and timber payable to the counties and shall be deducted from any amount due said counties.

SEC. 3. If, during any one year, 75 percent of the receipts are insufficient fully to meet the payments due the counties hereunder, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, may pay an additional sum from any surplus of 75 percent of prior year receipts: Provided, however, That in no event shall the aggregate of payments during any 10-year period commencing with the period beginning July 1, 1940, exceed 75 percent of the receipts deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund for such period: Provided further, That at the end of each 10-year period, any balance of the 75 percent not required for payments to the counties shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 4. Not to exceed 25 percent of the annual receipts shall be available, in such amounts as the Congress shall from time to time appropriate for the administration of the act of August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 874), insofar as it applies to the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands. Any balance not used for administrative purposes shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 5. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 2317) was laid on the table.

FORT NIAGARA MILITARY RESERVATION, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5436, to authorize the grant of a sewer right-of-way and operation of sewage-treatment plant on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., by the village of Youngstown, N. Y.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant to the village of Youngstown, Niagara County, N. Y., a municipal corporation, for a term of 50 years, an easement for right-of-way for a sewer line to be constructed by said village on the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., from said village to a sewage-treatment plant to be constructed by the Secretary of War on said reservation, and to contract therein for the operating and maintenance of said plant by the village for the treatment of sewage of said post and the village, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War deems advisable, the village's share of the cost of operation and maintenance to be $600 per annum for a population of 1,000 or less and an additional 60 cents per capita per annum over and above said thousand.

SEC. 2. That said easement shall not be granted until the Legislature of the State of New York shall have first provided by appropriate legislation that the granting of the easement shall not impair or invalidate any of the rights, title, or privileges granted to the United States pursuant to the act of the Legislature of New York passed April 21, 1840 (New York Laws, 1840, ch. 155, p. 113).

SEC. 3. That the act of May 31, 1938 (52 Stat. 592), to authorize the Secretary of War to lease to the village of Youngstown, N. Y., a portion of the Fort Niagara Military Reservation, N. Y., be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $60,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I offer two amendments, which conform to the recommendations of the War Department in a favorable report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. ANDREWS:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "therein" and insert in lieu thereof the words "from time to time."

Page 2, line 2, after the word "advisable", change the comma to a period and strike out the balance of section 1.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WESTERN OR OLD SETTLER CHEROKEES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4498, for the relief of the Western or Old Settler Cherokees, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

INDIANS ALLOTTED ON THE QUINAIELT RESERVATION, STATE OF WASHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2654, authorizing the payment of necessary expenses incurred by certain Indians allotted on the Quinaielt Reservation, State of Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like the RECORD to show there is a great deal of merit to the contention of the attorneys that they should be paid for their services in connection with this matter, but I insist this is not the way they should be paid. Under the terms of this bill the taxpayers of the United States would be required to make the payments. The attorneys can be paid if the Secretary of the Interior will allot the necessary amount of land so it can be sold and the attorneys receive the money, to which I admit they are entitled. The attorneys, I understand, have liens on this property and it never can be sold until the liens are released and the claims satisfied. Therefore, I believe it is the duty of the Department of the Interior, instead of recommending the Congress of the United States take this money out of the Treasury, to sell sufficient land or timber and then settle the attorneys' bill. If it requires additional legislation to enable the Secretary to sell the land or timber, I will support it; but it is wrong to ask us to require the taxpayers to pay the attorneys, regardless of how meritorious their claim is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

PAPAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, ARIZ.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5758, to add certain lands to the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona what this bill does?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. This bill provides something over $5,000 to buy 320 acres of land adjoining the Papago Indian Reservation in Arizona, as that piece of land has developed water. The Papago Indians are a stock-raising people and they are in a very dry, desert country. They sadly need this additional water supply.

Mr. RICH. As the gentleman knows, we have appropriated $500,000 in the Interior appropriation bill for the purpose of buying lands for Indians. Why cannot this land be acquired under that act?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is a blanket appropriation for Indians all over the country and no doubt has been planned to be spent otherwise. I do not know that the Papago Indians would be entitled to come in or would have a look-in under that act. If I could be assured that the right sum is so earmarked, that would do.

Mr. RICH. It is to buy lands for Indian reservations in every State.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The Secretary of Commerce may, in his discretion, remit or mitigate any penalty imposed under this paragraph."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "excepted." " and insert the word "excepted."

"(c) This act shall not apply to merchant vessels that are being towed and which are carrying neither cargo nor passengers."

It shall be the duty of the Board to recommend for retirement such enlisted men of the Coast Guard, who have 20 or more years of service, whom the Board determines, in its discretion, should be retired from active service. The recommendations of the Board shall be transmitted to the Commandant for final action. If the Commandant shall approve the recommendations of the Board, the enlisted man concerned shall be notified thereof in writing, and any enlisted man who, within 30 days after receipt of such notification, files with the Commandant a written protest of the action taken by the Board in his case, shall not be retired involuntarily under this act unless a subsequent annual Board again determines in its discretion, that such enlisted man should be retired and so recommends, in which case such enlisted man may, upon approval by the Commandant, be retired from active service with retired pay as prescribed by section 5 hereof. At the expiration of 30 days after receipt by an enlisted man of notice as aforesaid, in the event that no such protest is filed by him within the period prescribed, such enlisted man may, upon approval by the Commandant, be retired from service with retired pay as prescribed by section 5 hereof. If the Commandant shall disapprove any recommendation of the Board, the enlisted man concerned shall retain his status in the Coast Guard to the same extent as if his case had not been considered.

SEC. 2. An enlisted man of the Coast Guard who has 20 or more years of service may, upon suitable application to and approval by the Commandant, be retired from active service with retired pay as prescribed by section 5 hereof.

SEC. 3. The total number of enlisted men who may be retired in any one fiscal year under sections 1 and 2 of this act shall not exceed the whole number nearest to 1 percent of the total enlisted force of the Coast Guard on the active list as of January 1 of such year, to be divided in such proportion between retirements under sections 1 and 2 of this act as may be determined by the Commandant.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to call any enlisted man who has been retired pursuant to this act into active service for such duty as he may be able to perform. While so employed such enlisted man shall receive full pay, allowances, and benefits authorized by law, shall be eligible for promotion, and shall be entitled to the benefits of continuous service for such rank and for such length of time as he is or has been employed in active service, and when relieved of active service shall retain upon the retired list the rank and service held by him at the time of such relief, with pay and such increases as are prescribed in section 5 of this act.

SEC. 5. The annual rate of pay of any enlisted man retired under this act shall be 2½ percent of the sum of his base pay and all permanent additions thereto at the time of his retirement, multiplied by the number of years of his service: Provided, That any enlisted man retired under this act who has been cited for extraordinary heroism in line of duty, or whose average marks in conduct during his service in the Coast Guard shall be not less than 97½ percent of the maximum, shall be entitled to have his retired pay increased by an amount equal to 10 percent of the sum of his base pay and all permanent additions thereto at the time of his retirement: Provided further, That the retired pay of any enlisted man retired under this act shall not in any case exceed 75 percent of the sum of his base pay and all permanent additions thereto at the time of his retirement: And provided further, That the determination of the Secretary of the Treasury as to what constitutes extraordinary heroism for the purpose of this section shall be final and conclusive.

SEC. 6. (a) The provisions of this act shall be supplementary to, but shall not be construed to limit or supersede, existing laws relating to the retirement of enlisted personnel of the Coast Guard.

(b) The Commandant may prescribe such regulations which shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Treasury, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 18, after the word "from", insert the word "active."

Page 3, line 11, after the word "The", strike out "Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "Commandant."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). At this point the present occupant of the chair will be granted unanimous consent to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my deep appreciation to the House for its action in passing this bill by unanimous consent. Three similar bills were introduced in the House by Mr. BARDEN, of North Carolina; Mr. O'LEARY, of New York; and me. It has had widespread interest on both sides of the House, and especially do I desire to thank for their efforts the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. BLAND, of Virginia; Mr. HART, of New Jersey; Mr. GIFFORD, of Massachusetts; Mr. BREWSTER and Mr. OLIVER, of Maine; Mr. CLARK, of North Carolina; Mr. MCMILLAN, of South Carolina; Mr. PACE, of Georgia; and Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. PETERSON, of Florida, as well as others who have shown great interest in this legislation.

In previous sessions of Congress bills seeking the same objective met with the disapproval of the Coast Guard, the Treasury Department, and the Bureau of the Budget. For that reason Mr. BLAND, of Virginia, and I refused to have anything to do with those measures, because we knew it would be futile and we felt that we would be doing the surfmen in the Coast Guard a great disservice by advocating something when there was no chance of it becoming a law. About a year ago we asked the Treasury Department to try to work out a bill that would meet all the objections, and the bill we have just passed is the result of that conference.

There is no finer or nobler service on earth than the Coast Guard. Its long and distinguished record has been filled with brave and heroic acts and it has the respect and admiration of the people of the country. This bill seeks in a small way to give those men who have served as surfmen for as long as 20 years an optional retirement patterned somewhat on the law now in effect concerning the Navy. Its cost for the first 12 years will be nominal, and over a period of 20 years there will actually be a saving over the present system.

I congratulate the surfmen in the Coast Guard over this action of Congress, and, knowing them as I do from a long and close association with them, I know how deeply it is appreciated by them. While the bill does not contain everything that we might desire, it is a forward step and is justly deserved by this fine Service.

CONSENT CALENDAR

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER, GARRISON, N. DAK.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 542, to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a toll bridge or a free bridge? In the absence of an explanation, I will have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. That is only an amendment. The bridge was authorized last year. The two cities will have to agree as to what kind of a bridge it is. No one knows what will be done. It is only an authorization. This simply meets a new location that the engineers recommended over the bill last year. The authorization was granted last year, but this is a new location which they recommend. It is up to the two cities. It is going to be a free bridge if it is built at all.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is this bridge going to be a publicly constructed bridge, or are private toll-bridge speculators and racketeers going to get this franchise and make a fortune at the expense of the general public?

Mr. GEHRMANN. No. It will be done by the cities. There is no question about that.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in view of that statement, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Garrison, N. Dak., authorized to be built by the State of North Dakota by the act of Congress approved February 10, 1932, and heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved February 14, 1933, June 12, 1934, May 24, 1935, June 5, 1936, and June 16, 1938, are hereby further extended 2 and 4 years, respectively, from June 12, 1938.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Port Authority of Duluth, Minn., and the Harbor Commission of Superior, Wis., to construct a highway bridge across the St. Louis River from Rice's Point in Duluth, Minn., to Superior in Wisconsin," approved June 30, 1938, is amended by striking out "to the vicinity of the lower end of Banks Avenue extended to the shore line in Superior, Wis.," and inserting in lieu thereof "to such point in Superior, Wis., as the Harbor Commission of Superior shall designate."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

R. 4499, authorizing the county of Gallatin, State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., to a point opposite thereto in the county of Union, State of Kentucky.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. The said county of Gallatin, in the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, and the cost of the acquisition of any ferries as hereinabove provided, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "Illinois", strike out the remainder of the line.

Dak., and Crookston, Minn.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

EXCLUSION FROM UNITED STATES OF PERSONS COVICTED OF DESERTION WHEN UNITED STATES WAS AT WAR

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 156 and I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6035.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to return to Calendar No. 156?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the Bergdoll bill?

Mr. HARNESS. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6035?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person heretofore convicted of desertion from the military or naval forces of the United States, while the United States was at war, and who has heretofore proceeded to any foreign country to escape punishment for such offense, shall be deemed to have voluntarily relinquished and forfeited all rights and privileges of American citizenship as well as the right to become an American citizen, and shall not be readmitted into the United States, either temporarily or permanently, or for any purpose whatsoever.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 1, line 11, after the word "permanently", strike out the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar Nos. 145 and 146. These bills were objected to by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can make his request as to only one bill at a time.

The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 145. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from South Dakota assure the House that members of the committee reporting the bill will thoroughly explain it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I believe they will. I have talked to the chairman of the committee, and I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] at this time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the intention, if this bill is enacted, to do something to help all the cotton farmers of the South and prohibit the importation of Indian cotton?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the passage of this legislation will result in the sale of more American cotton and wheat and less foreign cotton and wheat, I shall not object.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is correct in judging the purpose of the bill. The present Farm Act sets up a formula for determining the annual acreage allotments on cotton and wheat. These two bills seek to establish a floor under which cotton and wheat acreages will not be permitted to go. They seek to protect the farmers against an acreage restriction that might destroy many of them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no particular objection to returning to the bill, but I think, in fairness to the gentleman from South Dakota, I should advise him that I will ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice and not considered on the Consent Calendar because it involves a matter of agricultural policy. I am firmly opposed to the adoption of agricultural policies by unanimous consent. In the next couple of weeks in the ordinary course of events the Committee on Agriculture will have the call on Calendar Wednesday, and I think we should not be put in the position of adopting an agricultural policy by unanimous consent without having some debate on it.

I believe I know the purposes of this act. If I do, I am not so sure but what I am opposed to it. I do not want to prejudice the bill by objecting to it. I do want consideration given to this bill and the next bill under a rule, or under such other circumstances as will afford a hearing to those who might want to discuss it. For this reason I and others have made the same request in respect to all these bills on the calendar today that have to do with agricultural policy—that they be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that these bills would simply continue the provisions that are already effective this year; that is, those minimum limits below which the quota cannot be placed or made effective for 1 year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think I understand what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This would make them permanent as a bottom level, that is all. It does not in any way change the basic nature of the Farm Act. I do not see why there should be any objection to continuing that as a policy. If something like this is not passed a condition might be brought about that would run these quotas so low as to cause great hardship.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not agree with the gentleman in that respect. We shall still have control of the situation and to regulate cotton acreage regardless of whether this bill is passed or not. If this be the case, if we are going to be denied any further consideration of this bill other than what can be had in these few minutes, then I will surely object to it to force consideration.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, let me state the reason for having this matter enacted at this session. Congress will probably adjourn sometime this summer. The vote on the cotton program by the farmers is usually had in December, when we are not here. I feel as to both cotton and wheat that it is important that this matter be fixed before we adjourn.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that many of us who have not perhaps paid too much attention to cotton in years gone by have been giving a great deal of thought to it lately. I would like to take the floor some time to express my own thoughts on cotton, and to express what I believe were the fundamental reasons necessitating these allotments. I think it might be interesting to start a discussion and thresh out this whole thing, because we surely have not determined the fundamental reason why it is necessary to make these allotments, and I think we should give some study to it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The passage or failure of passage of these bills will not interfere with the gentleman's right to express his opinion either on this or any other issue connected with agriculture.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The mere fact that we may have made one mistake does not obligate us to continue to make them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I say to the gentleman that this does not affect the policy he is talking about except perhaps to make it less burdensome, if it may be termed a burden, on those who go along on the soil-conservation program. It simply puts a limit beyond which the policy may not go; in other words, it softens the policy rather than expands it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Texas a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman seems to feel that we should not agree to do things for the farmers of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman is talking. We want to make it possible for the farmers to have an even break in this country.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me the legislation that it was said was necessary to help the farmers of this country in the past few years has not been forthcoming by an act of Congress. As a matter of fact, we have not helped the farmers.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. How have you helped the cotton farmers when we are permitting the price of cotton to be increased so high we cannot sell it to foreign countries?

Mr. JONES of Texas. We can sell it if we could find somebody that has the money to buy it.

Mr. RICH. But you cannot.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The Chair asked, in answer to my unanimous-consent request, if there was objection. I did not hear any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY] objected to the gentleman's request to return to the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a memorial of the Florida State Legislature.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two brief editorials on the Chamber of Commerce convention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by the Honorable Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Christian Science Monitor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims may have permission to sit during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. A few days ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] notified the House and gave me personal notice that he was going to speak today for 1 hour on reorganization plan No. II. I am compelled to attend a very important meeting down at the War Department in a few minutes, and for this reason may I say to the gentleman I am very regretful that I will not hear his very fine speech.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is very kind of the gentleman.

Mr. WARREN. But may I add one thing? The last time the gentleman spoke he was accorded the unusual privilege by the House to speak for over the customary hour. He delivered, as he always does, a very entertaining and enlightening address. The first 55 minutes of that hour he used in a very fine analysis of the bill, and I think he had all of the Members of the House believing he was going to support the plan. Then in true justice of the peace fashion, in the last 5 minutes he decided in favor of the plaintiff and voted accordingly. I hope, now that the Senate has already acted, the gentleman will certainly approve of plan No. II.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. II

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen of the House, you souls of rare fortitude who do me honor to stay here this afternoon while you might be engaged in far more pleasant and felicitous pursuits, let me say at the outset that I do want to discuss the reorganization plan which was approved by the Senate of the United States in a period of about 6 minutes, as nearly as I could estimate by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is a very clear and patent violation of the rules of the House for anyone to criticize or overtly comment upon the actions of another body. There is, of course, no restriction or inhibition on thinking, so I shall not violate the rules of the House, but I have been doing some thinking since the reorganization plan received approval.

In the course of my remarks I wish to say something this afternoon also on the subject of Argentine beef, because, oddly enough, it figures in very beautifully in connection with reorganization plan No. II.

It is estimated that this plan will save about $1,250,000, and it applies to an aggregate of $25,000,000 in salaries or wages. The President assures us there will be no other plan at this session of Congress. I entertain a sense of regret that this plan was passed so quickly. Certainly it could not have been examined by Members of another body in the space from May 9, when the message came to the Congress, until May 12, when the resolution of disaffirmance was acted on in another body. I have been devoting myself to it for the last 3 or 4 days almost exclusively and thought that it was a rather herculean task. So it is rather interesting to pick up the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and observe that someone says there, "Of course, everybody is familiar with it." There in the part that is not blocked out as indicated on page 5502 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for May 12 is how the reorganization plan went through another body. You go back and read the RECORD. I had to spend an hour to find it in the RECORD. It indicates pretty well what attention was paid to it by the members of another body.

You cannot pass off these reorganization matters so lightly, as a matter of fact, because there is more than usually meets the eye. I see in this last plan lots of good things, I will say to my distinguished friend from Missouri, who is the able chairman of our committee. I see a number of things that are illogical, and then I see one or two things that, in my judgment, are not in the public interest, and to those I shall address the major portion of my remarks this afternoon.

The first thing I want to call to your attention under the reorganization plan is the transfer of the functions of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce to the State Department, also the transfer of the functions of the Agricultural Foreign Service to the State Department. It is rather singular that we should concentrate our foreign-trade activities entirely in that department of government which is charged with the diplomatic negotiations for the country; and the one thing that will result, inevitably result, and it is the reason why, in my judgment, the State Department has been making this drive, is to predicate the considerations of foreign trade upon the ground of diplomacy and international politics. The very first evidence that we have of it is the letter the Secretary of State sent to the President advising him to buy this foreign Argentine beef for the Navy.

There are some exhibits that I can take from the current press to indicate that that is the case. First, let me show you a telegram that must have come to almost every Member, signed by Cathrine Curtis, national director of Women Investors in America, Inc., protesting the fact that this consolidation of our Foreign Service should be made in the State Department for the very good reason that it is going to mix diplomacy and foreign trade.

We heard a great deal about "dollar diplomacy" some years ago, and I am wondering whether we are going to see a revival of that kind of philosophy, which, in my judgment, is inimical to the best interests of this country; yet how are you going to escape it when all the functions that have been discharged by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce are now vested in the Department of State? We have been for years—in fact, for 25 years—building up that arm so we could develop foreign trade, foreign contacts, and marketing undertakings in foreign countries everywhere, and almost overnight, by reorganization plan No. II, all that work is undone. I do not say that Harry Hopkins would do a better job than the Secretary of State, but I am of the opinion, as we evaluate the effect of the reciprocal-trade agreements, that the job could not have been a lot worse in the interest of many lines of endeavor in this country and in the interest of American agriculture. But now all the eggs are in one basket and so diplomacy and international politics shall be mixed up with our efforts to revive and rehabilitate some semblance of substantial foreign trade.

I do not share all the confidence that a great many people have in the trade efficacy of the State Department. In the United States Daily, which appeared this morning on the Members' desks, was this little item to show that all the prescience and all the wisdom is not compounded in the State Department. Under "Washington Whispers," which you can read, you will find this statement:

> Important officials in the State Department are quietly grumbling over what they described as "sensationalized" reports coming to the White House from at least one of this country's Ambassadors in Europe. The dope is that American diplomats have been making some terribly bad guesses and have been caught badly off guard in recent diplomatic maneuvers.

If they have been caught off guard in some of these maneuvers, what assurance have we that they will not be caught off guard in some of the trade maneuvers that are necessary for this country?

Another thing:

> Word is going the inside rounds that American diplomats abroad had a hand in arranging a radio talk by the Duke of Windsor as part of the plan for mobilizing public sentiment against war.

Now, if our State Department officials are out playing with the Duke of Windsor to bring about an international radio speech in the field of international diplomacy, I wonder how safe they will be to be entrusted with all of the foreign trade relations of this country? This question, in my judgment, can be ended with a question mark.

One other item from the United States Daily:

> The word "blackmail" is being used by very responsible and excellently informed Government officials to describe the tactics being employed by a few Latin-American nations to tap the United States Treasury for loans. The technique is said to be to suggest that the loan will be needed to be forthcoming or else concessions will be made to Germany and Italy and Japan. This technique is said to be proving very effective even where past borrowings from this country are in default.

Now, we have made it possible for the State Department, without restriction whatsoever, to employ that kind of technique as they go on pursuing foreign trade for this country. The morning papers have been full of it.

Here is a clipping from the morning Post. There was a dinner at the Willard Hotel last night—I believe it was last night—for the Brazilian Ambassador, and one of the speakers at the dinner was Dr. Maurice S. Sheehy, of a local university, and here is what he is quoted as having said:

> Approving the President's purchase of Argentine beef for the American Navy, Dr. Maurice S. Sheehy, of Catholic University, last night warned that Senate opposition would lead to retaliatory bans by Argentina and drive that country into closer associations with totalitarian nations.

What more proof do we need to show that now there will be an admixture of foreign trade, of diplomacy, of mysticism, of secrecy, of closeted covenants, and of all the things that have been associated with diplomacy, and on that basis the American trade is to be predicated from here on out, as a result of reorganization plan No. 2, that was approved by the Senate in the space of 5 or 6 minutes. They say they knew what was in the plan.

Much more might be said about this matter, but here comes this little incident of Argentine beef that has already been ventilated on the floor this afternoon.

What was the purpose of buying this 48,000 pounds of beef and announcing to the country it was superior and that it was cheaper? Well, when I read that language, I will tell you what I was thinking. I thought of the first Agricultural Adjustment Act in 1933, and I see my friend ANDRESEN, of the House Committee on Agriculture, smile with his eyes over there. I thought of the first effort that was made to raise the price of farm commodities. I thought of dollar devaluation, taking grains of gold out of the dollar so as to make dollars cheaper in order to make prices higher. I thought of the marketing agreements. I thought of all the efforts that had been made, even including the purchase with relief funds of millions of cattle from the drought-stricken areas of the West. I thought of a sustained and consistent program designed to aid and assist the farmers of this country to build up prices, and then I see the ultimate results thrown into the discard when the President of the United States says that we ought to buy 48,000 pounds of beef from the Argentine to satisfy the delicate stomachs of the gobs, because it is cheaper. I wonder what the reaction of the American farmer will be to this? What difference does it make whether it embraces 48,000 pounds or 6,000 pounds or 48,000,000 pounds? The principle is just the same, and the power is now vested in the diplomatic branch of the Government to carry on its efforts to prevent the totalitarian nations from getting into South America, and so we might be buying more beef, we might be buying more oil, and a peculiar kind of nut they produce in South America out of which oleo oil is extracted.

All of these things are within the realm of possibility. I would not be surprised one of these days if they might not conceivably say that we ought to take care of our delicate sailors on the high seas by providing Swiss cheese that comes from Switzerland on the ground that it is cheaper and allegedly better.

And while we are about it, we may as well see that the sailors get Canadian cream in their coffee in the morning upon the theory that it is cheaper, and also that we buy butter from Denmark and New Zealand because it is certainly cheaper. There is the logical and ultimate result of the thing that the President has produced for the country and that the Senate has seen fit not to disavow under reorganization plan No. II. Under that reorganization plan, foreign commerce will be directed now, not from the Department of Commerce, not by the Foreign Service Department of the Department of Agriculture, but by the diplomatic branch of the Government; and so we must reconcile ourselves now to an admixture of diplomacy and butter and beans and bacon and wheat and coffee and all the rest of it, which, in my judgment, is not in the interest of business, agriculture, and the labor of the United States of America.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I take this moment—and it is opportune—to congratulate the speaker and to thank him on my own part as a member of the Reorganization Committee, for his willingness and enthusiastic effort, even though it was futile. I wish to ask the gentleman one or two questions. Has the gentleman found out yet who the wise men were who advised the President and suggested those changes embodied in reorganization plan No. II, or even reorganization plan No. I?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think they were the spat-wearing, tea-drinking alumni of Harvard and Yale who man the State Department, as suggested by Paul Mallon. Mr. Mallon further says:

> Transfer of the Foreign Commerce Bureau to the State Department was especially disheartening to morale. The State Department is regarded as the post graduate frat house for Harvard and Yale—and only the best frats at that. In the Foreign Commerce Bureau are non-spat-wearing, non-tea-drinking business students interested in commerce. Assistant Commerce Secretary Patterson once called them "shirt-sleeve workers" with an implied comparison that was obvious.

Somebody has been pushing it to identify our trade relations with the diplomatic branch of the Government, and now the interests of the American businessman are liable to be sidetracked and sacrificed if they stand in the way of the foreign policy that this country is going to pursue with respect to South America and other foreign nations. I am rather interested to know what the real pressure was behind it.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am also interested to know that. I can recall how for 15 years or something like that in this House—for several years at least—we fought to have this Commerce Department have businessmen in foreign countries soliciting trade. Now they are to be thrown among the spat-wearing, tea-drinking—oh, I wish I could think of the word that I wish to employ; but it is simply poisonous to try to mix these things. We tried so long and so hard to create a businesslike administration. Who advises the President to do this?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In that connection let me read this other paragraph from Mr. Mellon. He says:

> Also businessmen have less confidence in diplomats than in commercial attachés. When the rule requiring them to communicate through the State Department was abandoned in 1937, correspondents picked up 200 percent in the month following.

They got out from under the rule of the State Department with respect to secrecy and closeted negotiations, with the mystery that surrounds it, and as a result, in a single month after that, correspondence on foreign trade and foreign business picked up by 200 percent. The gentleman has his answer, but it is too late to present it now. I add my feeble voice just like Ishmael shouted in the wilderness centuries ago, because the damage has been done. We have conferred upon the gentleman in the White House and the gentlemen who man the Department of State unrestricted authority to tell the American businessman what is going to happen in the field of foreign commerce.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The State Department, with the President, has exclusive right to negotiate reciprocal-trade agreements, and we will now find, as a result of the beef incident, that that is just a foundation for an agreement with Argentina to further cut the duty on beef and other competitive farm commodities, so that those countries who enjoy the benefit of that reduction can ship things into this country.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Precisely. If the Secretary of State believes that best subserves the good-neighbor policy, that is what will be done. There can be no mistake about it in the light of past experience. That is what we are up against.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Another observation: The Department of Commerce in the Bureau of Foreign Commerce has provided Members of Congress and the country with certain statistics and figures on exports and imports into this country.

I assume that particular activity will be turned over to the State Department. What confidence does the gentleman think we might have in these figures after that transfer takes place?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, that is a matter for every gentleman in the House to decide for himself. But let me make this observation before I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts: When they put the skids under George Peek, who was first Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act—and they put the skids under him, make no mistake about it—he finally wound up as chief adviser on foreign trade to the President of the United States. George Peek is a man of vigor. He is a man of discernment. He was a very outstanding businessman. So he threw himself, heart and soul, into the job of devising authentic figures on foreign trade. He went at it with a vengeance and submitted his report. Do you know what else he submitted along with it? A recommendation, as chief adviser on foreign trade, that foreign trade and diplomacy should be divorced, and kept divorced. As a result there was introduced in the Senate by the late lamented Senator James Hamilton Lewis the bill S. 3464 in August 1935. That bill was designed to create a foreign trade board, and for other purposes. In this bill there is a recital "to provide for separate, unified administration of foreign commercial and financial activities of the United States as distinguished from diplomatic and political activities thereof."

George Peek, after a long and detailed investigation, saw the danger. He recommended it to Senator Lewis. That bill was introduced. Nothing was done. It was sidetracked, and today it is all concentrated now in that branch that carries on the diplomacy and international politics of this country, and our foreign trade must accept a position that is subordinate to diplomacy. What a tragic commentary upon reorganization plan No. II.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not know whether the gentleman was on the floor when I stated yesterday that I had heard from very reliable sources that the trade work that was done by some of the consuls had been taken away from them. Everyone knows that in some places there have been no commercial attachés and in those places our consuls have carried on the trade for this country, trying to sell our goods to foreign countries. That work has been taken away from those consuls and given to the diplomats, the reason being that the diplomats handle the reciprocal-trade agreements. I know the gentleman will agree with me that there is small chance in this reorganization plan, under this administration, of our merchants, our farmers, and our people selling their goods to foreign countries.

Mr. DIRKSEN. How much better it would have been if those activities had been reposed in the Department of Commerce, and they had been given extra authority in order to revive and revitalize our foreign trade. The long-headed British and the long-headed businessmen even in Germany do not make that mistake. For instance, this came from the newspaper this morning:

Anglo-Nazi talk on trade will ease tension.
The projected talks date back to the March meeting at Dusseldorf between representatives of the faction of British industries and its German equivalent, Reichsgruppe Industrie.

They do not even care if there is a crisis over there. Oh, no. They never lose sight of trade; they never let diplomacy get mixed up with trade. The long-headed British traders, the German businessmen, even when at each other's throats, do not make that mistake. But now we put our foreign trade in the department of diplomacy, in the field of international politics. Perish the thought!

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, if cookie pushing and trade pushing were synonymous, then it would be perfectly proper to transfer the trade activities over to the diplomats. But a man cannot be putting in his time at pushing cookies and passing tea and expect to promote agreements and commerce.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wonder if the gentleman would not like to have a sentence from Washington's Farewell Address at this point, where he said:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations, have with them as little political connections as possible."

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to submit this question from the standpoint of practical application of the Argentine beef proposition: If you were running a retail grocery store in some city that was very, very friendly to President Roosevelt and his policies, and where you know that your customers are just as friendly as you are, would you not be inclined to capitalize on this particular incident by glorifying what the President had said, putting advertisements up in the windows and on the counters to the effect that "Argentine beef is the best beef in the world. It is recommended by the President of the United States."

Mr. DIRKSEN. What could be sweeter as an advertisement, I would say.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And therefore not only sell beef to the Navy and the Army, but put it into the homes of the people who are on relief and all such places as that. Why not turn all business over to the foreign countries? What do we want any in this country for?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, I must get through with this. I will yield later if the gentleman desires.

There are some items here on which I do not have to spend much time. For instance, the transfer of Foreign Service Building Commission to the State Department. Quite all right. It was under the Department of the Secretary of State always. It has to do with keeping in repair our consular and diplomatic properties in foreign countries, and that is all right.

Transferring the Bureau of Lighthouses from Commerce to the Treasury. Rather singular. You know sometimes the President gets a little obscure in his reasoning. For instance, in this report No. II he transferred the Inland Waterways Corporation to the Department of Commerce on the ground that it was an aid to coordination of transportation. To me the Bureau of Lighthouses is certainly an aid to transportation. I ask, therefore, why it should have been transferred to the Treasury Department in the light of that statement? But I do not quarrel about it particularly, nor with the abolition of the Director General of Railroads.

Is it not rather amazing that we are just winding up the Government operation of railroads that was undertaken on the 26th of December 1917? It will soon be 22 years since Uncle Sam took over the railroads. The War Finance Corporation that we set up to help finance the railroads was the R. F. C. of wartime. We have been all this time seeking to liquidate the claims and settle the disputes. Part of the files are down in the Commerce Department, some are in the General Accounting Office. The personnel files are over in the Civil Service Commission, and other files are down in the Budget Bureau. So, after 22 years, we are just beginning to wind up a governmental agency that includes the Director General of Railroads and the War Finance Corporation that should have been wound up a long time ago.

Federal Prison Industries Board should be in the Department of Justice. Nobody quarrels with that.

National Training School for Boys: I have one regret about that. It is that the board of trustees should have been abolished, including the consulting trustees. This training school, where they commit wayward boys, should be administered by the Prisons Bureau under the Department of Justice. That is the place for it. The consulting trustees of the National Training School for Boys, however, are our good colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. As I read the language, the consulting trustees are also abolished. I hate to see my friend from Oklahoma, SAM MASSINGALE, abolished—I do not know whether he is here or not this afternoon—but then I am afraid he voted for the reorganization bill, so he cannot kick on being abolished at this point.

Then there is the Codification Board. There is no reason why Congress ever should have created a separate board for this purpose. It consists of three from the Department of Justice and three from the National Archives. This is turned over to Archives, where it belongs. Then there is the Coal Commission. We have heard it bandied around the Chamber that no tears were shed about the abolition of the Coal Commission, and this is true. It was a political stamping ground. At the last session of Congress I put figures in the RECORD showing how many jobs went to Kentucky, to West Virginia, to Pennsylvania, and some of the other favored States. Not even the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who was supposed to have an abiding interest in the Coal Commission, could find occasion to weep a tear over its abolition; but while we are finding comfort in its abolition, Mr. Speaker, let me show you how the will of Congress in one respect has been beautifully abolished. When we set up the Coal Commission and passed the National Coal Act in 1937 I voted for it. I voted for the first act in 1935. When that bill was under consideration on the floor we set great store in preserving the independence of the consumers' counsel. He is the gentleman who is separately appointed by the President. He has authority under section 2 of the act to appoint his own employees, and we vested him with authority to sit at every hearing of the Coal Commission and to file protests; and we gave him authority by legal certificate to secure information from the Coal Commission.

When the Commission was set up the President of the United States appointed a good two-fisted independent to be consumers' counsel. It was John Carson, of Michigan, secretary to former Senator Couzens, and I say to you that he was an independent of independents. He served notice on the Commission to give him some information and they refused to do so. He went to the Attorney General and proposed to file suit against the Coal Commission or bring that kind of action that would mandamus them and get the information he wanted in the interests of the coal consumers of this country. I indicted the Coal Commission on the floor of this House on their own testimony before the Appropriations Committee last year. They brought a Budget—gentlemen, you can believe it or not—they testified that 2 days before they came before the committee they had not even seen the figures in the Budget. Fancy that sort of business! So they indicted themselves, I did not indict them. Then we got John Carson's testimony dealing with his difficulties in the Coal Commission. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Commission is abolished, the functions are abolished, the functions are now vested in the Secretary of the Interior. The reorganization plan did not wipe out the Coal Act. Make no mistake about that. It is still on the books; the district boards will still be on the books, the need for a coal structure and a price structure is still there, and the Secretary of the Interior is going to make the set-up in order to effectuate the purposes of the act; but the reorganization plan says also that the consumers' counsel is abolished, and his functions are vested in the Solicitor of the Department of the Interior under the direction of the Secretary. You have done what?

The President of the United States has merged and destroyed the independence of the consumers' counsel, because they are all under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior under this plan, and unless I miss my guess, Mr. Speaker, you are going to hear a great deal more about this before the reorganization plan and its effects are put in moth balls.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman, who has studied this question carefully, tell us what, in his opinion, will be the number of jobs which will be taken away from the Coal Commission? Will it be limited to six of the seven members of the Commission who have been operating, or will it go into the whole structure of the Coal Commission?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The seven Commissioners will be abolished, likewise the consumers' counsel. All the attorneyships down there have been abolished. The jobs of all the other 1,200 people in the Coal Commission have been abolished; all the juicy patronage jobs have been abolished, because they are parts of the Commission.

If you ask me what the Secretary is going to do, I do not pretend to know, but I will say that the coal industry will know it has a boss when the Secretary of the Interior gets to working on it. Make no mistake about that. It will have a real boss. I regret that the independence of the consumers' counsel had to be destroyed. You never saw any intimation of it in another body or any comment in the press as to the effect, so far as the consumers' counsel is concerned. So much for the Coal Commission.

There is a Bureau of Insular Affairs. I want to leave one thought with you on that. It is merged with the Division of Territories over in the Department of the Interior. That is all right. But I express this interest as to the future. As we know the act that we passed giving independence to the Philippines in 1946, if it becomes effective will make the Philippine problem purely a defense problem. We will have no more actual territorial administration than will be necessary, and most of the work of the Bureau of Insular Affairs deals with the Philippines. So I am wondering if in 1946 when independence may become an actuality it will be transferred back to the War Department.

Then there is the Bureau of Fisheries which is transferred over to the Department of the Interior from the Department of Agriculture or from the Congress, which I think is perfectly all right. It is in the interest of conservation and that is where it belongs.

I come now to the Bureau of Biological Survey. There is a lot of kick about taking that out of the Department of Agriculture. I have no complaint about that because if it is a conservation agency it will probably be all right to have it over in the Department of the Interior.

The next is the Mount Rushmore Memorial Commission, which is supervising the carving of the four huge heads in that granite mountain up in South Dakota. Their accounting has certainly been bad in the past and not what it ought to have been. We have had great difficulty in getting the whole story at times and I think it is in the public interest to transfer it where the President did transfer it, that is, to the National Park Service.

Then there is the Inland Waterways Corporation, which is the result of the Transportation Act of 1920 when the Secretary of War was empowered to promote waterway transportation in this country. In 1924 this Corporation was set up. I agree that it belongs in the Department of Commerce. Probably that is a good move. But there is one thing that caught my fancy there. It has a subsidiary corporation known as the Warrior Terminal Line, which operates an 18-mile railroad down at Birmingham, Ala. I do not see anything in the reorganization message providing for the disposition of the Warrior Line; yet all of the capital stock of the Warrior is held by the Inland Waterways Corporation. It may be an oversight on my part. Maybe it did not come to my attention. For aught I know it might have been abolished long ago and put out of existence. I bring this to your attention because it came to my attention in the course of an examination of this matter.

Then there is rural electrification. I do not see my friend from Mississippi on the floor this afternoon. May I say with respect to transferring rural electrification to the Department of Agriculture that if the transfer of the Farm Credit Adminstration and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation to the Secretary of Agriculture was all right, then this is all right; but in my first observations on plan No. I, I did not concur in that transfer. I do not see why the Secretary of Agriculture has to be encumbered with every function, even though it may be remotely incident to rural activities. A far better place for rural electrification would have been to consolidate it with the Federal Power Commission or put it under the Federal Loan Agency, where they put Electric Home and Farm Authority under the first reorganization plan. I believe that would have been a far more logical place for this particular institution.

Now I want to get to something which, in my opinion, is not in the public interest. I refer to the preservation of functions of the National Emergency Council, which, in my judgment—and I say this without qualification—is the biggest piece of fakery in the Government establishment today I talked here 3 or 4 weeks ago with two men who were State directors of the National Emergency Council, and they would bear out my statement if free to talk.

It was set up by Executive order in 1933. For some singular reason the President decided it ought to be abolished. So he entered an order abolishing it as of the 16th of September 1937. Later he amended the order and said it shall continue in existence until the 30th of June 1938, unless sooner abolished. I wonder what made him change his mind? First, he says, "We will put it out of business," and signed the order, issuing it from the White House; then suddenly he changes his mind and decides it ought to be retained. So it was retained.

In the Emergency Relief Act of last year we gave it life until the 30th of June 1939. Now, when the Relief Act for this year comes on the floor in a couple of months there will be a provision in that act to give the National Emergency Council another lease on life until the 30th of June 1940. Make no mistake about that. It will be there. I can tell you right now it is going to be there because the President, in his special relief message of the 27th of April, said he wanted legislation to continue it, and he wants one and one-half million dollars for the next fiscal year for the National Emergency Council.

What do they do? What kind of business do they perform? Let us take a look. I read all the testimony of the former executive director when he appeared before the Appropriations Committee last year. The first thing they do is to act as an information office. For whom? For radio commentators, newspapers, magazines—for anybody. That is his language when he testified before the committee. What else? They run a press intelligence service. How many people are employed? Forty-five. How much money is expended? Over $62,000 a year. What do they do? They take from six to eight thousand clippings a day. They wear calluses on their fingers from using the shears. Clipping what? They clip over 400 newspapers daily. What happens? They get out a bulletin—a clipping bulletin. It goes to the head of every department in the Government every day.

What else do they do? They get out a magazine abstract. They abstract all the choice editorials and expository articles in the magazines everywhere, put them in a bulletin, and this bulletin goes to the desks of all the leaders in the administration.

What else do they do? As the former Director testified:

We are here to answer questions for anybody who comes to Washington, including governors, mayors, and officials.

Oh, yes. It is very essential, in his language, that they get accurate information from the right source. Yes; he measures his language when he talks.

What else? They have a State director in every State in the Union, and in some cases these State directors hold two jobs. In Texas the W. P. A. administrator is also the State director of the N. E. C. In South Carolina the W. P. A. administrator is also the director of the N. E. C. In still another State the Federal Housing administrator for that region is the director of the N. E. C. There are 112 jobs in this agency paying in excess of $4,000. There are 19 jobs paying over $8,000 a year. Yes; some fat plums there, if you please.

What do these State directors do? They contact the legislatures. As the Director testified over there, they have to get the legislatures to consider enabling legislation to conform with what is going on in Washington. He said, among other things, that they had over 267 bills that were pending in the legislatures of the 48 States that should enable those States to get into line with the operations of the Federal Government. Yes, domination from Washington, if you please.

The N. E. C. had $875,000 last year. How much for this next year? One million five hundred thousand dollars. That is what the President asked for in his supplementary message of April 27. Are there going to be twice as many newspapers to clip? Are they going to publish twice as many newspapers? Are there going to be twice as many magazines to abstract? What is the purpose of all this? You know what it is. It has put in the hands of the White House, where this activity has been transferred, the greatest political instrumentality this country has ever seen, and how beautifully it works.

Mr. Lowell Mellett, a man of ability, a man of capacity, one of the outstanding men for Scripps-Howard, is going to operate that end of the show. He is going to be one of the assistants, I understand, who, in the language of my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], have a passion for anonymity. Yes, Lowell Mellett is probably going to get that job and will be the director of the functions of N. E. C. How beautiful it will be. First of all, you put out hand-outs from the White House. You put out canned phonograph records. Yes; no mistake about that. You saw what appeared in the press the other day, did you not? This is from the Washington Times of May 9:

In an electrically transcribed address which N. E. C. distributed to 150 local radio stations, the President charged that in some communities radio broadcasts were the only medium through which citizens could obtain factual and accurate information on their Government.

One of the N. E. C. jobs will be to send out these canned broadcasts from the White House to the little radio stations—to offset what? The fact that maybe they feel they are not getting a square deal in the newspapers. That is what part of the $1,500,000 is going to be used for; and what a grand set-up it will be. Broadcasts go out, hand-outs go out, and then what?

Well, they have to find out what the public puke is. When you send up a trial balloon you have to get the reaction. Where do they get the reactions? The clipping bureau, the magazine abstracts. Oh, yes; it is a two-way operation. You test out public sentiment, then you get that great swing of reaction and so right into the White House it goes, not into the National Emergency Council. That is abolished. All the functions have been merged in the Executive Office of the White House. And we are going to pay the bill. The taxpayers are going to pay the bill to the extent of $1,500,000 for the greatest political contrivance this country has ever seen. I do not asperse the President one bit when I say that. I am just giving you the fact as illustrated and demonstrated by all the evidence that has come to hand.

If you want to go further with your interpretation, you can. A certain distinguished Cabinet member has gone on a swing through the country. I do not know what for and nobody knows definitely about that. But here is the one-man N. E. C. Oh, that is the way to let anybody down in 1940 who is not agreeable to the man who presides over the destinies of the New Deal. They have given it to him here in the N. E. C., and he is going to use it. So he is going to offset those aspirants who are nurturing closeted thoughts as to what lies ahead in 1940; whether they be members of the Cabinet or whether they be presiding over some little dynasty far out in the Pacific, it does not make any difference. The President of the United States now has the N. E. C. vested officially in him by reorganization plan No. II, to be implemented by $1,500,000 of good public funds.

When the relief bill comes on this floor in a couple of weeks or months, or whenever it is, the provision will be in there to extend the life of these functions until 1940. If there is any strength and any breadth left in this body, I will be on this floor in an effort to strike it from the bill and to do my best to stop it as an outrage upon the American people and the American taxpayers. [Applause.] Fancy the Republican Party coming up here and saying to the Congress, "Now, we have an office down on Jackson Place and we have 45 people working down there. What we want is $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 to run it until 1940."

There is just as much logic in that request as there is in keeping the functions of the N. E. C. alive under a very distinguished editor who is going to use it, as I see it, for political purposes; and to bear this out, here is a page from the testimony on the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938.

Listen to this; this is good.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, in questioning the Executive Director of the N. E. C., asked:

What is there in the picture to make you ask for $1,000,000 for next year?

The Executive Director replied:

The first half of the fiscal year 1938 and the fiscal year 1939 are not comparable. So far as fiscal years are concerned, that period is comparable with 1936, because of the fact that the demands for information during an election year are tremendous as compared with the demands in an off year.

[Laughter and applause.]

That was the Executive Director of the N. E. C. testifying before the Committee on Appropriations—"the demands in an election year are so much greater in comparison with an off year."

Mr. Speaker, there is the story on reorganization plan No. II. And now, if there are any questions, I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I infer from what the gentleman has said that the N. E. C. is a purely propaganda agency.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is no question about that.

Mr. SHORT. And its only function is to extol the virtues of the New Deal. Of course, it is necessary to continue the emergency in order to continue the New Deal, because it was founded upon emergency and continues to feed and fatten on emergency.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I will say to my friend from Missouri, life is just one crisis after another. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHORT. And I would like to say this to the gentleman, if he will permit, I think the Members would do well to bear in mind that Mr. Mussolini rose to power through his newspaper in Milano and Mr. Hitler has gained supreme power through Joseph Goebbels and his propaganda assistants. I do not want to charge that the man in the White House aspires to become a dictator, but I do want to point out that all dictators have risen to the zenith of their power through such propaganda agencies as the N. E. C., which the gentleman has so ably described.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is the first and the most necessary instrumentality.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not quite agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] when he says that the New Deal has prospered and grown fat on this propaganda. I do not think it has grown fat, I do not think it has prospered, but I do think that what the gentleman really means is that it continues to live and maintain life, even though it is growing weaker, by virtue of these agencies. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHORT. I accept the correction of my friend from Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. GIFFORD. I think the gentleman has possibly aroused in the hearts of some of us a little fear that reorganization plan No. II is not so good after all. But I want to ask the gentleman if he can visualize, in the event hearings had been held, whom we could have summoned to appear before the committee to give us information.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Well, we might have summoned the new Executive Director of the N. E. C. functions, but he probably would have said, "Well, I just do not know a thing about it." We might have summoned some of the department heads, but do you not know that they were cautioned that they must not talk to us relative to any reorganization plan.

Mr. GIFFORD. And the gentleman cannot possibly tell us who advised the President about this matter?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, I have some thoughts on the subject, but I would not want to do anybody an injustice by having their names appear in print unless I was reasonably sure.

Mr. GIFFORD. It would, perhaps be doing an injustice.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wish the gentleman would bring out, however, if he has the time, whether the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Coast Guard are going to be merged or fused or are they still to be kept separate with one man over them with assistants who know nothing about it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They are all going to be consolidated in the Coast Guard. That is my understanding from my reading of the language of the reorganization proposal, and to me it is rather singular that the President says in his message that he puts the Inland Waterways Corporation in the Commerce Department because it is a part of the transportation system and he wants to coordinate such activities there. Well, what in the name of Heaven is the Bureau of Lighthouses except an aid to water-borne commerce in the country, both along the coast and in the larger lakes regions.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to remind the gentleman that I feel, as I am sure many others here feel, we have had no opportunity to find out about how they are going to fuse these agencies or what they are going to do.

Mr. DIRKSEN. My good colleague on the committee will recall that we were reproached somewhat for having rushed in a disavowal program when the first bill came along; but this plan came up on the 9th of May, and the very day it came up a disavowal resolution was introduced by the Senator from South Carolina, and they disposed of it in 5 minutes on the 12th day of May, ostensibly on the theory that all the great and learned legislators are presumed to know everything that was in it.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to remark here that for 2 long years I was on that committee before the gentleman came on the committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. And we listened day in and day out and could get no information whatever as to what would be the effect if we created the sort of house they desired. They wanted a 12-room house, and at no time could we get anybody to say what they would put in the various rooms. We finally had to say that we would not build those rooms until they had at least some things to put in them, and lost our interest and enthusiasm. It was this gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] who came in toward the end from the Committee on Appropriations, who has finally aroused in himself the enthusiasm and ability to tell you something. I could not.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to also intimate that if the N. E. C. were not in existence, these people would necessarily have to be hired by the Democratic National Committee?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have heard that intimation.

Mr. HINSHAW. And I have heard it intimated also that the birthday balls were being run by the N. E. C.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That has been stated. It is a most interesting development.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Getting back to the Argentine incident, it seems to me that the most reprehensible thing about that transaction was the statement of the President that that foreign beef is superior to the American beef.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would like to know if the gentleman knows by what process the President arrived at that conclusion?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have not the slightest idea, but the thing that has been going through my mind is that the American people have been eating this American beef and have found it palatable and wholesome, and I wonder why we must put the "gobs" of the Navy in a separate class and pamper dainty stomachs, and if that is the fact, let us find dainty food in other corners of the earth, to see that their nautical energies are preserved.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. No doubt the gentleman from Illinois is aware of the fact that in 1937 we imported over 41,000,000 pounds of canned corned beef into this country and that last year we imported more than 78,000,000 pounds of canned corned beef, and at the present time more than 90 percent of all of the canned corned beef consumed in this country is being imported in direct competition with the American producer.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Paying direct and indirect benefits to help farm commodities, and then letting in these products in competition reminds me of the man who got caught in a mudhole with his automobile down near Atlanta some years ago. A farmer came out with his boy and a team and helped him get the machine out of the mudhole and at the end of that time he said, "How much?" The farmed said, "$3." The automobile man then asked the farmer whether he pulled lots of people out of this mudhole, and the farmer said, "Oh, yes; 12 or 15 every day." Then the man said, "And do you also pull them out at night?" And the reply was "No," because at night the boy and himself were too busy filling the hole up with water again, and that is the way this program seems to work.

Permit me a final note by way of recapitulation. Of many things in the reorganization plan No. II every Member will heartily approve, even though they give no hint of substantial economies. One or two proposals seem a bit illogical, such as transfer of Lighthouses to the Treasury and Rural Electrification to the Department of Agriculture. However, these do not adversely affect the public interest very seriously and their transfer to these various departments is a matter of opinion. I have no quarrel with these.

But I deem it necessary to assert and reassert my opposition to the transfer of our foreign-trade functions to the Department of State. It would have been better to have transferred the functions incident to foreign trade and the negotiation of reciprocal-trade agreements to the Department of Commerce and kept them entirely free from diplomacy and international politics. Finally, the President could have done infinitely better by abolishing the N. E. C. and then requesting a modest appropriation for the actual work of coordination that it might undertake instead of converting it into a propaganda agency.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the next special order I be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] for 20 minutes.

HOW IDLE GOLD SHOULD BE USED

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the reason I have asked for this time is to discuss the gold that is owned by the United States Government. Under a law that was passed by Congress, the title to all gold in the United States is in the United States Government. That gold is in the mountains of Kentucky, and it amounts to $15,855,697,899.86 as of May 10, 1939. When William Jennings Bryan was running for President back in 1896, he advocated the issuance of a certain kind of money. He was told by the best-informed bankers in America and in the world at that time that the best money in the world is money that has 40 cents in gold behind every dollar. And that is certainly good money. No one can dispute it. England remained on the gold standard for more than 100 years with less than 10-percent gold. So there is no reason why anyone should say that more than 40 cents in gold for each dollar should be used as a backing for money in this Nation or any other nation in the world. So that is good money. If we apply that principle today, we have enough gold; the Government owns enough gold to pay off or to issue or otherwise dispense or distribute $39,637,000,000. That in addition to more than $4,000,000,000 that could be issued on silver, according to present laws.

DISHONEST NOT TO USE THIS GOLD

Now, it occurs to me as being not only wrong but absolutely dishonest for this Government to continue to borrow money and issue tax-exempt, interest-bearing bonds for the purpose of obtaining that money when it has sufficient gold and silver reserves to pay off the entire national debt. So I, for one, am opposed to any more bonds until we use this gold. There is no reason why it should not be used. If you owned a railroad and you had thousands of extra idle box cars, would you be buying more box cars? If you needed $100,000 in your business and you had $100,000 in the bank, would you go and borrow $100,000 to use in your business? No. You would use the money that you have.

SAVE BILLION DOLLARS A YEAR INTEREST

So here is this Government with all this enormous gold and silver reserve, enough to pay off the entire national debt and save more than $1,000,000,000 a year in interest, not using it—idle; absolutely idle. I say it is a dishonest policy and should not be permitted.

Now, who is responsible for it? Is the President responsible for it? Is the administration responsible? Is the Congress responsible? I say that the responsibility is on Congress—the House and Senate. It is on all of us. We should make it possible for that gold and silver to be used for that purpose. Would you issue it all at once? No. That would not be the right thing to do. It would probably destroy our currency system to issue it quickly. No one is advocating that. But I do say that you can adopt a policy, after making this gold available, of eventually paying off and retiring the entire national debt and, pending such payment, to use it to pay the running cost of the Government and for other purposes that money is needed by the Government. Why should we continue to issue bonds in view of this situation?

HOW MUCH IS A BILLION DOLLARS?

Do you know how much a billion dollars is, which we could save each year by the retirement of this national debt? I will tell you how much a billion dollars is, as far as one comparison goes. Last year one and three-quarter million people received old-age assistance. Three-quarters of a million children received benefits through the dependent children provision of the social-security law, and 50,000 blind people received benefits through social security. Those three groups received $500,000,000 in all. So the amount we are paying in interest on the national debt that should not be paid, that over a period of time should be liquidated by the Government's own credit, is twice as much as those two and a half million people received last year from State and Federal governments.

EQUAL TO $30 FOR EVERY SCHOOL CHILD

It is equal to $30 for every child in America who is between 5 and 17 years of age. That is what a billion dollars amounts to.

EQUAL TO $7.70 PER CAPITA A YEAR

A billion dollars is equal to $7.70 a year for every man, woman, and child in America. So it is worth saving and can be used for a better and more beneficial purpose than it is being now used.

I know what the stock argument is against this proposal. Our critics will say, "Why, that will cause inflation; the banks issue a lot of money; then if the Government puts out a lot of money it will cause inflation." But there is a way of preventing that. In years gone by a bank could accept deposits which, in effect, means it could extend loans equal to $10 for every $1 that the bank had. These reserve requirements were raised in 1937.

The soldiers were going to be paid $2,000,000,000, and some of these people who have much to do with our financial policies said it was going to ruin the country, and they had a law passed that would permit them to raise the reserve requirements of banks so as to plow under some of that money, and they succeeded in the passage of that law. But the result was when this money was paid out to the veterans and business and trade was stimulated and helped and the country was going back on the road to prosperity, the Federal Reserve Board put the brakes on too quickly by raising the reserve requirements of banks, which resulted in plowing under and destroying more than $3,000,000,000 of potential credit. So they were determined to see that the veteran money did not do any harm, and they did something that was disastrous. So that was the cause of the depression at the end of 1936 and the beginning of 1937. Then the reserve requirements were changed again to make it a little easier.

The point I am making is this: That by changing the reserve requirements of banks as this money is paid out by the Government, there is no danger in the world of an excess amount of money or inflation. We can change the reserve requirements from 10 to 1, as it was, to 8 to 1, as it is now with some banks, and, as the Government puts out more money, 6 to 1, 5 to 1, 4 to 1, or 2 to 1, and the time will come when 100-percent reserve requirements could be required in order to prevent any inflation of the currency.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. There would have to be an amendment to existing legislation in order to permit raising those requirements in accordance with the need if the plan the gentleman has outlined were carried out. Am I not correct?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is correct in the statement that it would require a change in existing law.

Since we have this gold, why should we not use it? Why permit it to remain idle in a mountain in Kentucky? Why take it out of one mountain and put into another mountain? Is there any logic to that? Is there any reason? If we have it, why not use it?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. What about the money that was taken from the banks for which we issued gold certificates? Would the gentleman pay them back in gold? What would the gentleman do with them? What is the amount of these certificates?

Mr. PATMAN. We have in gold certificates outstanding today $2,858,000,000 actual gold certificates issued to the Federal Reserve banks in the denomination of $100,000, because they are not in general circulation. I presume the banks decided it was too much trouble even to print those gold certificates, so they commenced the policy of just accepting a credit on the books and have a make-believe transaction of a gold certificate's passing.

Ten billion three hundred and eighty-three million dollars of gold is tied up in a credit to the Federal Reserve banks. Not even a gold certificate is issued on it. As for the remainder, some is in the gold redemption fund as a backing for the United States notes, with which the gentleman is familiar; $1,800,000,000 is in the stabilization fund; and some is in the general fund of the Treasury.

The argument is made that the Federal Reserve banks have title to this gold. They do not. They have no title in the world. It is a fictitious transaction entirely, it is a subterfuge. The Federal Reserve banks cannot get this gold unless the gold is needed to pay off or liquidate international balances, or unless it is to be used in the arts, trades, or sciences. These are the only reasons for which this gold can be obtained, and the Federal Reserve Bank has no title whatsoever to this gold.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD OWN THE 12 FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Now, here is the way this gold can be used: The national banks of the country and a few of the State member banks own $134,000,000 of stock in the 12 Federal Reserve banks. There is no reason why they should own it, it just gives them a right to receive 6 percent on an investment of that much. It does not help the Federal Reserve Bank, it is too insignificant to cover the billions of dollars of transactions handled by these banks. It is not needed for any reason whatsoever. The Government should reimburse those banks this $134,000,000 and should take charge of these 12 Federal Reserve banks. I know the argument will be made that the Government is getting into business. No; that is not right. It is no more getting into business when it takes over the 12 Federal Reserve banks than it is getting into banking by operating the United States Treasury; it is exactly the same thing. These 12 Federal Reserve banks do not do business with individuals, they do not do a private business; they do a governmental business. They operate for the Government by issuing the Government's credit. It being a governmental function, therefore, the Government should control that governmental function, and that governmental function should not be performed by directors and officials of privately owned institutions and by selfishly interested banking officials of this country.

The people who are interested in money, the banks—they have a selfish interest just like anyone—would have to operate in their own interests. They are under no oath or obligation to operate in the public interest; no, they are under obligation to operate in the interest of their stockholders and the banks that they represent. So, were the Government to purchase the stock of these 12 Federal Reserve banks, take over these gold certificates and this gold, and adopt an orderly policy of liquidating the national debt it would not only save eventually this $1,000,000,000 a year that we are paying on tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds but it would give the people a much-needed medium of exchange with which to do business.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman amplify just a little more his statement with reference to liquidating the public debt? I am exceedingly interested in the gentleman's address. Will the gentleman amplify the program he has in mind for ultimately liquidating the present national debt in view of the continuous increase in that debt from year to year?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I can tell you my view of how it can be done.

Mr. KEEFE. I would like to get the gentleman's view.

LONG-RANGE PROGRAM

Mr. PATMAN. I would have the Government purchase the stock in the 12 Federal Reserve banks. These 12 Federal Reserve banks would then be owned by the Government. The open-market committee could gradually purchase Government bonds as they are offered at the market, as they become due, or as they become callable, and purchase these bonds on the credit of the United States and, if necessary, backed by the gold we have in the hills of Kentucky. I know it would take a long time to do that. It is not a program that should be quickly gone into or hastily executed. It would take probably 10 or 15 years, probably 25, but the entire national debt can be liquidated in this way, and safely liquidated, just as today the Federal Reserve banks own $2,500,000,000 in Government bonds. Where did they get those bonds? They purchased them in the open market. That is the only way they can acquire them. They have no right to buy them directly from the Treasury. So, in the same way other Government bonds can be acquired.

In fact, the Federal Reserve banks have almost gone out of the business for which they were organized. They are only holding Government bonds, bought with Government credit, on which the Government continues to pay interest. Last year the total operating expense of the Federal Reserve System amounted to $37,000,000. More than $35,000,000 of it was paid with interest on Government obligations that had been purchased on the credit of the Government. When the Federal Reserve banks buy bonds the interest should cease, and it would cease if the Government owned these banks.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the Government were to take over the Federal Reserve banks, and I favor that policy, it would not change the volume of money issued or in circulation and it still would not change the credit situation or the bank-check money, which is 95 percent of all the so-called money used in this country.

Mr. PATMAN. It could if you issued a mandate. I would give this Board a mandate and would provide in the law that in the event it did not carry out the mandate any official of the Board could be removed by the passage of a resolution by either House of Congress.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It would still take legislation directed against the Board?

Mr. PATMAN. It would take legislation; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman's theory is correct that the Government can issue printing-press money to extinguish the national debt because we have gold in the hills of Kentucky, would it not also be possible under that principle to further reduce the gold content of our American dollar, print more money, and repeal our tax laws?

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is bringing up something which he may discuss himself. Does the gentleman claim that money which is backed by 40-percent gold is printing-press money? Is that his definition of printing-press money?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Well, the gentleman does not know much about the subject or I do not know much about it. He is the first man in official life I have ever known to say that such money so backed by 40-percent gold is printing-press money.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. It is inflation and printing-press money and the New Deal might just as well debase the gold content of the dollar some more, print more money, and stop collecting taxes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD on this subject and on another subject, and to include a resolution passed by a farmers' organization.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a brief speech made by the president of the Lincoln Memorial University.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION]?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration may be allowed to sit all day Wednesday in order to hold hearings.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that agreeable to the Republican members of the committee?

Mrs. O'DAY. I do not know. I am just making the request.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what bills are going to be considered by the Immigration Committee?

Mrs. O'DAY. There are a number of bills that we had up last year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Is it the intention of the committee to have hearings on the Wagner-Rogers bill on Wednesday?

Mrs. O'DAY. We have witnesses coming in on various immigration bills.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It is not the intention to have hearings on the Wagner-Rogers bill?

Mrs. O'DAY. We are not. I do not know about any other committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I mean the Immigration Committee.

Mrs. O'DAY. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'DAY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include the heading of a petition sent me by a number of citizens of the Black Hills of South Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to take exception to the remarks last week credited to the President of the United States when he announced his approval of a purchase of 48,000 pounds of Argentine corned beef for use by the United States Navy. The President is supposed to have justified the purchase on the grounds that the Argentine beef is not only "cheaper" but "better" than the American-grown product.

As to the imported beef being cheaper in price, there is no argument. Argentine beef is produced under much cheaper conditions, and in a country where the standard of living is lower and where the tax burden is less than in the United States.

If price is the consideration, then this country could save hundreds of millions of dollars by purchasing all of its requirements in the foreign market and thereby building pay rolls for the alien coolies and peasants of foreign lands. We could save millions of dollars by purchasing German steel for our battleships and for our Government buildings, but John L. Lewis and the United States Steel Trust will not permit that. If you think so, just look back to 1937, when German steel started to underbid American steel on certain Government contracts. Very quietly and somewhat mysteriously the tariff on steel was promptly raised to shut the foreign product entirely out of the market. We bought no German steel.

In this connection it might be mentioned that in the year 1937 alone American steel was protected by tariff to the tune of $731,000,000, every penny of which was paid by the American public. In that 1 year American consumers could have been saved $731,000,000 by buying their steel abroad, but our benevolent Government saw to it that the American steel producer was protected, and I do not disagree with that policy if it is as consistently followed in the case of other American industries.

But, unfortunately, this is not the case. Agriculture has no John L. Lewis wielding the "big stick" in its interest. Agriculture has no great monopoly of land ownership to ward off foreign competition. And so the Polish hams and the Argentine corned beef and the foreign fats and oils continue to pour into the American market, while good old Iowa hog lard dips in price to an all-time low.

The amusing part of it all is, however, that the President has been misled by his economic advisers. The Argentine beef is not cheaper than our domestic beef. It just appears to be cheaper.

Figured on the basis of an 800-pound steer in the Argentine, which would dress approximately 52 percent, or 516 pounds of dressed meat after it is deboned, we would have 250 pounds of corned beef. At 9 cents a pound, this would net the Argentine farmer $22.50, assuming that the hide and byproducts would pay processing costs.

Let us compare this with a Nebraska steer of equal weight. Allowing 50 cents per hundred for transportation and marketing costs, the Nebraska steer would have to sell at $22, or $2.75 per hundred, to compete with Argentine beef.

But the Argentine beef costs us more than $22.50, because we must also tax ourselves to pay the Nebraska farmer to take out of production the four acres required to produce 800 pounds of beef. This will cost us approximately $40, so that the total costs of the Argentine beef is in reality $62.50.

This is not all, however. Because of the peculiar turn-over of money in our domestic economy, each dollar of farm income translates into $1 of factory pay rolls and $7 of national income.

Therefore, if we produce the steer ourselves, we will have both the steer and the money. On that basis let us give the Nebraska farmer $9 per hundred for a good 800-pound range steer, or $72, then the 250 pounds of corned beef would cost the Government 28.8 cents per pound, and our Navy would have a good quality of beef.

The Nebraska farmer would have the $72 that the packer would have to draw out of our capital structure. The $72 when spent by the Nebraska farmer will create $72 of factory pay rolls in the United States and $514 of national income or dollar turn-over in goods. Deducting the $72 to buy the meat for our Navy, we still have the use of $442 of good United States money, and we will have added $72 of permanent capital to our capital structure.

And to those Congressmen who are representing industry, I suggest that you ponder the question of whether we would not all be better off to trade out $72 with our Nebraska farmer and get the turn-over of our own dollar than to trade $22.50 worth of other goods with Argentina and then tax ourselves to pay for both the beef and for curtailing production.

Now, as to Argentine beef, fresh, salted, or "corned willie" variety, being superior or even equal in quality to the pampered product of the Iowa feed yards, no Iowan, no midwesterner, no Texan—in fact, no true connoisseur of the noble art of what is what in gastronomy—can possibly agree. Can it be that our discerning and otherwise discriminating Chief Executive has never experienced the unforgettable delight of sinking his teeth into a juicy, succulent Sioux City T-bone steak cut from the left loin of an Iowa corn-fed steer? If not, I respectfully recommend the adventure. And as an Iowa farm boy who has raised his own 4–H blue-ribbon baby beef, as a "suey" stick swinger who has piloted many thousands of fattened steers from stockyard pen to packing house, and as a citizen who has since accumulated considerable heft and paunch as the result of a steady diet of midwestern meat, I feel impelled to conclude my remarks simply by saying that our President, in extolling the alleged superiority of Argentine beef, either speaks from lack of gastronomical experience or he just must have been misinformed. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MALONEY, for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. HAVENNER, for 8 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. FERNANDEZ, for 2 weeks, on account of official business.

To Mr. SHANLEY, for today, on account of official business.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 964. SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 8, 1939)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Frederic F. Briggs, D. D., of Beverly Hills, Va., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we come to Thee in our weakness and ask for Thy strength; we come to Thee with our imperfect knowledge and ask for Thy wisdom; we come to Thee with our sin and ask for Thy forgiveness. Help us ever to keep in mind our dependence upon Thee and that apart from Thee we can do nothing.

We thank Thee for Thy manifold mercies to us as a nation. May we never be guilty of the sin of ingratitude, and may we be willing to assume the responsibilities which go with our blessings. We thank Thee for our independence as a nation, and pray that we may never seek to be independent of Thee; we would not if we could; we could not if we would. Help us to remember that we are in this world not to do our own will but the will of God. Give us diligence to study Thy word, to learn Thy will, and to have courage to do it.

In the midst of a world torn by strife and hatred grant that we may be at peace with all mankind. Be with us, Lord, lest we forget. Thou who hast been our shepherd in the past continue to lead us in the paths of righteousness and honor for Thy name's sake. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Legislative Resolution 31

Resolution memoralizing the Congress of the United States to promote, initiate, and support legislation for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of products of Nebraska and adjacent States and the development of mining, industrial, and agricultural interests by making the Missouri River navigable from its mouth to Chamberlain, S. Dak., through construction of dams and other facilities

Whereas engineers of the United States Army are constructing a dam across the Missouri River at Fort Peck, Mont., in order to control the waters of the Missouri River below said dam, to aid navigation of said river from its mouth to the location of said dam; and

Whereas the Missouri River through the efforts of United States Army engineers has been or will shortly be made navigable from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa; and

Whereas it is believed that a survey made of the Missouri River from Sioux City, Iowa, to Chamberlain, S. Dak., by United States Army engineers would show that this stretch of river can also be made navigable at reasonable cost; and

Whereas the establishment of a water route for Nebraska products on the inland waterways of the United States would result in greatly lowered rates for transportation thereof and would result in immeasurable benefits to Nebraska producers and producers of adjacent States; and

Whereas the establishment of such water route would necessarily result in the elimination of bank erosion on a serious scale by the river, which bank erosion at present destroys good Nebraska land of the value of thousands of dollars yearly; and

Whereas such water route to Chamberlain, S. Dak., would render immediately available immense deposits of manganese located near Chamberlain, S. Dak., and render the United States independent of manganese deposits in Europe, which might be cut off in case of war; and

Whereas would furthermore open up immense deposits of coal and many other useful and valuable minerals found in the Missouri River Valley and result, by reason of the industries which would be developed, in giving employment directly or indirectly to thousands of our people; and

Whereas dams placed at intervals, by United States Army engineers' survey, will result in flood control, the improvement of navigation, the furtherance of irrigation, and the production of hydroelectric power, all of which will be of great benefit to the people of Nebraska and adjacent States; and

Whereas the hydroelectric power so generated would be largely used in developing the manganese and other industries located along the valley of the Missouri River and contiguous territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-third regular session assembled:

1. That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, petitioned and requested to enact legislation providing for progressive construction and completion of the necessary work to complete the Missouri River for navigation, flood control, and other things above mentioned, thereby providing a water route of 9-foot channel depth to Chamberlain, S. Dak., and further, if deemed advisable, to the best interests of the United States.

2. That this resolution be spread at large upon the journal of this legislature, and that the clerk of this legislature is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States; to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate; to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; and to each of the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress, to the end that representatives in the Government and in the Congress of the United States will be advised that this legislature considers as imperative remedial Federal legislation which will make the Missouri River navigable from its mouth to Chamberlain, S. Dak., as set forth in the preamble of this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 15

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to pass House Resolution No. 156, an enabling act authorizing the people of the Territory to form a constitution and State government, to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the existing States.

Whereas a movement for annexation of the Kingdom of Hawaii to the United States, as a State on a parity with the then existing States of the United States, was initiated in 1854; and

Whereas the Republic of Hawaii, a sovereign nation, was annexed voluntarily in the United States of America, as an incorporated Territory and an integral part thereof, under the Newlands joint resolution, approved July 7, 1898, at the request of a majority of the then citizens of the islands; and

Whereas Hawaii has served for almost 40 years in such status and demonstrated fully its ability to discharge the duties of a State, and inasmuch as there is no provision in the American scheme of government for the indefinite existence of any integral part of the United States in a Territorial status; and

Whereas the people of Hawaii, since 1840 and the promulgation of the first Constitution of Hawaii modeled after the Constitution of the United States, have demonstrated their unquestioned ability to govern themselves, particularly since the passage of the Hawaiian organic act, approved April 30, 1900; and

Whereas the 1903 session of the Legislature of Hawaii, being the second session after annexation, adopted the first of a long series of resolutions memorializing the Congress to grant Hawaii statehood, an action that has been repeated with few exceptions by succeeding sessions; and

Whereas the land area of Hawaii exceeds that of any one of 3 of the existing States and is nearly equal to that of 2 others; the population of Hawaii exceeds that of any one of 4 States and is closely behind that of 4 others; and in taxes it pays into the Federal Treasury more than any one of some 16 States and five times more than is expended in it by the Federal Government for civil purposes; and

Whereas as an organized Territory for almost 40 years Hawaii has developed into a modern American community, on a par with any other part of the Union by the ordinary standards of American life; and

Whereas the people of the Territory of Hawaii desire and have desired for many years to participate in the Government of the United States freely, fully, and loyally as a sovereign State of the United States; and

Whereas the Joint Committee on Hawaii recommended in its report rendered February 15, 1938, among other things, that the holding of a plebiscite on the subject of statehood for Hawaii would precede affirmative action by the Congress; and

Whereas there is pending in the legislature a measure, presented by the Hawaii Equal Rights Commission with a recommendation that it be passed, to provide such plebiscite at the 1940 general elections in the Territory: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii at its twentieth regular session (the house of representatives concurring), That when the people of the Territory of Hawaii express at such plebiscite a desire that said Territory shall become a State and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the 48 States, the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, earnestly requested and urged to pass House Resolution No. 156, introduced January 3, 1939, by the Honorable SAMUEL WILDER KING, Delegate to the Congress from Hawaii, and referred to the Committee on Territories, being an act to enable the people of the Territory of Hawaii to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the existing States; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of this concurrent resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the United States of America, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Honorable WILLIAM H. KING, Senator from Utah and chairman of the Joint Committee on Hawaii, and to the Delegate to the Congress from Hawaii.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 22

Concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States of America for authority to acquire Royal Patent Grants 3437 and 3539 in the land of Kahanui, island of Molokai, T. H., necessary to protect the domestic water-supply system of the Hawaiian Homes Commission's major homestead settlement

Whereas more than 1,300 persons on Hawaiian Homes Commission homesteads on the island of Molokai, T. H., now receive practically all of their domestic water supply from an intake on Territorial land from the Waihanau stream and by use of the same for many years the Territory of Hawaii has established a prescriptive right to such water; and

Whereas a portion of such water is drained from said Royal Patent Grants 3437 and 3539 in the land of Kahanui, privately owned, and comprising 1,268 acres more or less; and

Whereas said lands of Kahanui have for several years been unoccupied by persons or livestock but, due to its private ownership, may be so occupied at any time; and

Whereas such occupancy would require the installation, operation, and maintenance of a water-purification plant in connection with the said water-supply system of the Hawaiian Homes Commission at great cost to said commission, such water purification not now being required; and

Whereas there has been expended by the said Hawaiian Homes Commission to date more than $500,000 for the aforesaid water-supply system; and

Whereas there is also required a right-of-way for vehicles and automotive equipment of the Hawaiian Homes Commission over an existing road located within the land of Kahanui other than those portions hereinbefore described, for the purpose of operating and maintaining said water-supply system; and

Whereas the aforesaid 1,268 acres of privately owned land will also serve as an addition to the Territorial forest reserve; and

Whereas the Territory of Hawaii, under authority conveyed to it by section 73 (1) of its organic act cannot exchange Territorial land exceeding 40 acres in area or $5,000 in value in each case, and the Hawaiian Homes Commission, under the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, has no authority to exchange land of any area whatsoever; and

Whereas the respective areas and values concerned in the said proposed exchange of land will exceed the limitations prescribed in said organic act and Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, urgently requested to provide the appropriate legislation to authorize the Territory of Hawaii to acquire Royal Patent Grants 3437 and 3539 of the land of Kahanui with appurtenances thereto and a perpetual right-of-way over the existing road through the land of Kahanui, both on the island of Molokai, T. H., privately owned, in exchange for Territorial land or lands under the control of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, or both, such lands to be of such area or areas as will equal in value the value of said privately owned lands with appurtenances thereto and of said right-of-way across the land of Kahanui, such values to be fixed by a Territorial board of appraisers. Should, for any reason, the owners of said lands refuse to convey the aforesaid lands and appurtenances and said right-of-way in exchange for the said Territorial land or lands under the control of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, or both, of equal value as fixed by said board of appraisers, the Territory of Hawaii be authorized to acquire said lands and appurtenances and said right-of-way by condemnation proceedings, and further be authorized to sell at public auction such Territorial or Hawaiian Homes Commission lands, or both, the proceeds of such sale to be applied to the purchase price fixed in the condemnation proceedings; and further, that the Hawaiian Homes Commission be authorized to transfer to the Commissioner of Public Lands of the Territory of Hawaii, such Hawaiian Homes lands as may be required to effectuate the proposed exchange or sale of said lands as authorized hereinabove; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

House Concurrent Resolution 22

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, requested to amend the organic act so as to authorize and mandate the commissioner of public lands, with the approval of the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, to do the following with regard to special homestead agreements of unpatented homesteads of the Waiakea homestead tract, in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii:

(1) Determine the amount of interest and principal that would have been due and payable during the first 6 years, had payment been carried out as set forth in the special homestead agreements.

(2) Issue a retroactive moratorium beginning from the end of the sixth year of the special homestead agreements up to the date of the approval of this authorization and mandate.

(3) Issue an extension of time of 30 years from the approval of this authorization and mandate in which to meet the required payments of the amount due and payable as determined according to item 1 hereof, with a requirement that such amount be amortized without interest over the period of extension, such amortized payments to be due and payable biennially or at crop harvest time; be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectfully requested to enact a bill to carry out the purposes of this resolution, substantially in the form hereto attached; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and to the Delegate to the Congress of the United States from Hawaii.

An act to amend section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. That certain act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, is hereby further amended by adding at the end of section 73 thereof the following paragraph:

"The commissioner is hereby authorized and directed to determine the amount of principal and interest which would have been paid by any person or persons with whom the Territory of Hawaii has entered into special homestead agreements of unpatented homesteads at the Waiakea homestead tract, in the district of South Hilo, county of Hawaii, during the first 6 years of the life of such agreement if all payments under said agreement had been paid when due during said 6 years. The amount so determined in each case shall be the total amount due and payable for such homesteads, covered by such agreements, any other terms or provisions in any of said special homestead agreements to the contrary notwithstanding. Said amount shall be payable without interest in annual or biennial payments, and if at the end of 30 years said amount shall have been paid to the Territory, said special homestead agreements shall be deemed to have been performed by the parties mentioned therein, and such parties shall not be required to make any further payments for the land covered by such agreement."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon its approval.

Assembly Joint Resolution 12

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to amend the Social Security Act so as to repeal the maximum contribution of $15 for each old-age pensioner to the States

Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted the Social Security Act providing for aid to the aged and other needy persons, and therein further provided for payments to the States of $15 for each aged person, conditioned upon the State's passing legislation conforming to the requirements of such act, and matching in proportion the required funds of the United States; and

Whereas these provisions afford a maximum sum of $30 for each old-age pensioner unless the State is willing to assume and pay the entire amount above the contribution of $15 of the United States; and

Whereas it is believed that this sum is inadequate for eligible persons in not permitting bare sustenance, and that the Federal Government should encourage the States to grant proper and sufficient aids for aged persons in accordance with American ideals and American standards by matching the contributions of the State without limitation as to amount; and

Whereas the aged people should be enabled to live in decency and health and be relieved of their fears and miseries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to amend the Social Security Act by removing the limitation of $15 for each such aged person as the maximum Federal contribution so as to enable the Federal Government to match any contribution of a State without restriction as to amount; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be transmitted to the United States, to both Houses of Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Assembly Joint Resolution 18

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation removing the reciprocal exemption from tax on income of municipal, State, and Federal employees

Whereas the reciprocal-tax exemption claimed by and granted to employees of the municipal, State, and Federal Governments was formerly an inequity of no great importance as their numbers and salaries were then relatively small; but with the astonishing increase in the vast army of such employees with an estimated income in excess of $3,000,000,000 such tax exemption has become an alarming defect in the fiscal system of our governmental units which have increasingly relied upon graduated income taxes for their revenues; and

Whereas the reciprocal exemption of salaries of governmental employees has created a vast reservoir of tax-exempt income in the possession of people who should equitably bear their just proportion of governmental expenses and relief costs; and

Whereas the removal of such exemptions should produce much added and needed income on the basis of present tax laws to both State and Federal Governments; and

Whereas the time has come in a democracy that those people who obtain their livelihood from the Government should receive the same treatment as those working for private employers, and should be terminated as a matter of principle and not of politics; and

Whereas the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, approved in 1913, expressly authorized the Congress of the United States "to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived," should now authorize the taxation of all income derived from municipal, State, and Federal Governments: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this legislature memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact legislation removing the reciprocal-tax exemption on Government salaries of all kinds, and conferring powers on the State with respect to Federal salaries and powers to the Federal Government with respect to State and local governmental salaries; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to both Houses of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Assembly Joint Resolution 72

Joint resolution relating to the tariff rates on raw furs

Whereas market prices on silver foxes imported from foreign countries into the United States have decreased from 25 to 35 percent since the recent lowering of the tariff rates on silver foxes by the United States Government; and

Whereas the average price for silver foxes imported since February 1938, was $36.15 and such average price in 1939 has dropped to $26.89; and

Whereas the price on silver foxes in the United States in March 1938, was $36.95 per fox for the same type of foxes, which in March 1939 only brought $23.60 or a reduction of $13.35 per fox or 36 percent; and

Whereas in January and February 1939, there were 25 percent more raw fox furs imported into the United States than during the whole year of 1938; and

Whereas 128,000 silver foxes, or as many as the United States produces, are being sold in London in the month of March 1939, and many of the United States buyers are present at this sale, it is apparent that about 20,000 foxes will be imported into the United States during the month of March to further depress the market in the United States, and that during the same month in 1938 only 1,850 foxes were so imported; and

Whereas the income to the raw-fur industry of this State is approximately $20,000,000, and such industry is one of the greatest in this State; and

Whereas this State has the largest fur farms in the world and up until the lowering of such rates such industry had developed and increased at a great rate; and

Whereas it seems clear that the lowering of such rates was detrimental to the raw-fur industry in this State and other States of the United States, and that the Federal Government should restore or raise the tariff rates on foxes to the level that existed prior to such change: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully memorializes the Federal Government to restore the tariff rates on raw furs to the level that existed before such change; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, to each House of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof, and to the United States Tariff Commission.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 106

Whereas all cotton produced in the United States is sold on the basis of the gross weight of the bale, which includes the weight of the bagging and tie, and there being no uniformity in the weight of said bagging and ties, this making it impracticable for buyers to arrive at the actual net weight of the cotton when setting a price for same, this resulting in the producer receiving a price at variance with the posted price for like grades of cotton; and

Whereas cotton produced in all other countries is sold on the net weight thereof without regard to the weight or character of bagging used; and

Whereas there is now prevailing in the Congress of the United States a bill requiring that all American-produced cotton should be sold on the net weight basis, thus making it possible for the use of a lighter-weight bagging in the wrapping of the American cotton, and further resulting in the use of low-grade cotton in the manufacture of bagging, also helping to reduce the stocks of low-grade cotton in the United States and removing from the market much of the low-grade cotton, which is held in competition with the higher grades; and

Whereas the bagging used now almost exclusively throughout the United States is manufactured from materials imported, and much of the finished bagging being imported, thus requiring the American cotton growers to use foreign manufactured bagging in competition with a bagging that might be manufactured from their own product, this establishing an unethical and badly unbalanced economic condition; and

Whereas the Texas Cotton Ginners Association and the Texas Cooperative Ginners Association, representing a very large majority of the cotton ginners of Texas, at their annual convention held in Dallas on April 11, 1939, both, by unanimous vote, resolved to wrap their gin bales in cotton as soon as a net weight law was enacted, and further voted to give full cooperation to extend the use of cotton in every way possible by their example and precept: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact a law as soon as possible requiring that all American-produced cotton be sold on the basis of the net weight of the bale; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Congressmen and United States Senators from Texas and to United States Senator ELLISON D. SMITH, chairman of the Senate Agricultural Committee.

Mr. ANDREWS presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Senate Joint Memorial 1

Joint resolution as a memorial to Congress to pass an act for the relief of property owners who suffered damages from the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruitfly

Whereas property owners in the State of Florida suffered great damage from quarantine regulations and destruction of property during the successful efforts to suppress the late invasion of the Mediterranean fruitfly; and

Whereas the damage so wrought under the direction and regulations of the Federal Government was for the primary purpose of protecting the health of citizens of the United States and in order to prevent the invasion of other States by this destructive pest and thereby benefited other States and the United States by an incalculable amount far in excess of the damages sustained by the property owners of Florida; and

Whereas the citrus growers of Florida and the business interests and people of Florida who are dependent directly or indirectly upon the income of citrus growers, have during the present season experienced great losses due to low prices of citrus fruits; and

Whereas there has already been many years' delay in laying before the Congress for final determination the claims of the said property owners: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

SECTION 1. That the attention of the President of the United States and the Congress be drawn to the facts hereinbefore set forth, and that they be urgently requested to consider the claims of the property owners who suffered damages incident to the eradication of the Mediterranean fruitfly and to provide the necessary appropriations to pay said claims at the earliest possible moment.

SEC. 2. The secretary of state shall provide copies of this resolution, suitably prepared as a memorial, and to respectfully present such copies to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS also presented the following memorial of the Senate of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Senate Memorial 3

Joint resolution as a memorial to Congress to pass an act terminating the selling of munitions and war materials by citizens of the United States to the country of Japan

Whereas in the interests of humanity and world peace it becomes necessary that the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States take such action as will deny aid or assistance of any kind to the country of Japan in the furtherance of the war against the country of China; and

Whereas denial of the right to purchase munitions and materials of war would effectively accomplish such purpose: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

SECTION 1. That this body memorialize the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to take immediate action to terminate the selling of munitions and war materials by citizens of the United States to the country of Japan.

SEC. 2. That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Florida, in the Congress of the United States, give their support to any measure that will accomplish the purpose of this resolution, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Florida in Congress.

TRIBUTE TO AND ENDORSEMENT OF SENATOR LEE FOR VICE-PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have a copy of the resolution adopted by the State Senate of the Legislature of Oklahoma recommending and commending our distinguished colleague the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] to the consideration of the Democracy of the Nation for nomination to the office of Vice President of the United States. The Senator from Oklahoma was born in my State of Alabama; in fact, Mr. President, today five native-born Alabamians sit in the Senate, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], and myself. The Senator from Oklahoma left Alabama as a very small boy and went to Oklahoma. There he grew to manhood and was educated and there he has given his heart's devotion to the welfare and the advancement of the people of that State. I had the honor of serving in the House of Representatives with the junior Senator from Oklahoma. I well remember his first speech in that body. He was speaking as one who as a brave corporal in the A. E. F. had experienced the horrors, the trials, and the tragedy of the World War on the battlefields of France. He was pleading for peace for our country and he was so earnest, so eloquent, so compelling that he held the rapt attention of the Members and instantly challenged their admiration. From the day that Senator LEE started his life's career as an Oklahoma schoolmaster until this good hour he has been fighting to break shackles, to lift burdens, to open the doors of opportunity, to insure justice, and to promote the cause of the people of Oklahoma and of the Nation. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in full in the RECORD, as follows:

(Enrolled)

Senate Resolution 34—By Spencer

Resolution commending the Honorable JOSH LEE and recommending his consideration by the Democracy for Vice President of the United States

Whereas it has been prominently mentioned and rumored that the Honorable JOSH LEE, United States Senator from Oklahoma, may be considered by the Democratic Party as a nominee for Vice President of the United States; and

Whereas the Honorable JOSH LEE is a popular, widely known, and favorite son of the Commonwealth of Oklahoma and is greatly beloved by the people of Oklahoma; and

Whereas the Honorable JOSH LEE is a commoner typically representative of democratic principles and traditions of American life in that he has risen from a position of opportunity accorded all of those similarly situated in the scheme of American life, and is now recognized as one of the Nation's most sincere and outstanding Democratic personalities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the State Senate of the Seventeenth Legislature of Oklahoma:

SECTION 1. That we most heartily recommend and commend the Honorable JOSH LEE to the consideration of the Democracy of the Nation for the nomination of the office of Vice President of the United States of America on the Democratic ticket in 1940.

Passed the Senate 29th day of April 1939.

J. A. RINEHART,
President pro tempore of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION OF J. ROSS EAKIN AS SUPERINTENDENT OF GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit a resolution for an investigation, by a committee to be appointed by the Vice President, of the activities of one J. R. Eakin, superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park.

The reasons for the investigation are stated in the resolution.

It will be recalled that this matter came up on the floor of the Senate some weeks ago and was argued with some activity. The Senate is therefore in a measure familiar with the question.

Although submitting the resolution, I do not wish to be appointed on the committee. All I want is a full and fair investigation of Mr. Eakin's activities by a disinterested committee; and I know the Vice President will appoint such a committee.

As I understand, the resolution will go first to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and then to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 131) was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, as follows:

Whereas sometime in 1931 J. Ross Eakin was appointed superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and stationed at Gatlinburg, Tenn.; and

Whereas on or about July 18, 1936, H. E. Myers, regional fiscal supervisor, was sent by the Department of the Interior to audit and check the accounts of the said J. Ross Eakin dealing with control of Civilian Conservation Corps camps; and

Whereas on November 27, 1936, the said H. E. Myers made a report to the Department of the Interior concerning his examination and audit of the accounts of J. Ross Eakin; and

Whereas in such report the said examiner and accountant made many charges against the said J. Ross Eakin, among which were the following:

(1) "Receipts from materials and supplies were not obtained in majority of instances."

(2) "A review of the following comments will disclose that proper purchase and contract procedure were not followed. In the auditor's opinion the greater portion of these discrepancies can be charged to incompetent personnel in charge of purchasing and lack of proper supervision by ones responsible. Several excuses were given for mistakes that had been made, the favorite one being to place blame on clerk that was suspended on August 1, 1936, and the next being failure to receive information from Washington office."

(3) "It would appear that anything that was wanted by anybody was purchased, regardless of regulations, and then every known means used to get the same paid by the finance officer, giving him answers to his questions that were not borne out by the facts when he would hold up payment of vouchers for additional information."

"While audit was being made several suggestions were made to correct errors as they were discovered, and a later check would disclose that suggestions were not followed out immediately, if at all."

(4) "Motor oil purchased in open market, not under Navy contract; typewriter rentals, no contract; purchase of typewriter; service station deliveries of gasoline; photographic equipment; printing of forms; time books, field books, ledgers, daybooks, and columnar journals; repair parts for automobiles not under T. P. S. contracts 7807 and 7808; office furniture, desks, drafting tables, stools, steel desks, steel cabinets, and steel files; drafting instruments; printed envelopes; spark plugs in large quantities at double T. P. S. contract price; junk batteries traded in on new batteries a dozen or more at one time; and blowtorches traded in on new ones."

(5) Excess purchases: "It was noted that a great many automobile tires and tubes were purchased. A check of these purchases shows that between April 1, 1935, and June 30, 1936, tires and tubes amounting to $13,012.62 were purchased. Just why it would be necessary to purchase a hundred tires at one time and place them in stock at the two warehouses and service stations carrying a complete line of truck tires at Knoxville, Tenn., and Asheville, N. C. As a large stock of tires were on hand at Sugarlands warehouse, inquiry was made, and answer received, that they were for detached service cars; and when it was pointed out that it was not necessary to have extra tires on hand, when they could be obtained from Knoxville when and as needed, the answer was then given that the tires on hand had been purchased by the clerk that had been suspended.

"As a great many partly worn-out tires were in several places, instructions were given to have all of these tires placed in one building under lock and key, and when this was done it was found that one abandoned barrack building at Sugarlands was completely filled with worn-out or partly worn-out tires, from camps in Tennessee, some of them, in the auditor's opinion, being good tires showing very little use."

(6) "It was impossible for auditor to check accountability for all tires purchased due to the method of handling the same all around.

"Many purchase orders were issued for batteries for automobiles and trucks, orders being for 1 dozen, sometimes 2 dozen or more at a time. Here again it was discovered that as no uniform truck drivers' report system was being used—in fact, only one camp showed a battery hydrometer on property inventory—so it was impossible for truck drivers to properly test batteries."

(7) "Irregular contracts: Inspection of contracts in file shows that a general understanding of contract procedure was not had by all concerned with the preparation of contracts."

(8) Real-estate leases: "For rent of 'one building approximately 20 feet 2 inches by 16 feet 2 inches for use as an office for Government employees.' Beginning October 21, 1933, to as long as needed, with option in either party to terminate same upon 30 days' notice. Rental, $21 a month. Heat and light furnished."

A contract with one Huff was for a building "with 1,156 square feet floor space," for which he paid $53 per month. Another contract with A. J. Huff was for a "building located in rear Mountain View Hotel used as a garage, containing two stalls." The rental for this was $6 per month.

These leases were all made in 1933 and never renewed and did not conform to regulations.

(9) Cement contracts: Invitations for bids were sent on February 28, 1936, for "cement in paper bags of 94 pounds net." No quantity was stated. "Volunteer Portland Cement Co., Penn Dixie Cement Corporation, and Southern States Portland Cement Co., all submitted identical bids of $2.49 per barrel, of 4 paper sacks, in carload lots of not less than 132 barrels." The above three mentioned firms were equal low bidders; a fourth bidder was 5 cents per barrel higher.

"On these three bids, under the same invitation, three contracts were awarded for a carload of 132 barrels, viz, a contract with Volunteer for 132 barrels, one with Penn Dixie for 132 barrels, and one with Southern States for 132 barrels." This was contrary to the law and to the regulations.

Another contract "dated March 17, 1936, with Volunteer Portland Cement Co. for $414.38. Three equal low acceptable bids were received. Award was made to concern nearest park, instead of by lot, following justification being stated on statement of award: 'But it would result in increased cost to split the award, and due to the fact that it would also result in delay and cost to Government to request that representatives of these companies draw lots for award.'"

(10) The rental of teams and horses was denounced by the auditor as being contrary to the law and regulations.

(11) "Purchases in excess of $100 not covered by contracts: Statement made to auditor that it was the understanding of all concerned at the park office that, beginning April 1, 1935, authority was granted to make open-market purchases up to $299.99."

(12) "Travel orders were issued by superintendent of park, and in a few cases by acting superintendent, reading 'Great Smoky Mountains National Park and vicinity,' and based on these travel orders files show that travel was performed and paid for by finance officer to and from various places in Tennessee, North and South Carolina, and Georgia. Other travel orders were issued specifying certain places in Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Georgia, and Virginia, all outside of limits of Great Smoky Mountains National Park."

Travel orders were issued by the Washington office and the amount changed by the park officers with this justification: "It is determined to be more economical and advantageous to the Government for you to use your personal car at a mileage rate that will not exceed cost by common carrier."

Travel orders were issued, and per diem paid thereon, to various people who did not leave the park.

"Several travel vouchers were paid to Emergency Conservation Work clerks in park office, and supervising mechanics that have the appearance of Federal Government paying for employees' pleasure trips. For example, Emergency Conservation Work clerk in Gatlinburg office being paid for per diem on trips to Knoxville, Tenn., showing leaving headquarters (Gatlinburg) after 4:30 p. m. (office closing time) for Knoxville, Tenn., remaining in Knoxville (a distance of 40 miles from Gatlinburg) overnight, and leaving there the next morning at 7 a. m., arriving Gatlinburg at 8 a. m. Another example was supervising mechanic leaving Bryson City, N. C., at 7:30 p. m., arriving at Knoxville 11:15 p. m., and leaving Knoxville at 6 a. m. next morning, arriving at Bryson City at 9:45 a. m. This party's headquarters was Smokemont, N. C., several miles from Bryson City, N. C. He spent a great many evenings in Knoxville, Tenn., and Asheville, N. C., arriving at these places after regular closing hours for all kinds of official business, and leaving the next morning before opening hours, and collected per diem for the time away from official station.

"Travel orders were issued, and per diem paid thereon, to various parties whose official duties placed them in travel status, who would leave official headquarters, either Bryson City, N. C., or Gatlinburg, Tenn., between 7 and 10 a. m., traveling to places within park or points in vicinity, returning to official headquarters early in the evening.

(13) "Very little attention was paid to bills of lading. Of those issued by this office, no record was kept; that is, no register was maintained."

A long list of these bills of lading was given concerning which the auditor could make no report.

(14) Shipping tickets were found to be in the same situation.

(15) There were very few paid copies of pay rolls in the park files, and little could be told from those.

(16) The auditor pointed out numerous mistakes in allotment ledgers, telegraphic reports, cost records, and reimbursements, all of which had been managed improperly.

(17) The auditor then made a statement of a test check, as follows:

Total funds allotted	$533,145.00
Less: Type-mapping allotments	19,127.00
Total allotments for work program	514,018.00
Less: Balance unexpended (adjusted)	602.95
Total to be accounted for	513,415.05
Cost reported:
Fifth period	175,589.98
Sixth period	149,242.10
First half seventh period	56,542.35
Total costs reported	381,374.43
Unaccounted for	132,040.62

When this same auditor was questioned about this shortage he made some correction about it, as shown in the following excerpt from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 17, 1939:

"Senator MCKELLAR. You thought this was such an unusual circumstance that you ought to talk to Mr. Spillers, the general engineer, who had charge of the books, did you not?

"Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. And you called his attention to this unaccounted-for amount of $132,040.62, did you not?

"Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. And when you did that, he said there was a detached pay roll that would account for it; and when that was brought in, it was $17,259. Is that right?

"Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

"Senator MCKELLAR. If you deduct $17,259 from $132,040.62, it leaves $114,781.62. They never did find any detached or other pay rolls that accounted for that difference, did they?

"Mr. MYERS. Well, as I say, they would just tell me of items that they did not include. They did not prove it to me."

And although 3 years have passed away, that $114,781.62 has never been accounted for; and

Whereas, prior to February 16, 1938, another report was made by Auditors Brown and Jones, and criticisms of memorandum of employment, unsigned by the superintendent; time slips; purchases of gasoline and oil; travel vouchers; purchase of office furniture, and other matters were listed; and

Whereas, on January 19, 1939, Mr. Myers again made an examination in which many things were criticized; and

Whereas the testimony of Mr. Myers, auditor, as taken by Senator MCKELLAR, found on pages 6015 to 6029, inclusive, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 17, 1939, shows a distressing condition in the park at the time of the second examination; and

Whereas A. E. Demaray, Assistant Director of the National Park Service, on May 21, 1937, wrote to Mr. J. Ross Eakin a letter calling his attention to Mr. Myers' report, from which letter the following excerpts are taken:

(1) "The Emergency Conservation Work monthly progress and cost report was not in agreement with the allotment ledgers. A discrepancy of approximately $132,000 was reported to exist.

(2) "Your procurement procedure has not conformed with Emergency Conservation Work regulations.

(3) "More than $1,000,000 have been allotted to your park from Emergency Conservation Work funds; and judging from the auditors' report, there has been extreme laxity in control of funds, and the purchasing and contracting has not been properly supervised.

(4) "The auditors reported other open-market purchases in amounts exceeding the statutory limitations for which payments have not been made because competitive bids were not secured or contracts prepared.

(5) "Purchase orders for motor oil have been issued in the open market, and spark plugs and automotive repair parts have not been purchased under the General Schedule of Supplies contracts.

(6) "In another instance, in which three equally low and acceptable bids were received, the award was made to the concern nearest the park instead of by drawing lots.

(7) "When the auditors arrived at the park, the property records were in very poor shape and indicated extreme negligence on the part of the employees who were responsible for the maintenance of the records"; and

Whereas there appears a letter from J. Ross Eakin, Superintendent of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, to the Assistant Director of the National Park Service, Mr. A. E. Demaray, dated June 2, 1937, in which he says:

(1) "We heartily regret your apparent consternation in receiving the unsatisfactory report, but believe you will understand from this explanation that the records were not as irregular and the violations as numerous as portended in the report.

(2) "There were also extenuating circumstances in many instances, which were explained to the auditors; but from their abusive attitude and threats at times when the audit was trying, it was expected that no quarter would be given, and sufficient justification for their extended visit would be recorded.

(3) "It will be a difficult matter to clear up the FD570 and FD870 unliquidated encumbrances.

(4) "Our failure to encumber packing, handling, and transportation charges on Government shipping tickets was due to ignorance on our part.

(5) "There were not numerous instances where travel orders were issued and reimbursement of per diem claimed by various employees who would leave their official headquarters between 7 and 10 a. m. in the morning for points within the park nearby and return to their official headquarters early in the evening.

(6) "As to open-market purchases reported by the auditors in amounts exceeding the statutory limitation for which payments have not been made because competitive bids were not secured or contracts prepared, we fail to find any outstanding on our books."

(7) "Your reference to the trade-in of tires and tubes under contract No. 1-23p-756 E. C. W. has been noted, and there will not be a repetition of this irregularity."

(8) "The property records were in poor condition, and are not correct as yet."

(9) "In conclusion, I desire to state that in my many years' experience as Superintendent never has an auditor come into my park with the supercritical attitude of Messrs. Myers and Douglas. Helpfulness should have been their first objective, but it was secondary to criticism. The most of their criticism could have been covered by a simple statement that our system was not in line with the newly approved accounting system, of which we had not the slightest inkling until they arrived. This statement would have obviated the necessity of a 78-page report. Their attitude and manner of speaking were most objectionable. I venture the assertion that few, if any, chief clerks in the Service could have done better than Chief Clerk Ray under the circumstances."; and

Whereas from the above closing paragraph of the letter it will be seen that Eakin undertook himself to condone his own mismanagement, waste, destruction, and probable dishonesty by abusing the auditors who did their duty and showed the facts, and that not only their attitude and manner were objectionable to Eakin but their report—in which hundreds of charges of every kind and description, including an unaccounted-for sum of at least $114,000, were made against him—must have been objectionable to him also; and

Whereas in order to curry favor with the Department of the Interior, the said Eakin has signed an affidavit stating that he voted for President Roosevelt in the November 1936 election, as follows:

"It is my understanding that it has been claimed that in the 1936 general election I voted for Landon for President. This is untrue, as I voted for President Roosevelt.

"I had heard rumors from a source which I do not remember that my ballot was to be checked to see for whom I voted. I marked my ballot, laid it on top of the ballot box, turned around, and walked from the room. Any ballot voted for Mr. Landon was certainly not the ballot I marked."; and

Whereas D. Neal Adams, Clarence C. Corpening, and J. Mayes have made affidavits that they were election officers in the November 1936 election and after the election saw the ballot of the said J. Ross Eakin which he marked, not for President Roosevelt but for Mr. Landon, which, if true, shows that the said J. Ross Eakin falsified in such above-quoted affidavit for the purpose of currying favor with the Department of the Interior: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, three of the majority party and two of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to examine into all the facts concerning these reports and references to the report, and to examine the auditors and the said J. Ross Eakin, and to examine the three affiants, Mayes, Corpening, and Adams, and to investigate other matters connected with the management of the said Great Smoky Mountains National Park. The committee shall report its findings and recommendations to the Senate at the next session.

For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

MANUEL A. D'FREITAS—ADDRESS BY EDWARD G. PENNIMAN

[Mr. LODGE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Edward G. Penniman relative to the late Manuel A. DeFreitas, which appears in the Appendix.]

MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President and Senators, we pause today to do homage to those whom we love dearest and best—our mothers. One full generation has come into being since Miss Anne Jarvis, of Philadelphia, first succeeded in having the second Sunday of May annually set aside as a special day of reverence and prayer for mothers departed, and a day of respect and devotion for mothers living. Today this beautiful custom has spread to 50 countries throughout the world.

It was William Dean Howells who said:

> A man never sees all that his mother has been to him until it's too late to let her know that he sees it.

With this all too true reflection in mind, I want to discuss briefly the obligations of Mother's Day in this troubled year 1939.

It is altogether fitting and meet that we of this day bow our heads in memory of the mothers of that great national constellation—Mary Washington, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, and Abigail Smith Adams, who has the unique distinction of being the wife of one President and the mother of another. It is a characteristic of our Presidents that they have invariably paid high tribute to their mothers.

We all recall the immortal words of Lincoln:

> All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother.

A second obligation of Mother's Day falls upon those of us now living. Who will deny the spiritual value of a few minutes of contemplation of the loving kindness of a departed mother? Aristotle teaches us the great moral benefit even to the soul resulting from the highest poetic action. The same feeling will come to those who linger over the memory of the one who, to use the words of the poet Coleridge, "is a mother still, the holiest thing alive."

Happy is the man whose mother is still at home to guide and counsel and befriend. Let him rejoice that he can still by word, by token, and by deed give appreciation for all that he is and hopes to be.

The obligation of the state to mothers is a duty which peculiarly falls on us who, by our service in the Congress of the United States, actually represent the mothers of the Republic. We must not hesitate or falter when it comes to any reasonable legislative proposals honestly designed to aid American motherhood, American children, or the American home.

If America has good mothers, it follows as the night follows the day that we shall have good sons and daughters. Someone has rightly said:

> If you would reform the world from its errors and ways, you will have to begin by enlisting the mothers.

When we consider the gradual and inevitable decline in birth rate that the next few decades will bring to the American scene, the need for a closer understanding between the Government and mothers is at once apparent. Indeed, in the years to come, only by the wisest, well-planned program of social legislation for mothers and children can the vigor and stability of our Nation survive and thrive.

Fortunately—and for this thank God—we in the United States have not seen fit to regard mothers as breeders for the state, nor do we regard children as the property of the state. I hope such doctrines may never touch our shores.

To me it seems that the American family must not seek to escape the obligations of parenthood. It is an unfortunate and disturbing fact that those who can best afford to have children are the very persons who do not. This is not the place to discuss the eugenic implications of this problem. I merely wish to warn that all true Americans must give serious concern to the need of preserving our own sound American stock.

Another obligation I would mention is the need of vigorously urging throughout the land programs for improving the health of mothers and children. We who represent them in the Congress and in the State assemblies need the expert advice of mothers everywhere.

I cannot close without mentioning, too, that we of the Senate should earnestly solicit the views of American mothers in the perplexing and exceedingly difficult field of legislation designed to promote peace. We have not forgotten, and we shall not forget, the great sacrifice of the Gold Star Mothers. We do not want to call upon our mothers to give their sons to the bloody sacrifice of battle. At this very moment the Senate is painstakingly engaged in discussion of measures designed to keep us out of war. If the mothers of America could concertedly speak out, I am confident that the task of the Senate would be more clear. Our American boys must not be sacrificed again on foreign soil.

Mr. President, this memorial to Mother's Day would not be complete without poetic tribute to our mothers. I therefore wish to read, in closing, Lord Byron's celebrated poem, She Walks in Beauty:

She walks in beauty, like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies;
And all that's best of dark and bright
Meet in her aspect and her eyes:
Thus mellowed to that tender light
Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impaired the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress
Or softly lightens o'er her face;
Were thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear their dwelling place.

And on that cheek, and o'er that brow
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow,
But tell of days in goodness spent,
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent!

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1100) for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess on last Friday the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] stated that he hoped to obtain the floor this morning for the purpose of making some remarks on the pending bill. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to Senate bill 1100, which proposes to renew the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida.

The able Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in a 3-hour address on Friday, accurately covered the historical background of the entire enterprise in a thoroughly judicial and temperate fashion, and has relieved me of the necessity of dealing at all with that phase of the matter. I concur in his history, although I profoundly dissent from his conclusions; and I am about to indicate why I dissent and why, in my judgment, the majority of the American people dissent.

As a matter of fact, the Gallup poll, which is now accepted in many quarters as a rather authentic indication of public opinion, recently disclosed that in a test of American opinion upon this subject 75 percent of the American people were found to be opposed to the Florida canal project.

It would seem to me that 75 percent of the American people still have a right to be consulted in respect to the distribution of their money. I am speaking this morning for the 75 percent.

Mr. President, we have been sitting here for nearly a week in the presence of the lovely pictures and charts hung about the walls of the Senate, which disclose the canal project in all the synthetic allurements of a charming dream. They are the product of intense and wholly sincere local aspirations, plus a fine real-estate development, plus inconclusive and often contradictory Government reports, plus an indefatigable lobby, plus an emotional infinity of wishful thinking. It seems to be my grim task to recall realities.

If we want to settle this issue on the basis of pictures, there ought to be a few others hanging here, and I should like to hang a few of them in the gallery of the Senate's mind's eye. For example, I wish there might be a picture at the right of the Vice President's rostrum of one of these great dredges astride Secretary Morgenthau's office trying to dig two or three hundred million dollars out of an empty Treasury. That would be an interesting picture. It is one we ought often to inspect when we are tempted to new liberalities.

Then over on the other side of the Vice President's desk I wish I might see a picture of a perspiring Senator undertaking to explain to some baffled reliefer in the United States the sense of economy which moves us to take $50,000,000 off the poor list and then pour $300,000,000 into a sublimated ditch.

I should like to hang some other pictures. I should like to hang a picture over here of all the other river and harbor projects in this country which have been approved not only by the engineers but also by the Congress, waiting their turn to be financed from an anemic Treasury, put off and put off and put off; great flood-control projects, great harbor and river development projects, for which there is not a penny available—none intended in the next year or two—while we are asked to concentrate a prodigal fortune upon one project in one section of one State. It would be a beautiful lesson in monopoly.

I should like to see another picture over yonder of what may be the devastated and denuded section of fruitful central Florida if the proponent geologists are guessing wrong in their estimate of the effect of this enterprise upon the jugular vein of Florida's water supply.

I certainly should like to see a large picture yonder of the completed enterprise, with General Markham standing at the east entrance to the lonesome canal with a copy of the speech of the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in one hand and a telescope in the other, watching the ships as they still go down the sea, preferring the Florida Straits and their open waters to 200 restricted miles of impractical canal; General Markham wondering why in the world the ship operators insist upon running the ships the way they want to run them instead of the way General Markham thinks they ought to run them.

Mr. President, the truth of the matter is, fundamentally, that the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], was entirely right within the week end when he asserted, "The time has come to taper off on Federal spending," and, "It is time for the red light to be flashed, because the national debt has jumped $18,500,000,000 since 1933." When the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee issues this warning it certainly comes from an unpartisan source; it comes out of long experience in public life, and out of a sound judgment in respect to public problems; and I am standing this morning with the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, to flash the red light against a needless commitment of this Government to two or three hundred million dollars of expenditure which cannot be justified or defended.

Mr. President, the pending bill is a national symbol of the indefensible and improvident expenditure of public funds. It should be defeated not only because it is indefensible and improvident but also because it is a symbol. At a moment when the country is deeply anxious about the solvency of the Federal Government, the passage of this bill would cruelly disillusion even those brave souls who still think that the Congress intends sooner or later to protect the public credit.

If this thing can be perpetrated under the circumstances, then the country is indeed helpless. I desire to do what I can today to protect the Treasury and the taxpayers of this country from a two or three hundred million dollar raid, which I expect to prove is without the remotest semblance of tangible justification.

Two or three hundred million dollars is still a lot of money, even in this day of jitterbug arithmetic. Indeed, it is a fabulous amount of money, particularly in the presence of pyramiding Federal deficits, which, unless checked, will lead too soon to national bankruptcy or to equally suicidal inflation. Confronting these deficits and their implication, and particularly confronting the vast extraordinary appropriations which national necessity today makes unavoidable, I assert that no Senator who votes two or three hundred million dollars to any project which is not pressingly needed can ever again lay the slightest claim to interest in either economy or conservation; and when the project is not only not needed, but is not even wanted by most of those presumed to be served by it, the sheer waste of two or three hundred million dollars becomes an insufferable affront to the public welfare.

That, in sum total, is what I believe to be the basic issue in this effort to revive the moribund Florida canal. That, in my opinion, is the bitter question to be finally answered by the Senate when the roll is called on Senate bill 1100.

Mr. President, I indict the bill on the following specific grounds, and I shall undertake to prove each indictment:

First. The bill is a gigantic blanket check, totally lacking in limitations or specifications. It can mean any one of half a dozen different things, and it can involve costs far outstripping the immediate estimates upon which it pretends to be based.

Second. Even at its most conservative estimate, it will require an appropriation for the next fiscal year nearly equal to all of the money assigned by the Budget to all of the other river and harbor projects in the whole United States. Thus it is a gross imposition upon the resources available for the development of national water resources.

Third. It is not economically justified. Its economics are built solely and exclusively on hypothetical deductions. It is specifically condemned by the ship operators who would be presumed to use it. Not a single ship operator in all of the related waters could be or was produced at the extensive Senate hearings in the last 3 years to ask for the project, or to recommend it, or to consent to its ultimate utility.

Fourth. It is not related in any serious way to the national defense. It plays no part in our contemporary defense program, as demonstrated by the conclusive fact, all by itself, that the letter from the President renewing the project proposes that it may not be completed for another 15 years. The Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy has such little tangible interest in the project as a part of a national-defense program that he does not care if it takes 15 years to produce it.

Fifth. It involves an undetermined hazard to the desperately important ground water supply of a large sector of Florida. Experts disagree. Some guess one thing, others guess something else. The wrong guess, however, Mr. President, would ruin Florida and confront Uncle Sam with incalculable claims for damages.

Sixth. In whatever degree it gets any local traffic, and of course it will get some, it will drive the railroads of Florida closer to bankruptcy, and threaten the sufficiency of railway service. We have a surplus of transportation facilities in this country today, and this is no time to increase the surplus. These Florida railroads already are surviving only by the thinnest line. The railroad brotherhoods join the railroads in emphasizing this jeopardy and in demanding the bill's defeat.

At this point I send to the desk a statement addressed to the Congress by the United Railroad Brotherhoods, and ask that it be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

OFFICES OF THE NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1939.

To the Members of the Seventy-sixth Congress:

Railroad labor organizations present this as an appeal for your assistance in their endeavor to prevent further governmental subsidization of any of the competitive forms of transportation. Our immediate protest is against the proposed construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across the State of Florida and the proposed construction of the waterway to connect the Tombigbee and Tennessee Rivers.

During the last few years more than a million railroad employees have lost their positions and much of this loss of employment has been caused through Government subsidization of competitive forms of transportation. Under these conditions we believe it proper to protest further subsidies, at least until there has been some full study made of the public necessity of all forms of transportation that may demonstrate their ability to exist without subsidies.

Railroad labor considers the appropriation of the many millions of dollars that projects such as the Florida canal must require before it could be completed and the continued appropriation of additional millions of dollars for operation and maintenance as violating all sound economic and fair governmental principles.

In presenting this appeal for your assistance we shall hope that you will not only vote against these proposals, but that you may also give us your assistance in expressing opposition to these projects.

Thanking you for your cooperation and with full appreciation for favors you have extended our interests, we remain,

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR J. LOVELL,
Vice President, National Legislative Representatives Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen.
J. F. FARQUARSON,
National Legislative Representative Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.
D. CELONE,
Vice President, National Legislative Representatives Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen of America.
JOHN T. CORBETT,
Assistant Grand Chief Engineer, National Legislative Representatives Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.
W. D. JOHNSON,
Vice President, National Legislative Representatives Order of Railway Conductors.
A. F. STOUT,
National Legislative Representative Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in order to be entirely fair about the matter, let me say that the American Federation of Labor takes a different position, and I shall present its letter a little later with comments in connection with it, to show what I believe to be its fallacious premise.

Let me continue the summary of the indictment which I bring to the bar of the Senate against this enterprise.

Seventh. A historical appraisal of the project's checkered career during the 20 years that it has been knocking at the Treasury's door puts the accumulated weight of the Government's own expert and official opinion heavily against it. It is no better today than it was upon the many other occasions when it has been rejected by R. F. C. and P. W. A., when it has been rejected by Boards of Rivers and Harbors Engineers, when it has been rejected by committees of the House and Senate, and by the House and Senate themselves.

Eighth. The State of Florida itself is divided. A large portion of the State not only opposes the canal but actually fears it with anxiety and consternation. I deal with this particular phase of the matter with hesitation, because Florida is amply and ably represented upon the floor of the Senate. But in justice to the thousands of citizens of Florida who have communicated with me their expression of anxiety and consternation I send just two typical telegrams to the desk and ask that they be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

MIAMI BEACH, FLA., May 9, 1939.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senator:

Am sure you will find a great majority of people of Florida opposed to cross-State canal. Just saw pamphlet showing the many hundreds of ships passing through this proposed canal. Am sure if a corporation would send such sales propaganda through the mail to sell their wares they would be guilty of using mails to defraud.

Speaking of relief measure, please note they have special machines that would take place of hundreds of men on each machine. Did it ever occur to the engineers that jetties extending many miles in the Gulf, constructed of native rock, would be useless, and if they ever considered the cost of keeping canal free of water hyacinth?

JOHN H. LEVI,
Mayor, Miami Beach, Fla.

SANFORD, FLA., May 10, 1939.

Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG:

The farmers, whose property and livelihood are jeopardized by construction of sea-level canal, and countless thousands living in cities and towns dependent upon water from wells, join in wishing success to your efforts in their behalf. If the delicate underground machinery installed by the Almighty is injured or destroyed it can never be made to function again. Irreparable damage has already been done to agricultural lands by unscientific overdrainage.

Sincere best wishes.

JOSHUA C. CHASE,
Vice President, Florida Water Conservation League.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before I proceed to develop in detail each of the eight indictments which I file against this undertaking, let me call the Senate's attention to the significant fashion in which the bill comes to the floor of the Senate. It is not here with the recommendation of any committee. No, indeed! It is here without recommendation. The Commerce Committee held several weeks of hearings. Presumably the function of a committee holding hearings is to give the Senate the benefit of its conclusions from the testimony. Not so in this instance. The best the proponents of this doubtful enterprise could do was to squeak past the judgments of the Commerce Committee and get a sort of reprieve which would permit the issue to die here upon the floor. They did not dare take an affirmative vote in the committee on the merits of the canal. They knew they would be beaten. I venture the prophecy that a majority of the committee will vote "no" when the final roll is called here in the full Senate. I believe a majority knows that the bill is indefensible. So the proponents of the project made a virtue of necessity. They voted to send it here without recommendation, and they were able to get that slight and wholly empty consolation only by the vote of 10 to 9.

If ever legislation was damned with faint praise here it is in the form in which it comes to the attention of the Senate at the present time. The very nature of its appearance on the Senate calendar is a completely eloquent confession of its weakness. I shall undertake to prove once more that it is here not only without recommendation but also without justification, and that it ought to be buried beyond chance of resurrection and without benefit of clergy.

Mr. President, just for the purpose of quick identification, in a word or two let us see what this thing is that we are talking about. It is a 200-mile tortuous canal with twice as much restricted water as there is in any other waterway on earth—and most mariners hate restricted waters—trailing across the northern part of Florida from Jacksonville southwest, and finally running out into the Gulf of Mexico. Yes, after you reach land's end you have to dig another 20 miles out into the Gulf before you reach navigable water. That is 20 miles of final channel which has to be maintained virtually in the open sea. If we ever succumb to this scheme I hate to think what the maintenance of that particular stretch will cost. But we will get to that later.

It is true that the canal has been romantically discussed for perhaps a century, but it never occurred to anybody actually to put any real money into it until the present delightful dispensation of easy cash came along. Yet, easy as money was in those early days of the spending spree, and eager as were the almoners to find quick outlets for their largess, the Florida canal was just too much for most of the Government officials to swallow. There really were limits beyond which even Santa Claus hesitated to go.

A quick summary of this history will suffice. The project changed from time to time in detail through this obituary, but the project was always the Florida canal.

Mr. President, what I wish to point out is that this thing turned up first in an application to P. W. A., and the President appointed a special board to inquire into it. The board reported on September 15, 1934, and it found that if 8-cent tolls were charged the canal could pay its maintenance and operations and repay the cost of construction, without interest, in 80 years. That is a fine, businesslike prospectus.

On December 21, 1934, Maj. Philip B. Fleming, Acting Deputy Administrator of W. P. A., recommended that the project be disapproved because it was not self-liquidating. Let us make no mistake about what that decision meant or what the phrase meant. In a prior hearing I asked Secretary Ickes, who was the head dispenser of P. W. A. funds, this question: "What do you mean when you say it was rejected because it was without economic justification and was not self-liquidating? Do you mean it was not a sound business proposition?"

Mr. Ickes' reply was, "That is what I mean."

So under all the standards and tests that were applied by the P. W. A. in those early days when the latitude was fairly elastic, the rules and regulations were easy, and the requirements were none too hard, the decision as to whether or not this thing could be done on a basis of self-liquidation was that it was not a sound business proposition. We can switch the bill today any way we please; we can bring in amendments to insist that it shall be a toll canal; but we cannot make a self-liquidating project out of something by simply calling it self-liquidating. We cannot make alfalfa out of whiskers merely by saying it is alfalfa. We cannot make the project pay its way simply by asserting that we are going to charge to get into it. When I undertake, as I shall, to prove that even if it were a free canal our ship operators would not use it, then there is no other deduction left than that the thing they would not use free they certainly would not pay to use at all. The canal was not self-liquidating when it was tested by the rules of Secretary Ickes in 1934 and 1935. It is not self-liquidating today, and it cannot be made so by a mere amendment to the bill, which undertakes to give it that designation.

Let us see what happened in further respect to P. W. A. After Secretary Ickes had decided that it was a bad business proposition, and had formally disapproved it on January 28, 1935, Florida asked that the case be reopened on revised plans; and this was done. On February 2, 1935, E. H. Foley, Jr., director of the P. W. A. Legal Division, reported adversely. His judgment must be worth something, because he has just been designated by the President for a very high office and a great promotion.

On April 10, 1935, the P. W. A. Finance Division again reported adversely. Finally Secretary Ickes, declining further to reopen the subject, turned thumbs down on it for keeps.

Then there was only one way left. After Congress had given the President a blank check for $4,880,000,000 for W. P. A. work, the Florida project was undertaken and started as a W. P. A. project to the extent of $5,000,000. Then Congress balked, and the project has never since been resumed. There has been repeated declination to resume. In the interim there have been engineering reports, one from a revisory board, which was favorable; one from the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers, which finally and conclusively again was adverse; and one report from the Chief of the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers in favor of the undertaking. Because of the technicality in our law which permits the opinion of the Chief of Engineers to be all-controlling, we have the proposed legislation before us today, based upon that report.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] in the debate on Friday drew a juridical analogy, which was very illuminating, in respect to the effect of the engineering reports. Remembering that we have the revisory report, which said "yes"; the report of the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers, which said "no"; and the report of the Chief of Engineers, which said "yes," the able Senator from Nebraska suggested that the situation is analogous to a court situation, in which the lowest court said "yes," the intermediate court said "no," and then the Supreme Court said "yes."

I suggested at the time that the analogy could be bettered if the initial report were referred to in similitude to the report of a referee. Since then I have been thinking about the matter, and I think the analogy could be further improved by this simile: That the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers itself, including the Chief, is the supreme engineering court upon which the Government relies for its technical decisions. The court is divided, 7 to 1, 7 against the project and 1 in favor of it; and under our amazing practice the one opinion in favor of it, because it is the Chief's opinion, overrules the other 7. I think that comparison comes closer to an analogy; and I am sure it is the type of analogy which would not appeal to the Senator from Nebraska in its equities. He would not want the Chief Justice to overrule the whole Court.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the situation illustrates just what happens in our courts. It happens many times, and always may happen, that the lower court, the district court, decides one way and the court of appeals decides the same way. Then the case goes to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court decides it the other way by a 5-to-4 decision; and yet under our system, which we, including the Senator from Michigan, love so well and laud so highly, the vote of five Justices of the Supreme Court would prevail against the vote of four Supreme Court judges, three court of appeals judges, and one district judge. I do not think the conclusion is enticing or logical, but such a thing could happen, and it could happen in this instance if we saw fit to carry out the analogy, which, it seems to me, we could very well do.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suspect the entire discussion is not particularly pertinent. I simply wish to add by way of further parentheses that if 5-to-4 decisions are subject to critical challenge, I am sure 7-to-1 decisions would be infinitely more so; and I insist that so far as the supreme engineering court of the United States Government is concerned, the project stands adversely reported by the score of 7 to 1.

Let me come back to the detailed indictment and undertake to sustain the reasons I have given specifically for an adverse attitude.

In the first place, Mr. President, I said that the bill is a blank check and a grab bag. I said that we cannot come within $100,000,000 in money and 9 years in time of telling what it means. Talk about blind legislation! The only sure thing about the bill is that some day, and at some price, we would get some kind of a Florida canal.

Let us see if that is not so. First, we may be getting off for $198,000,000, which is the Markham estimate, and contemplates the completion of the canal with contract labor in 6 years. That is what we may be getting if General Markham's estimates are accurate. Incidentally, that is a big "if."

On the other hand, the President's letter to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, which is the impulse under which the project is renewed, suggested that the canal might well be built with relief labor at times of major unemployment, and that he did not care if from 10 to 15 years were required to build it. If it were to be built with relief labor, and if the construction time were 15 years instead of 6, I think there is no disagreement whatever that the project would cost well over $300,000,000 instead of $198,000,000, because, in the experience of General Markham, according to his testimony, relief labor increases the labor item of cost by at least 25 percent. As a matter of fact, he found when he used relief labor in digging $5,000,000 worth of this particular Florida canal that the cost of earth excavation was 20 cents per cubic yard, whereas he had estimated it would cost only 10 cents. He was only 100 percent off in his estimate.

It was said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] on Friday that under the terms of the bill the Government would be bound to proceed on the 6-year program at the $198,000,000 estimate, and that there would be no latitude to proceed in the fashion recommended and requested by the President.

Mr. President, much as I should like to yield to that conclusion as a dependable reliance, I am unable to do so, because the only Markham recommendation, as such, in the report referred to in the pending bill, namely, House Document 194 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, is in paragraph 16 of his report to Congress, and it contains none of the limitations relied upon by the Senator from Texas in order to confine the project to the Markham specifications.

The only reference to the limitations is in a subsequent paragraph which tells what "should be done" if it is desired to achieve this end. But be that as it may, I think there is an open warrant under this proposed legislation which we would find sooner or later would be used to produce the kind of canal for which the President of the United States has asked. The advocates of the canal would either get the kind he has asked for, or, if they should get the kind the Senator from Texas says is required by the bill, then they would get the kind of a canal the President has not asked for, and which would run squarely counter to the recommendation which he made to the Congress as a basis for reopening this amazing undertaking. So I say, in the first instance, our blank check may be filled in for $198,000,000, if we are lucky—that is the lowest possible figure for which it could be filled in—or it may be filled in for $300,000,000 plus.

In the second place, the proponents of the project do not know whether they are getting a free canal or a toll canal, because, under the bill as it now stands, the only thing that is indicated in respect to tolls is that the President of the United States, in his executive discretion, is invited some fine day to make a recommendation to us at some time during the course of the construction of the enterprise.

An amendment is to be offered, I understand, undertaking to make it specifically a toll canal; but, I repeat, under the bill as it stands, there may be a free canal or a toll canal. Not only that, but it may be a sea-level canal or a lock canal, because it is always asserted that if this construction finally proves to be hazardous and detrimental to the desperately important water supply of Florida, the construction would be changed to a lock basis, and thus obviate all menace whatsoever. Well, if a lock canal should be provided, of course, the transit time would be substantially increased; the alleged attraction to transiting commerce would be substantially reduced; inevitably whatever traffic it must hope to get would be reduced; and the cost would be increased by whatever amount locks cost over straight sea-level construction.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator a question for information concerning the last statement he made. According to the Senator's statement, a lock canal will cost more than a sea-level canal?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there any dispute about that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No.

Mr. NORRIS. Ordinarily it would be the reverse, it seems to me——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. Because there would be so much more excavating in a sea-level canal than there would be in a lock canal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will say to the Senator that the excavation is by far the cheapest cost factor in an enterprise of this kind. The construction of locks would far offset the cost of excavation. If the Senator will permit me, there cannot be any argument about it, because the engineers themselves have indicated that the increased cost thereby would be a minimum of $5,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot help but think of the Panama Canal. When we were building it, it was conceded, I think, without any question that a sea-level canal would cost a great deal more than a lock canal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think in the present instance the contrary would be agreed to by all concerned, and the testimony would verify it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not an authority on the subject, I merely wanted the information. So it is conceded that a lock canal would be the more expensive?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. How much additional cost would it involve?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There are no certain estimates, but the lowest estimate that has been specifically given is $5,000,000.

So, there is my first objection to this bill. It is a blank check of amazing proportions; it is a blank check not only in respect to the amount of money to which we may be committing the American people but it is a blank check in respect to the nature of the enterprise to which we may be giving our consent. I respectfully submit, particularly in view of the nature of the desperate problem which the Treasury of the United States confronts at the present time—and certainly there can be no question about the jeopardy upon that score—this is no time to write any more blank checks, and certainly not a time to write a blank check for an enterprise which I shall now undertake to prove lacks all possibility of economic justification and which is not even sought or desired by those who are chiefly identified as its contemplated beneficiaries.

The great President of the United States, in one of the most courageous messages ever written to the American Congress, on March 10, 1933, said:

> Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

I hope that if there is a wreck some of the rocks that cause it will not be the Ocala limestone rocks in the Florida ship canal.

Now for the second point of my indictment. Much as we all love Florida, we all have other States tugging at our hearts and purse strings. There is such a thing as decent equity in the distribution of public money available for public works. Frankly confessing, as it does, the fiscal extremities of the Government, the Bureau of the Budget has allowed—listen, Senators—the Bureau of the Budget has allowed only $30,000,000 for all the new river and harbor projects in all the United States in the next fiscal year for the whole country, with its far-flung water-borne commerce; yet this Florida canal alone, one project in one section of one State, would cost an average of more than $30,000,000 for each of the next 6 years under the most favorable estimates. Other worthy rivers and harbors projects up and down America have to be postponed—and I do not complain of that—until we can afford them; others, even those with unassailable credentials, are crowded into the frugal limitations of $30,000,000 for the whole Nation; yet here comes a strident, insistent, conceited demand for one project—and a dubious one at that—which will eat up as much as all the others combined. It just does not make sense, Mr. President. Great Florida, gorgeous though she be—and I salute her with real affection—is not entitled to any such special privilege. She is not the only headstone in the corner and "not the only pebble on the beach."

But let us hasten to the third point in the indictment of this white elephant—and here we approach what ought to be the crux of the whole argument. Where and what is the economic justification of sinking two hundred or three hundred million dollars in this sublimated ditch? Who will use it? What ships will transit its tortuous 200 miles? Where are its patrons? What sponsorship does it possess save local pride and local profit?

Listen, Mr. President. In all the hearings upon this bill not one single Florida shipper and not one single ship operator from anywhere appeared to say that he wanted the canal; that he would use it if constructed, or that he believed it economically justified—not one. The nearest the proponents came, under pressure of cross-examination, even to naming a friendly ship operator was when one witness rather timidly suggested that he had heard that the Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., Inc., of New Orleans, might have endorsed it. This was so spectacularly at variance with all the other marine testimony that I telegraphed Lykes Bros., and received this noncommittal reply:

> Replying to your wire date, beg to advise that no one authorized to state or testify as to our position matter referred to. Replying your question, our steamship company not favoring nor opposing the Florida Canal. Our use of any canal would be governed by the economic and safety factors once the facilities are available and these factors are known.

So the only steamship operator they could even attempt to name as favorable proved to be no more convinced than the Commerce Committee itself. He neither favors nor opposes. Like the indecisive Commerce Committee, he is "without recommendation."

But not so with other ship operators, oh, no. We now leave all doubt and hesitation behind. Almost as with one common voice they tell us that the scheme is impracticable, valueless, and wholly wanting in economic justification. These, mind you, are the navigators who are supposed to use the canal. They operate the ships whose theoretical transits of the canal are the build-up for all these fancy charts which persuasively pretend to show the vast tonnage that will flow through this waterway. Thus does cruel reality dynamite a pipe dream. Oh, it is easy to make a paper case for a scheme such as this if one consults only his imagination, his aspirations, and the multiplication table; and that is the only kind of a case that sustains the pretense of economic justification for the Florida canal. These are just dream charts and dream pictures on the Senate wall.

The President's board of review counted all the ships that had traversed the waters from the Atlantic Ocean around Florida and into the Gulf of Mexico in a given year, and then they said, "Now, isn't this wonderful! If all these ships, or most of them, had gone through the Florida canal, it would have saved six or seven million dollars in navigation costs, and therefore the canal is a bargain!" It was as simple as that! Count the ships! Put them through the canal! Never mind whether they want to go or not! Just count them anyway!

The report of General Markham—the one-man analysis upon which this legislation officially hangs—similarly counted all the commerce in these related waters. Then it arbitrarily and conveniently put enough of this commerce through the canal to make it look economically sound. But, Mr. President, these were only painted ships upon a painted sea, as I shall demonstrate. There is no proof that any such volume of commerce will transit the canal—oh, no! The proponents of the canal very carefully refrain from proof. They merely speculate. They hope and paint! Then they ask the Senate for two or three hundred million dollars on the strength of their self-serving guess!

Mr. President, these reports condemn themselves within their own texts. For example, the President's special board admits that it sent preliminary questionnaires to 74 ship operators. Now, follow me: The questionnaires go out to 74 ship operators. They never even get answers from 45. That is the extent of the interest of that majority group of operators in this undertaking. They did not even answer the questionnaires; and out of the others the board got replies from just 14—14 that could even be construed as friendly—out of 74.

If we grant the proponents of the canal these 14—which I shall presently demonstrate to be fallacious—but if, for the sake of argument, we grant them these 14, we give them only 19 percent of friendly replies, whereas the least estimate of the necessary percentage of commerce available to the canal to maintain these charts and these fancy claims requires 60 percent of friendly replies.

But let us be specific. Proofs upon these points are available if anyone dares to look at them. Let us inspect the Markham report, the one in which the late Chief of Engineers reversed the unanimous adverse opinion of the seven engineer officers on the Board for Rivers and Harbors. Let us see what happens to General Markham's thesis when it collides with reality.

Under date of January 7, 1936, I asked the able general in writing for a list of the actual steamship operators who were relied upon as favorable. Mark you, Mr. President, the Chief of Engineers has said that a great vast traffic will transit this canal because of the fact that there is a great vast traffic floating in the adjacent waters. I said to the Chief of Engineers, "Name me the ship operators upon whom you rely to come out of the open sea, and confine themselves in this restricted water, and use the canal after it is built. Who are they?" Under date of January 8, 1936, General Markham gave me his list. Now I am going to present the list—nine presumably friendly favorable ship operators. Let us see what the nine have to say for themselves. Let us put their own witnesses on the stand.

Mr. President, we are now at the heart and center of the reality as to whether or not there is any economic justification for this expenditure of two or three hundred million dollars at a moment when the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee is warning us that we had better hang a red light upon any expenditure that can possibly be postponed. Let us see what General Markham's nine have to say for themselves.

C. D. Mallory, of C. D. Mallory & Co., 11 Broadway, New York City—not my witness, but General Markham's witness—says in a letter addressed to me dated January 20, 1939:

Replying to your letter of January 18 with respect to the renewal of effort to obtain congressional appropriations to build the Florida ship canal and your inquiry as to whether I have changed my opinion on this subject of the canal, or whether it remains the same as heretofore declared, please be advised that I have given this matter my consideration.

This project would be of no material benefit or saving in the operation of our large fleet of vessels and I, therefore, feel that appropriations by Congress would be unwarranted.

That is the first of the witnesses supposed to be in favor of economic justification. What a travesty!

No. 2: Mr. Clifford B. Longley, writing from Detroit, Mich., in behalf of the Ford Motor Works, under date of January 25, 1939, in a letter addressed to me, says:

I am sorry that I was unable to reply immediately to your letter of January 18 in regard to the renewal of effort to obtain congressional appropriations to build the Florida ship canal. The position of the Ford Motor Co. as to this matter is unchanged, and I can only repeat what I wrote to you a year ago, that the canal, if completed, would offer no benefits to the shipments we might be making to the territory served by this waterway. The expenditure is uneconomic and quite unnecessary for the welfare of this country.

Witness No. 2 in behalf of economic justification for the canal. What a witness! A perfect witness for the opposition.

No. 3: R. A. Murphy, treasurer of the Kellogg Steamship Corporation, 75 West Street, New York City, under date of January 24, 1939, in a letter addressed to me, says:

We acknowledge your letter of January 18. We are pleased to be afforded the opportunity to say that the opinion we expressed 2 years ago regarding the proposed Florida ship canal has in no way altered. except that, if anything, we are more than ever convinced that the cost of this project is altogether out of proportion to the theoretical benefits which might ensue from its construction.

The third witness produced, not by me but by General Markham, to prove the economic justification of this utterly indefensible expenditure of two or three hundred million dollars. He simply unproves it.

Next, E. J. Wood, marine superintendent of Hartwelson Steamship Co., writing from Boston, Mass., under date of January 19, 1939, says:

Replying to your favor of January 18 regarding the Florida ship canal, we must advise you that our position remains the same as in 1936.

Wherefore, referring to his correspondence of 1936, he indicates that—

For several years now we have been operating from Hampton Roads, Va., to New England coal ports with our steamers, and do not anticipate that there will be any change in our present route in the near future.

Accordingly, we feel that any comment that we make in connection with this proposed canal would have little value from a practical standpoint.

In other words, this witness is not even running ships in the area where he could ever possibly send them through the canal, even if he wanted to. That is the next "favorable" witness to indicate and prove economic justification; to prove that the great fleet of painted ships that we see upon these dream charts actually will go through the canal when it is opened.

Well, let us take the next witness. J. G. Johnson, vice president of the Sinclair Navigation Co., 630 Fifth Avenue, New York City, in a letter of January 19, 1939, addressed to me, says:

Replying to your letter of January 18, 1939, concerning the proposed Florida ship canal, it is still my belief that the project is unwarranted—

This is not my witness; this is General Markham's witness—the project is unwarranted and would be of little or no use to ships traversing these related waters.

I base this principally upon familiarity with operation of vessels of our company. The savings which we estimate would be effected in operations by reason of using the canal would be more than offset by the tolls, assuming the canal would be operated on a toll basis, which I understand to be the proposal.

In addition to the matter of expense, it is my opinion that it would not be advisable or advantageous from an operating standpoint to use the proposed canal for our vessels except under occasional and unusual circumstances.

Another one of General Markham's witnesses, the only ones he produced and identified—remember that, Mr. President—the only ones he identified as his reliance in undertaking to say that ship operators will use this canal as he says they will use it when the time comes. They say they will not.

Up to date, every one of his witnesses has gone back on him. Let us see what they do from now on:

PENNSYLVANIA SHIPPING CO.
260 South Broad Street, Philadelphia, Pa.
Charles Kurz, President

JANUARY 20, 1939.

Answering your letter of January 18, regarding the proposed Florida ship canal, we are, of course, in favor of any project that will reduce voyage time and result in a saving; but after discussing the proposed Florida ship canal with my superintendent of operations, he points out that he estimates the saving in distance by using this canal would be about 374 miles, which means about 34 hours. On the other hand, he estimates that to navigate the canal under normal conditions it would take about 30 hours, resulting in a saving of about 4 hours.

The letter continues:

He believes that the 4 hours might be offset by strong tides in the canal or by having to wait until daylight to navigate the canal or by having to await turn. And since there would be additional risks of collision and grounding by using the canal it is his present opinion that it would not avail us anything to use the canal.

He states that if the canal is built, when open to commercial navigation he would route one of our ships through it and either arrange to accompany her himself or have one of his assistants do so, and then if this practical operation proved, and he believes it will not, that there will be a saving and the risks will not be increased as against the route that is presently used, he would naturally direct future ships to use the canal.

This is along the lines that we have previously written you, and my reason for writing this long letter now is so that you will not have to refer back to previous communications.

There is the next witness among those who are marshaled to prove the great, enthusiastic, contemplative support which the ship operators are going to give this undertaking. What an anticlimax.

Now we come to the next witness produced, not by me but by General Markham, to justify his estimate, produced not by me but by those who make these pretty pictures we see hanging about the walls of the Senate. Now we come to the Gulf Refining Co., James Kennedy, general manager:

We have on different occasions made careful surveys of the practical and economical features of such a waterway, but it is our conclusion from either standpoint that even if it were completed it probably never would be used by our seagoing vessels.

It is, therefore, our opinion that such an expenditure as would be neceessary to construct a canal as projected could not be economically justified and the expense would be unwarranted.

That is from a witness in favor, presumably, of this amazing proposition which is pending in the Senate.

Another of the same kind of witnesses—that is, supposed to be—D. A. Moloney, president of the Newtex Steamship Corporation, 17 Battery Place, New York. This is the eighth of the witnesses identified by General Markham, at my request, as the ship operators upon whom he relies for the prospective traffic to justify his estimate of the ultimate tonnage. This is what Mr. Moloney says:

> The cutting of the canal would, of course, shorten the distance between ports in the Gulf and the Atlantic seaboard, but in my opinion the saving would not be so great as to make the canal route more desirable unless it was operated free of tolls.
> In view of the heavy expenditure I think the question of this canal should be given a great deal more consideration and discussion than it has been given so far.

The final witness, the last one, not mine, but one of General Markham's witnesses—I will produce mine later—the president of the Brooks-Scanlon Corporation, Mr. V. S. Foley, states:

> Replying to yours of December 27, we have discontinued our water transportation and have sold most of our vessels, therefore, we hardly would be interested in the operation of boats through the cross-State Florida Canal.

So, Mr. President, there is the case for the economic justification of the canal, nine representative ship operators identified by the author of this favorable engineering report, which is the basis for the bill now pending before the Senate, nine witnesses produced to justify those conclusions, nine witnesses who are supposed to say "Yes, we think this is a great thing from a ship operator's standpoint, and we will love to use it when the time comes." Of the nine of them, two are not even operating in that area, and could not go through the canal even if they wanted to, and the other seven unanimously say there is no economic justification whatsoever for this enterprise or for this investment, and even if it were built—although a few of us might try it—our opinion is that in the long run it would be worth nothing to us by way of advantage.

Mr. President, that is not half the story. We have just started through this modern version of Alice in Wonderland. Let us go to the favorable report—the favorable report, God save the mark—of the special board of review itself, the thing upon which, aside from General Markham, the proponents chiefly rely for their justification. Let us look at the report.

In figuring its swivel-chair, hypothetical benefits, the special board assigns 35,000,000,000 out of 46,000,000,000 tons of potential traffic to petroleum products. In other words, oil is 80 percent of the canal dream, oil would get 80 percent of the theoretical benefits flowing from this expenditure of two or three hundred million dollars presumably. But what does oil say for itself? Let us go to a root source for our information, instead of moon-beaming in front of pretty pictures. What does oil say for itself?

Listen to this, right out of the report of the board itself. Out of the seven actual petroleum transporters answering the War Department's questionnaire, all but one expressed opinions which clearly indicate that no public benefits will be derived from the building of the canal so far as the petroleum traffic is concerned. The one concern commenting favorably upon the construction of the canal is engaged chiefly in the transportation of blackstrap molasses, and only occasionally, once or twice a year, hauls oil.

According to table 40, annex 2, of the report itself, the 6 companies expressing themselves unfavorably toward the construction of the canal operate a total of 145 tankers. In other words, here is a definite showing, annexed to the report, of 7 shipping concerns operating a total of 147 tankers in the oil trade, 6 of which, operating a total of 145 out of the 147 tankers, expressing themselves unfavorably toward the construction of the canal, and there is only 1 concern which says, "Sometimes we might find it desirable to operate 1 or 2 tankers in the oil trade through the canal." In other words, the report itself condemns itself.

Let us pursue this oil prospectus a little further, since it seems to represent about four-fifths of the broken reed upon which this fantastic proposal leans. I have already mentioned the Gulf Refining Co. and the Sinclair Navigation Co., both adverse. Let us ask a few others, and let them speak for themselves. After all, when we are asked for two or three hundred million dollars, at this moment of critical financial jeopardy in the life of this country, we ought to have something besides hypothetical, wishbone hopefulness upon which to base our decisions.

The proponents admit that they expect to rely upon oil for 80 percent of the justification. I have already demonstrated from their own report that most of their own witnesses in oil are adverse. Let me produce a few of my own.

This is from the Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., J. J. McGuire, general manager, June 3, 1936:

> I have questioned our operating division, as well as the masters on our ships, and the unanimous opinion is that as far as we are concerned this proposed waterway is neither necessary nor desirable. Even if the canal were open to free transportation, without tolls or any other charges, it is very doubtful if there would be any advantage in our using it. This being the consensus of opinion of our practical people, who have had years of experience, I will answer your question by saying we do not feel that the expenditure of such a large amount as $140,000,000 to $200,000,000 is warranted.

I wanted to be sure he had not changed his mind in the meantime, because many minds have been changed, I concede, and I cannot understand as to some of them. I therefore telegraphed Mr. McGuire again, and on January 19, 1939, he stated:

> Since my letter to you of January 3, 1936, our position has not changed in the slightest, and our viewpoint on the proposed Florida ship canal today remains the same as in 1936, as explained in the letter to which I have referred above.

That is from one of the chief oil-tanker operators upon the sea.

Let us take another picture. I have this letter from the Cities Service Transportation Co.:

> We have given this matter considerable attention and do not feel that the canal will serve a useful purpose, except possibly locally, and if it is constructed it is not our intention to send any of our large tankers through it, even though there are no tolls. In our opinion, the canal is too long for practical navigation. While there is a saving of time, the additional expense for pilotage and the possibility of damage to our ships going through this long canal will not compensate for the time saved.

I wanted to be sure he had not changed his mind, so I asked him to bring his testimony down to date. Under date of January 23, 1939, Mr. Story wrote:

> In answer to your letter of January 8 regarding the Florida ship canal, we are still of the opinion that the canal would be too long for practical navigation, and we have not changed our opinion that it would be uneconomical for our vessels.

Let us ask another company. The Sun Oil Co., in a letter dated January 3, 1936, said:

> The Government should not build such a canal without charging such a toll as would insure the Government a fair return on its investment. If they do not charge toll, I would construe the entire project as one of special privilege, which I for one do not desire.
> It is difficult for me to see how the savings, even if no toll were collected, would exceed $3,000,000 per year. Unless my figures are wrong, this is not far off, as the benefit, if any, will go largely to the oil industry. Whether or not there will be any saving will depend upon the details of construction and the speed permitted; but I feel confident in saying that from the standpoint of economics such a project is without justification.

Let us take just one more witness, Mr. President. The testimony of them all is all the same. Again I call to the Senate's attention that the proponents of the canal were unable to produce a single witness to the contrary before the Senate Commerce Committee in all the 2 or 3 years' time the matter has been pending. Under those circumstances it scarcely seems necessary to multiply the exhibits, but I wish to be perfectly sure that every Senator within the sound of my voice knows that those upon whom the proponents of this enterprise rely for the hypothetical showing upon these charts, when they testify for themselves say there is no economic justification whatsoever in the undertaking, and they do not contemplate the use of the canal for transit by their own ships.

Let us see what the Standard Oil of New Jersey says. The following letter is from Robert L. Hague, general manager, marine department:

It is our opinion that this project is ill-advised and is not in conformity with the mature consideration of practical shipping people. In our judgment the expenditure of $140,000,000 to $200,000,000 on this project is not justified by economic considerations, nor by present or potential traffic, which could profitably make use of the canal.

Therefore, as we do not believe there would be any monetary advantage to this company, and in consideration of anticipated delays due to fog, increased collision hazards while in the confined waters of the canal, and added restrictions which would probably be imposed on oil tankers on account of the nature of their cargoes, we do not contemplate using this canal should it be constructed.

Mr. President, this testimony cannot be ignored, it cannot be brushed aside, it cannot be answered by any amount of wishful thinking, or by any amount of beautiful pictures hung upon the Senate wall.

It seems needless further to pyramid these exhibits. All available testimony is practically unanimous. It culminates in one smashing verdict of condemnation. There is no economic justification for the Florida canal, and every realistic examination proves it. A lot of fine-spun theories developed in the congenial atmosphere of a promoter's brain may pretend to show a pretty picture, but when the dream collides with reality it is dissipated into thin air, and that is precisely where $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 of the people's money will go if the Senate surrenders to this infatuation.

Mr. President, it will not do to try to brush the testimony aside on the convenient theory that some sinister, selfish motive inspires this unanimity of opposition from those who must use the canal to give it any semblance of justification. If there is a "sinister motive" behind these opinions, the same "sinister motive" will remain to guide these ships away from the canal after it is built. We will be just as much at the mercy of the "sinister motive" after the canal is built as we are today.

Mr. President, I do not believe there is a "sinister motive." I think this is simply the voice of experience pleading against the voice of theory.

By the way, the Department of Commerce had something to say upon this score. Under Secretary Roper the Department of Commerce made an intimate survey of the project, particularly its possible economic benefits. The report is 2 feet thick. I quote from it briefly. This is what the Department of Commerce, under Secretary Roper, said in its report:

The consensus of opinion of that part of the shipping industry with which contact has been established in the preparation of this study appears to be that the probable cost of building the projected waterway is not justified through any benefits which might thereby accrue to the cargo or the vessel. The significance of this is that it rests primarily upon the considered opinion of the principal and naturally most interested group, namely, the tanker trade.

Mr. President, the question always inevitably arises in the minds of those who contemplate this interesting problem, why would they not use the canal if it were in existence? Let the Department of Commerce give one answer out of many to that question. Again I quote the Department report:

A significant question which has been generally raised relates to the length of time a vessel would be confined to restricted waters. It has been pointed out by ship operators that the proposed waterway would be practically twice as long as the world's longest canal—the Suez—and that roughly 36 to 40 hours would be required to move a vessel from open water to open water over this distance. The question reflects directly—

Here is the answer:

The reluctance of those responsible for the operation of ships to have them confined to restricted waters.

Oil tankers will not operate in restricted waters except as a last resort. It is too dangerous, because the slightest collision may produce explosion and disaster.

So, Mr. President, the original report of the Department of Commerce, justifying every other bit of available evidence, still stands today as a challenge and an indictment, in spite of the fact that a one- or a two-page cavalier and superficial letter from Mr. Roper's successor, the optimistic Mr. Secretary Hopkins, undertook to veto the recommendation that was made at the conclusion of a 2-year inquiry, which resulted in the printing of a report 2 feet thick.

No, Mr. President, there is no economic justification which would warrant a prudent Senate in passing the pending bill and authorizing an irrevocable commitment to this costly dream. Even the plea for release from maritime jeopardy in the Florida Straits disappears upon examination. This is almost funny, if anything could be funny in connection with such a serious contemplation. We have been told about the horrible jeopardy in the Florida Straits; of the nightmare of the passenger who has to submit himself to the dangers of the Florida Straits. God, we must build this canal in the name of humanity because of these awful dangers in the Florida Straits.

That is a very moving appeal, Mr. President; but unfortunately, according to a report furnished me by the United States Coast Guard, covering 16 years from 1920 to 1935, just one passenger lost his life as a result of shipwreck in these treacherous waters which we must spend two or three hundred million dollars to escape. In all those years one life was lost in one of the busiest waterways in the world. I doubt if there is on earth any safer waterway with comparable traffic.

Mr. President, the total cargo loss in these waters in 16 years was only $889,000. That is an average of $55,000 a year. And remember it is one of the busiest waterways on earth. Is it worth two or three hundred million dollars of public money theoretically to save a cargo loss of $55,000 a year? The annual upkeep alone of the canal will be more than 30 times the amount of this annual loss. We might better pay for all the losses in the Florida Straits than to pay this enormous bill to avoid the straits. No matter where the scheme is tested, it proves to be counterfeit.

Oh, but what about the national defense? That is the latest fabrication trotted out to warrant this gigantic investment. What about the national defense? These days everything gets around to the national defense. The national defense is used as an excuse or a justification for anything that anybody wants to do. Patriotism goes on parade in the direction of the Treasury with a flag in each hand. Now we are told that the Florida canal is essential to the national defense. Yes; the Navy Department now says so, in a brief letter. Of course, no official witness was sent from the Navy Department to testify upon the question. The proponents of the canal had to rely for their expert naval testimony upon a very fine old retired admiral who was brought up from the Canal Zone, where he lives within about 20 miles of the proposed canal. He was the only naval expert we had. The Navy Department sent a letter. The War Department did not.

But what of it? Mr. President, we got the truth from the War Department and the Navy Department 2 years ago, when we were not in the grip of a war hysteria, when we were not straining every nerve in behalf of preparedness, and when we were not finding it congenial to yield to every request made in the name of the Stars and Stripes. Yes; we got the truth 2 years ago. What was it? Two years ago the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors asked the War Department and the Navy Department whether there was any military value in this canal prospectus. I quote from pages 381 and 382 of the House hearings of April 1937. This is the chairman of the committee speaking:

If you will permit me to complete the record in regard to the military and naval use of the canal, here is a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Swanson, in which he says that the Navy Department does not desire to be represented before the committee, and that the proposed canal is not considered of sufficient importance in connection with the national defense from the standpoint of that Department.

It was not of sufficient importance to the Navy Department even to be represented at a hearing!

Continuing the quotation:

The Secretary of War says that from the standpoint of the War Department, it would appear to be of little or no military importance.

That is what the War and Navy Departments thought 2 years ago when Hitler had not got to Baltimore. Two years ago there was no military importance whatsoever. The War Department and the Navy Department agreed.

Mr. President, the Commander in Chief himself let the cat out of the bag when he wrote to the Commerce Committee the letter upon which the revival of this amazing enterprise rests. He wrote a letter to the committee, and that is the only reason the project came back to life. He wrote a letter stating that, as far as he was concerned, he did not care if 15 years were required to complete the construction of the canal. Mr. President, if the Commander in Chief is not any more worried about the canal than that, if he is willing to wait 15 years for the canal, I am not going to worry very much about declining to permit the detouring of two or three hundred million dollars out of the Treasury of the United States in the name of national defense at a time when we need every dollar we can obtain to put into the realities of national defense.

I might add that even if we built the canal and put it into operation 6, or 8, or 10, or 15 years from now at a cost of $198,000,000, $200,000,000, $300,000,000, or $400,000,000, so far as national defense is concerned, we could not put a battleship through it. Under date of April 7, 1939, Admiral Leahy said:

The Navy Department begs to advise you that, generally speaking, it would not be feasible for battleships of the United States Navy to transit the proposed Florida canal, constructed to a depth of 33 feet. The newer battleships could not transit such a canal. Some of the older battleships, when loaded lightly with fuel oil, could transit a 33-foot channel or canal.

So we could not put our battleships through the canal anyway. I have never heard of any strategy which in time of stress would separate the protecting fleet from a battleship, put the destroyers and cruisers through the canal, and let the battleship go off by itself through the terribly dangerous and treacherous Florida Straits. Mr. President, it is sheer nonsense.

What next? That ought to be enough, but what next? The next question agitating certain sections of central Florida is the fear that when this great gash is sunk in Florida's water arteries it will ruin the ground-water supply upon which much of Florida agriculture depends. General Markham, the chief witness for the canal, agreed to this statement upon the subject. This is General Markham speaking:

There will be some damage. The only question is, how much?

In other words, the "wet nurse" of this scheme admits that we are starting out upon something that will do damage. The only question is as to who is the best guesser as to the amount of damage which will result. At this point the experts disagree. Some able experts, after exhaustive examination, guess that the damage will be minor and utterly inconsequential; some experts guess that the damage will be major; and some experts guess that it will be catastrophic. The trouble is that nobody will know which guess is correct until the damage has been done. If the wrong guess wins this congressional battle, and if far-flung damage does result, then the $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 which the canal will cost Uncle Sam will be only the beginning of his burden, because Florida will ask for compensation, precisely as she has done in connection with the Federal campaign to exterminate the Mediterranean fruitfly. Let me read a typical letter from a citizen of Florida who resides at Tarpon Springs:

In my humble but practical opinion, much of the State will be ruined by a ship canal, sea level as proposed. I own considerable property here, and along with thousands of others, we propose to ask for damages if damage occurs. I would be very glad to testify if deemed necessary.

Mr. President, this is not the only such letter. There are scores and scores of such letters. If any Senator wishes to inspect a file of protests from the State of Florida itself, there it is. "We propose to ask for damages if damage occurs." I have heard that sentiment time and time again.

Under the circumstances I do not blame anyone for such an attitude. Thousands of Florida farmers, water conservationists and fruit growers, deeply fear that the canal project will ruin their indispensable water supply. They say, "We propose to ask for damages if damage occurs."

I do not propose to prejudge the dispute as to whether damage will or will not occur. I freely recognize the validity of the credentials of the geologists who testified upon both sides. A good case can be made on the safe side. A good case can be made on the unsafe side. However, I do propose to show that there is just as much reason to fear calamity as there is to hope that none will occur.

The question for the Senate to determine, then, is whether, in view of all the other circumstances and considerations involved, we are justified in taking a chance. The United States Geological Survey, in the Department of the Interior, our own official expert in such matters, concludes its statement upon the subject, which was reiterated in recent hearings, as follows:

To summarize, there appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects will be produced upon the important underground water supplies of the Ocala limestone in a wide zone extending outward from the canal line by the construction of a sea-level canal along route 13-B.

Let me repeat the statement of the United States Geological Survey:

There appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects will be produced.

We pay the United States Geological Survey to tell us what is going to happen in cases of this nature, and that is what they tell us. We had better take their advice or discharge them.

Let us consult Herman Gunter, Florida's own State geologist. What does this official Floridian expert say?

These dangers have caused concern to those who have given study to the underground waters of the State, and give justification for fears—

Let me repeat that—give justification for fears that the waters of certain sections may not be permanently and indefinitely usable. The lowering of the artesian head in areas where there is already such a delicate balance existing can but have a disastrous effect.

This is the State geologist of Florida speaking:

Once the fresh water is replaced by the heavier salt water, there will be no chance to rectify or alter conditions.

Now, let us consult a noted geologist of Columbia University. Dr. Henry S. Sharp says:

All geologists unite in predicting that the canal will cause some damage to the water supply, while a considerable number believe that it will prove to be a textbook example of the large-scale destruction of water resources by artificial interference with underground flow.

Others similarly testified in the recent Senate committee hearings; but suppose we take those three. The Federal experts say:

There appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects will be produced * * * in a wide zone.

The State's own geologist says that the canal "can but have a disastrous effect."

The Columbia University expert says:

Large-scale destruction of water resources by artificial interference with underground flow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator a few questions on the point he is now discussing. Is there any evidence showing how much interference there would be? The terms used by the experts are rather indefinite. What do they mean by "widespread"? How far would it extend? To what extent would damage be caused? The other question is, Would the damage extend on both sides of the canal or would it be confined to one side?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it is very difficult to give the Senator any authentic information on this subject because there just is not any available. The Senator will understand that it is all guesswork—not guesswork on my part but guesswork on the part of experts—because the best that they can do is to sink their holes and draw their hypothetical deductions. It is all metaphysics. Without undertaking to be specific about it, I should say that the experts differ as much in respect to the possible zone of damage as they do on the question of whether there would be any damage at all. Some of them have said that the damage would be confined to a 15-mile strip and probably only to a strip at the south of the canal. Other experts have described their theory according to which the damage could extend for 40, 50, 60, or 70 miles. The finest experts in the world have been produced on both sides, men of unimpeachable credentials, and there is not any way in the world to ascertain who are right until the canal is dug and we ascertain whether they have guessed right or wrong. In this connection, I am submitting to the Senate only the thought that, since there is a chance that we may guess wrong and if we guess wrong tremendous property damage will result for which we are notified the Government will be held responsible in damages, the very least we ought to do, if we have the slightest intention of passing the pending bill is to attach the same sort of an amendment which went into the Flood Control Act of 1936, that would require the State of Florida to hold the Government of the United States blameless in the event damage should ensue.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking these questions only for the purpose of getting as near as we can the truth. I confess I feel friendly toward the building of the Florida canal unless there is some reason that appeals to my good judgment why it should not be built. I remember that in nearly every great undertaking in which the Government of the United States has engaged, practically all of the large undertakings, there has been great conflict of opinion so far as experts are concerned. I do not want to disparage the consideration that should be given to them; I have confidence in all of them; but I remember—it has been a great many years ago, and I am speaking from memory entirely, and I may be wrong about some of the statements—but in reference to the Panama Canal a great many experts testified, and, as I remember, Theodore Roosevelt, who was President at that time, appointed a commission of experts. He did not confine himself to experts from the United States, but on his commission were placed several engineers of world-wide renown and international reputation to consider the question whether the Canal should be a sea-level or lock canal. I remember very distinctly that I was very much in favor of a sea-level canal, so far as a layman could judge from what I had read; but, if I am not mistaken, President Theodore Roosevelt discarded the report of all the experts. The commission, as I remember, reported in favor of the sea-level canal. President Roosevelt set the report aside and made it a lock canal, notwithstanding the report of the experts.

As I remember in the case of the Boulder Dam, there was great disagreement on the part of experts. One argument that appealed very greatly to me, at least, made by the experts was that in a region that was subject to earthquakes the entire improvement would probably be destroyed by earthquakes. Nevertheless we went ahead.

Another instance was in connection with the construction of the Norris Dam. There was a disagreement amongst the experts about the marble deposits which were in the ground there. The disagreement went to the extent of a difference of millions of dollars. The views of the experts were disregarded, and after the evidence was finally adduced in court it was developed that the experts on one side were altogether wrong.

I should like to get all the information I can concerning the disagreement of the experts in the case of the Florida canal. I do not believe we ought to build this canal if thereby we are going to ruin the water supply of a large portion of Florida. I can see that the damage might be very great—so great that it could not be compensated for—and we ought not to make a mistake. Yet I have never known a great undertaking of this kind as to which the experts have agreed; they have always disagreed. I concede, as the Senator from Michigan does, that the experts are moved by lofty, honorable motives; they are doubtless all honest, and we ought to be guided as well as we can by their opinions.

I should dislike to see a lock canal, instead of a sea-level canal, built in Florida; yet if it is necessary in the building of the canal to save damage to a large portion of Florida's water supply, we may, if we build the canal, be driven to build a lock canal instead of a sea-level canal.

I remember in the case of the Panama Canal that I was personally very much in favor of a sea-level canal. The Canal was authorized a great many years ago, in the Fifty-eighth Congress. I listened to the debates and to the arguments made, particularly by Representative Burton, of Ohio, who, I think, made one of the greatest speeches that were ever made on that subject in the House of Representatives. I became converted by the argument, and I now think that it would have been a colossal mistake if we had undertaken to build across the Isthmus of Panama a sea-level canal instead of the lock canal which President Theodore Roosevelt decided should be built.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, the decision as between a sea-level canal and a lock canal in Panama was not based upon any question of water supply?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. It was based on altogether other considerations?

Mr. NORRIS. It was really based on what it was going to cost, how long it would take, and whether it could be operated.

Mr. BARKLEY. There was a difference in the level of the Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans, which had considerable bearing on the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. It was conceded that to meet that difficulty there would have to be locks in the canal. When I say "a sea-level canal," I do not mean one with no locks in it at all, for the level of the Pacific and the Atlantic vary a great deal and made locks necessary. But when we speak of "a lock canal" there, or, at least, when I speak of it, I have in mind the probable necessity of widening the canal and deepening it so as to avoid any locks made necessary by the Chagres River, which, in reality, supplies the canal with water.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the difference in the level of the Atlantic and the Gulf does not exist to the extent which it existed in the case of the Panama Canal between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, as I understand. So that element would not enter into the necessity for a lock canal in Florida.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, what the Senator from Nebraska says about clashing experts is, of course, true, it is always true, and we are put to the necessity ordinarily of making our decision and putting our stake on one or the other. But in most of the instances to which the able Senator from Nebraska has referred the damage which would have resulted if we had guessed wrong would have been essentially a monetary damage or a monetary loss, which could be overtaken. The tragedy of this situation is that if we should happen to guess wrongly a loss will have resulted for which no amount of money can compensate, but which will be irretrievable through the centuries. And when the Senator emphasizes the possibility of obviating this difficulty through the construction of a lock canal rather than a sea-level canal, which would unquestionably entirely obviate any possibility of damage to the water supply—when he suggests an exploration of the question of substituting a lock canal for a sea-level canal, the trouble is that he collides once more with the basic economics of the proposal, because certainly if ship operators cannot find any economic advantage in transiting a sea-level canal in 38 or 40 hours, they never would be able to find any advantage in transiting a lock canal, which would take them 50 or 60 hours. So it makes no difference from what phase we approach the matter; it seems to me we find ourselves down a blind alley when hunting favorable arguments.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. There is only one lock involved in this canal in any event; is there not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. NORRIS. I think there is only one. If we should decide in favor of a lock canal, it would mean but one lock, as I understand. I may be wrong about that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Well, even one lock is that much more deterrent in the time of transit, and that much more deterrent to the economic attractiveness of the transit.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have no intention to labor the subject further. I have presented my case, I hope, for the last time. To me, there just is no possibility of more than one responsible senatorial answer.

Summarizing it, we confront a tremendous financial emergency in the Treasury of the United States. That fact must be conceded. When we confront a tremendous emergency in the Treasury of the United States we have no business draining it of a single, solitary cent that can be postponed in respect to its expenditure, and certainly we have no right to drain it of a single, solitary cent which is dedicated to an unsound proposition like the pending one.

Secondly, this proposition is unsound, because it is essentionally a grab bag in its terms. Nobody knows what it means, and nobody will know what it means until the thing is completed. But, worse than that, it is economically unsound, because all the ship operators who have been identified by the proponents of the canal as witnesses upon whom they rely to prove the utility of the canal unite in a unanimous condemnation of the entire enterprise.

There is no validity to the appeal that we must do this thing in behalf of the national defense. I have made that fact clear. There is a jeopardy involved in respect to the Florida water supply. There is no doubt, as disclosed by the Gallup poll, that 75 percent of the American people do not want the Senate to vote this amazingly indefensible appropriation.

I leave my argument at that point, in the prayerful hope that the tax resources of 75 percent of the American people will not be dissipated by the Senate of the United States upon the roll call upon Senate bill 1100.

PURCHASE OF ARGENTINE CANNED BEEF BY UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the entire Middle and far West and Southwest were shocked Friday night to learn that President Roosevelt is insisting that the United States Navy buy Argentine canned beef in preference to beef produced and processed in the United States.

I desire to read at this point a statement by D. M. Hildebrand, of Seward, Nebr., president of the United States Livestock Association, in relation to this matter:

The fact that the present administration has seen fit to buy beef from Argentina when our own livestock producers have been working under a heavy handicap for the last 4 or 5 years indicates that it is not in sympathy with making a market for our feed grains, as the only market the farmer has for corn and byproducts of the farm is livestock.

With taxes mounting, certainly the livestock producers in the United States should have the first opportunity in the American market.

The best aid that agriculture and livestock producers can have is to provide a market for what we produce in the United States. When the United States Government buys Argentine beef, and when the President of the United States makes a public statement that Argentine beef is superior, other consumers of beef are encouraged to do the same thing.

We question the statement that Argentine beef is better than American corn-fed beef.

I think Congress should pass a law prohibiting our Government from supplying its needs for livestock products from abroad so long as they can be produced in this country.

Mr. President, I also wish to read a telegram from Gov. Payne H. Ratner, of Kansas, and a joint telegram from William Ljungdahl and Will J. Miller, respectively president and secretary of the Kansas State Livestock Association. Both telegrams were sent to President Roosevelt.

The telegram from Governor Ratner is as follows:

As Governor of one of the great beef-producing States, I want to voice protest against the purchase for the United States Navy of Argentine-produced canned beef. On behalf of cattle producers of Kansas and Western States, I hope this order can be canceled, and that definite policy be established for the future to prevent the purchase of foreign products by the United States Government where domestic goods are available. Kansas produces more than $70,000,000 worth of marketable beef annually. It is one of our greatest and most important products. The United States Government is spending millions of dollars each year to aid agriculture. The Kansas producers of livestock, along with those of the Western States, are struggling to find adequate markets for their products. It would seem to me to be consistent with good domestic policy and a duty to our farmers to give American producers the benefit of the market made by Government purchases and thus aid the agricultural industry.

Press dispatches intimate the good-neighbor policy may be involved in this purchase. It seems to me neighborliness, like charity, begins at home, and that our first duty to livestock producers is to those of our own country. I am informed that in 1938 our country imported some 157,000,000 pounds of corned beef, which, it seems, is doing pretty well toward our foreign neighbors without placing with them our own Government orders.

Of course, a friendly trade relationship with Argentine and other sister American nations is of vital importance to the American continents and to the United States. We must do everything within reason and justice to promote such a relationship. We in Kansas, however, feel that the President's first duty in neighborliness is to the people of the United States who in this case are the beef producers of Kansas and of the Western States. We believe in sound trade policies with our American neighbors, and want to encourage neighborliness with them, but we do not believe that such policies should be established at the direct expense of our United States producers.

The telegram from President Ljungdahl and Secretary Miller, of the Kansas State Livestock Association, is as follows:

Members of the Kansas Livestock Association and beef producers throughout the State are shocked by press reports to the effect that our President has approved the purchase of canned corned beef from Argentine for use in feeding the Navy. Not only are livestock producers shocked but indignant at the inference that canned corned beef processed in this country is inferior to the Argentine product. We urge immediate cancelation of the Argentine purchase order.

Producers of meat animals throughout our country need every possible help in obtaining the very best market for their products. Recent years of severe drought and unfavorable markets have brought serious losses to livestock producers and if they survive these losses must have every advantage possible in marketing meat animals.

Our beef producers naturally object to being sacrificed upon the altar of so-called good-neighbor policy and no good neighbor would expect it.

Mr. President, I indorse 100 percent the statements made by Governor Ratner, by Mr. Ljungdahl and Mr. Miller, and by Mr. Hildebrand.

I cannot add to the force of their arguments by any statement that I may make; but I wish to state that I was both surprised and shocked at President Roosevelt's statement.

It may be true that Argentine tinned beef can be purchased more cheaply than can the United States product; but that statement would apply to many articles and commodities that are purchased by the Government of the United States and by the people of the United States.

The Government of the United States would save money by having its battleships and cruisers and other seacraft constructed in British shipyards, or in the Scandinavian countries; but there has been no demand from the cattle-producing sections that the United States economize at the expense of American shipbuilders and American labor.

Undoubtedly English woolen goods could be purchased more cheaply than American woolens; but the cattle-producing region has made no demands that the tariffs be reduced to allow these woolens to compete on more even terms with American woolens.

Undoubtedly labor costs in the United States could be sharply reduced if the restrictions on immigration were removed, and cheap labor were allowed to flow into the United States.

The farmers of the United States have supported the American tariff policy; they have supported the restriction of immigration; and they have done this in the face of the fact that these restrictions on imports from abroad compel them at times to pay high prices for everything the farmers have to buy.

No wonder the people in the great agricultural regions of the United States feel they have been betrayed, when the President of the United States deliberately proposes that foodstuffs from abroad be used by the United States Navy because they are cheaper!

I appreciate that the motivation of the President's statement probably was diplomacy, a desire to curry favor with the Argentine Government and other South American peoples; but I object most strenuously to having the farmers made the scapegoats for a foreign policy.

I may add that the proposed Sanitary Convention with Argentina, negotiated by the State Department, now in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations, is another proposal of similar nature, and ought never to be approved by the Senate. I am confident it will not receive Senate approval.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in line with the remarks of the Senator from Kansas regarding the proposed purchase of Argentine canned beef for the Navy of the United States, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post this morning under the headline "Sign of Confusion."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of May 15, 1939]

SIGN OF CONFUSION

President Roosevelt's controversy with western cattlemen over the relative merits of Argentine and domestic beef in the diet of the Navy has many aspects of a teapot tempest. Yet the President's remarks carry far-reaching implications in the fields of both agricultural policy and foreign relations.

In approving the purchase of a relatively small order of corned beef from the Argentine, Mr. Roosevelt apparently had in mind two objectives. One was to throw a sop to Buenos Aires where the exclusion of Argentine beef from this country is bitterly resented. The other was doubtless to chide the Senate for its failure to ratify the Argentine sanitary convention. That agreement would permit our Latin-American neighbor to send us beef from those parts of its area which are entirely free of the hoof-and-mouth disease.

Gestures of good will to friendly foreign countries are always in order. And the administration certainly has a good cause in advocating elimination of the disguised embargo which discriminates against Argentine beef. Whatever protection is given the domestic cattle industry should be openly determined without putting any country at a special disadvantage. Insofar as the President was trying to offset the unfortunate reactions which the attitude of the Senate has produced in the leading country of South America, there will be much sympathy with his attitude.

But the President was not satisfied with making a gesture of good will. His comments on the "superiority" of Argentine corned beef and the spread between prices asked for the foreign and domestic products have aroused the ire of many Congressmen as well as cattlemen. Already a move is afoot to compel the Navy to buy its meat in this country. If passed, such legislation would merely arouse further resentment among the Argentineans.

Moreover, the President's emphasis upon the advantages of buying cheap foreign beef for the Navy seems to cast a shadow over the administration's entire agricultural policy. The aim of the A. A. A. is to raise farm prices and farmers' income. To accomplish that purpose it has attempted to keep prices of various commodities above the world market level. Just a few weeks ago the President threw his influence behind a move to subsidize cotton exports so that the domestic price could be maintained above prices abroad, without further loss of our foreign trade in this commodity.

Having thus attempted to place American agriculture on a higher economic plane than it occupies in many competing countries, the President now concludes that meat produced under this system is too expensive for the Navy to buy. He might use the same argument for the purchase of cheap uniforms manufactured in Japan from Brazilian cotton. But in either case, the President's attitude seems to add another element of profound confusion to the administration's farm policy.

In his last annual report Secretary Wallace declared, "It is virtually certain that in one way or another we shall have to limit our production for export and take steps to guard the domestic market from the influence upon it of bargain-counter prices." If the administration is now ready to scrap the A. A. A. and seek "bargain-counter prices" for farm products, some logic may be found in the President's enthusiasm over 9-cent corned beef. But if price-boosting efforts of the A. A. A. are to continue, the least the administration can do is to pay the prices it has helped to maintain above world market levels.

Not even the President can eat his beef and have it, too.

NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, last week, when the concurrent resolution disapproving reorganization plan No. II was presented to the Senate for consideration, I did not want to delay it by a discussion of one of the provisions of the plan, namely, the abolition of the National Bituminous Coal Commission. However, I desire the RECORD to show that the Senate without a dissenting vote agreed to this abolition. I had, in the minds of some, committed a "crime" for opposing the Coal Act; yet my position was upheld not when it should have been, before the money was spent, but afterward when the political value and popularity of the Commission had declined.

I desire to read at this time a statement of mine about this Commission. It is as follows:

WHO TOLD THE TRUTH ABOUT THE GUFFEY ACT?

I opposed the Guffey-Vinson Coal Act creating the National Bituminous Coal Commission. In opposing it, I aroused the antagonism of certain officials of the United Mine Workers of America and certain individuals who desired to use the Commission for political purposes.

Three years have passed since I raised my voice to explain the real purposes of this piece of legislation. On May 10 of this year, the President of the United States submitted to Congress a message on reorganization. In this message he has the following to say about the National Bituminous Coal Commission:

"I find it necessary and desirable in order to accomplish the purposes of the reorganization act to abolish the National Bituminous Coal Commission and to transfer its functions to the Secretary of the Interior. Thus the task of conserving the bituminous coal resources of the country may be carried on directly by the head of the department principally responsible for the conservation of fuel and other mineral supplies.

"The Congress placed this Commission in the Department of the Interior but experience has shown that direct administration will be cheaper, better, and more effective than through the cumbersome medium of an unnecessary commission."

May I emphasize the description of the President? He uses the words "cumbersome" and "unnecessary," as well as the statement that the change from the N. B. C. C. would be "cheaper, better, and more effective."

My opposition to the bill was not popular with those who danced to the tune of John L. Lewis. They sought to curry his favor without regard to the effect on labor or industry. So, with abject, unthinking obedience, they acted to carry out his orders that this now thoroughly discredited Commission be created, and that I be punished for telling the truth, for opposing their desire to create an expensive, unnecessary commission to employ their political friends. I am not complaining about such attempts. My conscience has been and is clear. They may speak for themselves.

Let me briefly review some of the facts about the Commission.

WHY WAS COMMISSION CREATED?

Why was it created? First, to give jobs to the favorites. Members of Congress were rewarded with patronage for their friends. Second, to pay off a campaign contribution of the miners, paid through, not by, John L. Lewis. He had told the miners he had the power to pass the Guffey Act. Therefore, it was important to the politicians to see that the man who had donated $500,000 to the campaign war chest, as well as to their political ventures, would have his face saved.

NO COAL PRICES SET

One of the main purposes of the National Bituminous Coal Commission was to set bituminous coal prices. Yet there is not a coal price set by them in the United States.

I delivered a speech on the floor of the Senate about the Coal Commission. I desire to repeat some of the statements made then:

The Coal Commission is the highest example of bungling bureaucracy the country has ever seen. The Coal Commission is the high-water mark of inefficiency in the Federal Government, because it was born in politics, reared in politics, and will die in politics. Civil service was thrown out the window in order that political jobs might be given to a favored few. * * *

WHO PROFITED?

There are only four classes that could possibly be helped by the Coal Act. Those are the miners, the operators, the consumers, and the pay rollers. We know that the miners are not working near the amount of time they worked last year, or the year before, or the year before that. The miners now are working less time and making less money. The operator is making less profit, or is losing more money. The consumer is paying a higher price for his coal. The only group of the four that has been benefited by the passage of the National Bituminous Coal Act is that composed of the pay rollers.

The act was set up for the stated purpose of stabilizing the industry, but instead of stabilizing the industry it stabilized the pay-roller. That is all it did. The patronage that came through the passage of the Guffey Coal Act is the only advantage that will come from its continuation.

WHAT HAS BEEN THE EFFECT?

Let Mr. Tetlow express the effect of the Commission. He spoke before the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee in January of this year—page 595–596 of the Interior Department appropriation hearings—as follows:

Mr. RICH. You said there was no factual evidence of the price of coal previous to the N. R. A. Then you do not know whether the setting up of the Bituminous Coal Commission has been of any benefit to the operators or the miners since you established it?

Mr. TETLOW. To this date?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. TETLOW. No. Certainly there have been no advantages yet to the producers. There cannot be, because there has been no minimum price established.

Mr. RICH. I thought you did establish prices and on February 25, 1938, you revoked them.

Mr. TETLOW. They were established December 16, 1937, so they were in effect about 2 months.

Mr. WHITE. Has it equalized employment in the coal industry in any shape or form? Have you any evidence of that?

Mr. TETLOW. No.

WHAT GENERAL JOHNSON SAID

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, N. R. A. Administrator, under whose administration miners' wages were raised, said this about the Coal Commission:

Recent years have revealed no worse performance of utter bureaucratic ineptitude, incompetence, and public damage than the National Bituminous Coal Commission.

What has resulted? A bewildered maze of muddy, minute, and unnecessary regulations. The erection of a mammoth, but futile, sterile bureaucracy; internal bickering and dissensions; a God-awful mess of political jobbery. But for the miners and employers nothing but grief and threatened danger; and, on present prospects, nothing can be expected for many months. In the meantime the price situation is worse than in early 1933 and the labor situation promises to be. Most operators are losing money in millions.

For this whole situation the blame is single and direct on the ineptitude and incompetence of the Coal Commission.

EFFECT IN WEST VIRGINIA

What has been the effect in West Virginia? The coal production in 1937 amounted to 118,050,000 tons. In 1938 the production was 93,511,099 tons. Loss of 1938, as compared to 1937, 24,538,901 tons.

HOW DID THIS AFFECT THE MINERS?

A loss of 5,000,000 man-days for miners. A loss of approximately $25,000,000 in wages for the miners.

	Tons per year
Average coal production, 1925–28, inclusive	150,221,234
Average coal production, 1935–38, inclusive	107,605,319
Difference	42,615,915

A loss of more than 8,000,000 man-days for miners.

	Tons
Average coal production, 1923–37, inclusive	118,814,576
Average coal production, 1938	93,511,099
Difference	25,303,477

CONCLUSION

The United Mine Workers' Journal bitterly attacked me for my opposition to this Guffey bill in 1936. It said:

Holt killed the Guffey-Vinson coal bill in the closing hours of the recent session of the Senate, although he had full knowledge of the fact that the coal miners, not only in his State but of every State in America, were hoping and praying that the bill might be enacted into law. He talked the bill to death in the Senate.

It continues with a vituperative and untruthful attack on me. Yet the record discloses that my talk against this bill saved hundreds of thousands of dollars—at the rate of $300,000 a month from June 1936 to April 1937. Furthermore, it saved the industry and the country from this Commission the President said was "cumbersome" and "needless."

The Guffey bill did none of the things claimed for it by Lewis.

It cost the taxpayers millions of dollars.

It became an influence to destroy the stabilization of the industry rather than being a stabilizing influence.

I challenge those who attacked me for my record on the Guffey bill to cite one advantage to the industry, either to miner or operator. I ask them to name one instance where the public profited from its passage.

I leave the facts with the people, and will let them determine who represented the best interests of West Virginia. The politicians who had the jobs on the Commission—this list is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 6, 1938—were given jobs, but the industry and the public suffered.

I told the truth about the Guffey bill.

Mr. President, I also desire to insert in the RECORD a clipping from the West Virginian, Fairmont, W. Va., dated May 11, 1939.

There being no objection, the clipping was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Fairmont West Virginian of May 11, 1939]

BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION'S ABOLITION ANOTHER TRIUMPH FOR SENATOR HOLT IN HIS FIGHT AGAINST EXPENSIVE ADMINISTRATION—BUREAU "EXPENSIVE LUXURY," CRITICS OF COAL SET-UP REPORT IN INQUIRY

(By Calvert L. Estill)

CHARLESTON, May 11.—Abolition of the Bituminous Coal Commission by the President is actually another feather in the cap of RUSH D. HOLT.

Just 1 year and a month ago Senator HOLT told the upper branch of the National Legislature a few things about the Bureau which he declared then was the "highwater mark of inefficiency in the Federal Government, because it was born in politics, reared in politics, and will die in politics."

To have accomplished nothing, it was certainly an expensive luxury. According to the Senator from Weston, the Commission had a rent item in its budget of $241,250, which was about $200 for every employee. But when it came to the pay roll, the Commission really shone.

HIGH SALARIES PAID

At the Washington office there were 7 salaries of $10,000 each, 3 at $9,000, 4 at $8,000, 1 at $7,500, 1 at $7,000, 5 at $6,800, 10 at $6,500, 4 at $5,800, 13 at $5,600, 1 at $5,200, and 1 at $5,000. From there the salary scale drops a bit, but the number of employees increases.

In the field, salaries were a bit lower, but there were many more employees. Eleven persons were paid $5,600 a year each, 3 got $4,933, 10 got $4,600, and so it went on down the line.

Only four classes of citizens, said Senator HOLT, could possibly be benefited by the Guffey Coal Act—the miners, the operators, the consumers, and the pay rollers. The miners this time last year were not working as they had in previous years; the operator was making less profit or losing more money; the consumer was paying a higher price for coal.

"The only group of the four that has been benefited by the passage of the National Bituminous Coal Act is that composed of the pay rollers."

READJUSTMENT OF COMMISSIONED PERSONNEL OF COAST GUARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1876) to readjust the commissioned personnel of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, which was, on page 3, line 10, to strike out the word "terms" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "term".

Mr. PEPPER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF ENLISTED PERSONNEL OF THE COAST GUARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 595) to increase further the efficiency of the Coast Guard by authorizing the retirement under certain conditions of enlisted personnel thereof with 20 or more years of service, which were, on page 2, line 18, after the word "from", to insert "active", and on page 3, line 11, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Treasury" and to insert in lieu thereof "Commandant."

Mr. PEPPER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1100) for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, beginning with line 1, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 8 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. (a) The President is authorized and requested to conduct, in such manner and through such agencies of the Government as he may deem appropriate, a study for the purpose of determining the rates of toll which it will be necessary to levy on the various classes of vessels transiting such canal (except such classes of vessels as, in the opinion of the President, should not be subject to tolls) for the purpose of providing for the maintenance and operation of such canal and for the amortization, within a period of 50 years from the date of its opening to traffic, of the capital cost of construction of such canal. In fixing such rates due allowance shall be made for anticipated increase in traffic transiting the canal during such amortization period. Upon the completion of such study the President shall have prepared and shall transmit to the Congress, prior to the completion of such canal, a table setting out such rates of toll.

(b) Until otherwise provided by law, the rates of toll set out in such table shall be the rates of toll charged for the privilege of transiting such canal.

(c) All tolls levied under the provisions of this section shall be collected by the Secretary of War, acting through such officers, employees, and agencies as he may deem appropriate, and except for such part thereof as may be required by the Secretary of War for the purpose of refunding amounts erroneously collected as tolls, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(d) After a sum sufficient to provide for the amortization of the capital cost of construction of such canal shall have been collected, the President shall revise such table of rates of toll and shall reduce such rates to rates which will be adequate to provide only for the maintenance and operation of such canal; and thereafter the rates of toll charges for the privilege of transiting such canal shall be in accordance with such revised table of rates.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, three Senators joined in submitting the amendment, as the heading on the amendment will show. The junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] and I conferred concerning the proposal and jointly prepared one amendment. In the meantime the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], not knowing of our conference and of our intentions to prepare an amendment providing for tolls, himself prepared an amendment which at his request was ordered to be printed and to lie on the table. He has joined with us, however, in the presentation of the amendment just read.

Mr. President, the proposal for the construction of the Florida canal has about as unanimous support as one usually has for any proposal. It is supported by the two Senators from Florida. It is supported by the Governor of Florida. It has been endorsed by the Legislature of Florida. It has been endorsed by the American Federation of Labor—so I have been informed within the last few minutes. It has been endorsed by the President of the United States, and it has the approval and endorsement of the board of Army engineers.

There could be but one objection to such a proposal, and that would be the cost of constructing such a canal. Therefore we have offered an amendment which provides for tolls which will liquidate the cost of construction and will pay for the cost of maintenance and operation. The period for liquidating this cost, as provided in the amendment, is 50 years. The President is authorized to establish such tolls as will carry the cost of maintenance and operation and provide for the liquidation of the cost of construction within a period of 50 years. Therefore in such a case the Government would lend its credit for the construction of the canal.

I wish to give some figures which have been submitted to me. I understand they are the figures of General Markham of the Army engineers and of the Department of Commerce. Figuring tonnage transiting the canal at 91,000,000 tons a year, a saving of 15 cents a ton, which is the estimate, the total direct savings would be $13,650,000 per year. Remember that these figures are based upon a total tonnage of 91,000,000 tons a year, whereas at the present time 138,000,000 tons of shipping goes around the Florida peninsula each year. However, placing the estimate at 91,000,000 tons, and figuring a saving of 15 cents a ton, we have $13,650,000 annual savings.

The canal is to cost, in round figures, $200,000,000. One-fiftieth of that amount, which it would be necessary to set aside each year in order to liquidate the cost of the canal within a period of 50 years, is $4,000,000. The cost of operation each year is estimated by General Markham at $913,000. Therefore the tolls must produce $4,913,000 in revenues in order to liquidate the cost of the canal over a period of 50 years, and at the same time carry the cost of operation and maintenance. It would require a toll of only 5½ cents per ton on 91,000,000 tons to meet the annual payments of $4,913,000 per year. It is agreed that 8 cents a ton could well be paid and still leave sufficient advantage in going through the canal to cause most of the ships to use the canal. The figures I have given are based on the 1937 tonnage. Of course, there is a possibility that the tonnage will increase. We expect the freight and the tonnage of ships carrying freight to increase in the future over the past.

Mr. President, I am supporting the present proposal, because it is a proposal to construct a public improvement. In my opinion, the only objection the people over the country generally have to this administration is, not that we have done too much, but that we have not done enough. We have not gone far enough in any one year to prove our own theory. That theory is that if we put all the people to work we would increase their buying power, and that stimulated buying power would bring about prosperity. However, we have never given our own theory a chance to operate, because there has not been a time in this administration when we have not had, in round numbers, 10,000,000 unemployed.

I doubt if prosperity could come back to the country through the normal process of trying to outlive the depression, because so much labor has been displaced by labor-saving machinery.

Last month I was in Clarksburg, in the State of my two colleagues from West Virginia. Clarksburg is a mining town. One evening I had dinner with some coal miners and former glass blowers. One of the coal miners said, "In the coal mines here they are installing mechanical miners which are displacing laborers. They have machines which will mine and load coal. That means that most of the miners will be turned off sooner or later."

I asked, "Are they now being turned off?"

He said, "Yes."

The former glass blower said, "My father and I were glass blowers, but machinery has been invented which has displaced that profession. We are no longer glass blowers. Glass blowing is all done by machinery. We are now glass cutters; but soon that occupation will be taken from us by machinery, because already mechanical glass cutters are displacing men who are now performing that work."

Labor-saving inventions are putting men out of employment everywhere. We cannot answer that problem simply by shouting "Balance the Budget." I would like to balance the Budget; but we will never be able to balance the human budget with a third of our people unemployed and unable to obtain employment.

Some months ago I was in Pittsburgh, Pa. I did not go through any of the mills there, but some of the mills were pointed out to me, and I was told that one could walk for blocks through steel mills and never see a man; and yet those mills are operating. Much labor-saving machinery has been installed since the beginning of the depression. I asked, "How are the mills operated?" I was told that one man sits in a corner and pulls a lever, throws a switch, or presses a button and operates blocks of mills by mechanical robots which have displaced men.

The Rust Bros., of Memphis, Tenn., have invented a cotton picker. When that cotton picker is perfected and placed on the market, it will put out of employment, in round numbers, 3,000,000 people who depend upon cotton picking for a livelihood. Cotton picking is a seasonal occupation, but those people in the past have earned enough money from picking cotton to tide them over the rest of the year. However, when the mechanical cotton picker is placed on the market it will displace those workers.

Does anyone think that we can furnish employment to those workers by simply shouting "Balance the Budget" or "Stop spending"? Certainly not. We are living in a modern age, an age in which science itself is adding to the army of unemployed every year. Do we want to sabotage science? Do we want to undertake to turn back the progress of time and go on the same basis as China, where labor is still done by hand work, where great amounts of earth are moved by men carrying baskets of earth on their heads? I do not believe so. I believe we welcome science. Labor displacement is on our doorstep today. Blinking at it will not do us any good.

We have undertaken to meet the situation in part by wage and hour legislation, cutting down the number of hours a week that a laborer may work, in order to give some of the work to other workers. That expedient meets the problem only partially. We are hoping it will help to a certain extent. However, it will not take up all of the slack of labor displacement resulting from labor-saving inventions.

We have undertaken to meet unemployment by cutting it off at both ends. We have set up a National Youth Administration program, which furnishes employment to some youngsters while they are going to school. We have set up an old-age security program, which furnishes an all-too-meager income to some of our needy old people.

We have done these things in an effort to meet the problem of unemployment; and yet the problem of unemployment is increasing by the hour, while we are undertaking to meet it.

Therefore, in my opinion, we are confronted with the problem of setting up a permanent public-works program which will furnish employment for the unemployed. I think we have no alternative. In my opinion, there can be no evasion of the problem which confronts us today. If we intend really to meet and solve the problem of unemployment, we must set up a public-works program big enough to give employment to the unemployed and to give every able-bodied citizen who wants to work an opportunity to work. We have passed the pioneer days when we could solve a problem of this kind by simply opening a new territory and draining off the disinherited, or by telling all the unemployed to go out and obtain new land. That day is over, and that safety valve for the relief of the accumulation of the unemployed is gone. It cannot be solved by simply blinking at it and shouting "Balance the Budget and bring back confidence to business." Business confidence will come back with the return of cash customers—not until then. And the people cannot return as cash customers unless they have jobs.

For that reason I am supporting the construction of the Florida canal, as I propose to support all the public improvements of this kind. I shall give favor to those of a self-liquidating character. It is my intention to support those self-liquidating projects that, over a period of years, can pay their own cost, as the Florida canal can and will do. I shall support semi-self-liquidating projects which will pay part of the cost, because by such projects we utilize materials which put men to work. When we dig a canal, the canal does not wear out; it will last forever. Of course, it will be necessary to keep it dredged. That will be an upkeep cost, but that is provided for by the amendment just proposed, and people can go on for years and years enjoying the advantages of the canal. The canal will be a public improvement; it will be a public advantage to the country.

I feel that we ought to go much further than this one construction project in lending the credit of the country in order to provide ourselves with public improvements as well as to provide a program sufficiently large to furnish employment to the unemployed. I would much prefer seeing the unemployed being used to construct useful projects such as the Florida canal than to see it used to construct projects that are not so useful; but until we can get a permanent program outlined that is sufficiently large to give employment to all who need it, we must support W. P. A. appropriations that will furnish employment on less useful projects than this.

Not long ago I read in the newspapers that the President had advocated the construction of great superhighways across the country. That project would have my support, indeed, because from the rental of the roadside concessions the cost of such construction could be liquidated or semi-liquidated without placing an additional burden upon the taxpayers. Such highways would stand for years as a benefit to the people; they would increase our national defense by making it possible to move the Army from one side of the Nation to the other side in a short time. There they would be for years to come to serve the people, in providing ample facilities for the transcontinental traffic; there they would stand for the people of this country to enjoy and at the same time their construction would furnish employment to the unemployed. I say we have not gone far enough at any one time to give our own theory of government a chance to prove that it is right; that is, we have not gone sufficiently far to give every unemployed person a job and with it a buying power. If we had sufficient courage to do that, then the increased purchasing power of all those who are now unemployed would start a surge upward that would result in prosperity.

Mr. President, there are a number of public improvements that could be supported under this philosophy of government. I should like to see them started. Every time we build a great power project for the generation of electricity we furnish employment to the unemployed; we furnish a market for materials, which gives work to the unemployed farther up the stream. When we build a project that will generate electricity and make it available to the people of the country at the lowest possible cost, we furnish employment to the unemployed without cost to the taxpayer, because such projects can over a period of years liquidate their own cost.

Every time we vote money to construct a power project, in my opinion, that money is not entirely out of pocket, for we are simply lending the credit of the Government for the construction of the project and in the end the cost will be returned to the Treasury of the United States. By the sale of electricity the bonds issued for the construction of such projects will be liquidated. Then the projects will operate indefinitely, producing electricity for the benefit of the people, lifting heavy loads, lighting dark rooms, generally distributing happiness, making it possible for the farmers as well as the city dwellers to enjoy the advantages of this modern age; making it possible for them to enjoy electrical refrigeration, to enjoy electric churns and electric irons, to have their farms lighted so that the farmers may better see to do their chores and to have water pumped by power instead of by the present back-breaking method. I shall support such projects.

In addition, there are other self-liquidating or semi-self-liquidating projects which, in my opinion, we should sponsor, such as toll bridges, toll canals, that will bring down freight rates and give the people of the West and the South the advantage of such lower rates. Such toll canals, such semi-self-liquidating and completely self-liquidating projects will ultimately pay their own cost and prove our philosophy of government by furnishing employment for all the people.

Mr. President, no matter how often attention may be called to the disadvantage of such a program, we still will not have answered the question, What are we going to do with the unemployed? Are we going to ask them to wait until prosperity returns of its own accord? I do not believe it is necessary. We have sufficient natural resources in America, we have sufficient capital to put labor to work, and we have sufficient labor to develop those resources. We have sufficient wealth for every person in the United States to enjoy the necessaries of life; we have sufficient food and a surplus; we have sufficient clothing and a surplus; we have sufficient material to build every person a home; we have sufficient material to furnish every home modern plumbing; we have sufficient electricity or potential electricity to furnish electric lights; we have sufficient material to furnish electric appliances to every home in America. We have not scratched the surface as to the possibility of the markets that are right here at home if we develop them by a courageous program of public works that will furnish employment to the unemployed and thereby guarantee the people a buying power.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] has the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if it was his intention to present his amendment at this time?

Mr. LEE. As I understand, the amendment has been adopted.

Mr. ADAMS. I thought the Senator was speaking on the amendment.

Mr. LEE. I was speaking on the general bill, and I referred to the amendment by way of explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment has not been agreed to.

Mr. LEE. I understood the Chair to put the question, and that the amendment had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the amendment has not been agreed to. The question is, Shall the amendment be agreed to? The amendment is pending.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to say a word or two.

Mr. LEE. I shall accommodate myself to the Senator's wishes in that regard. If he desires to speak or to discuss the amendment, or if he wishes to defer his remarks and speak later, I shall adjust myself to the circumstances.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] really planned to speak. I have an amendment to the amendment which I should like to have considered after the Senator from Florida shall have concluded his remarks, along with a word or two I should like to say on the bill.

Mr. LEE. I shall be glad to withhold my request for immediate action on the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I will state what my amendment to the amendment proposes. The provision of the bill which the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma seeks to strike out is section 2. It proposes to strike out all of section 2 and to provide that the President shall conduct certain studies as to the amount of tolls that shall, in his judgment, be necessary for the maintenance and operation of the canal and for the amortization of its cost. The amendment which I propose to suggest to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma would provide that such studies and determinations shall be made before the construction of the canal shall commence, in order that the Congress, or at least the Appropriations Committee may know what are the facts. Accordingly I am going to offer an amendment to the amendment. After the word "conduct" in line 2, page 1, of the amendment, I move that there be inserted the words "prior to the resumption of the construction of such canal," and also as part of the amendment that where the word "completion" appears in line 6, on page 2, that that word be stricken out and the same words be added which I propose to add on the first page, so that it would read "prior to the resumption of construction of such canal."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires whether the Senator from Colorado is offering his amendment to the amendment at this time or is withholding it.

Mr. ADAMS. I was asked what my amendment to the amendment was. So I was stating its purpose. I would be glad to offer it and have it pending as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma, to be taken up at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the very able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], speaking upon the subject of the Florida ship canal when it was up for previous consideration, quoted these lines:

> I walked at even by the sea,
> And dreamed a dream that could not be.
> The waves that plunged along the shore
> Said only, "Dreamer, dream no more."

Those lines were uttered by the eminent Senator from Michigan relative to one Member of this body who dreamed the great dream of the Florida ship canal—a dream which had also been a part of the aspirations of many other illustrious men and women in ages past. That Member was the late Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, a man who was singularly the object of the affection, the respect, and the high esteem of his colleagues here. The last vigorous hours of his life he gave to the furtherance of this dream, if the Senator pleases so to designate it, of a ship canal connecting the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean.

I come in the senatorial succession of Senator Duncan U. Fletcher. I occupy the office which was occupied for more than a quarter of a century by that grand old man. I occupy in the Senate Commerce Committee, as good fortune would have it, the seat which he for so long a time and so well occupied; and to the very best of my abilities, meager and limited as they are, I have tried to give furtherance and progress to that great dream that throbbed in the breast of Senator Duncan U. Fletcher.

Mr. President, if you will look at a map of the United States and reflect upon history, you cannot attach too much importance to the Mississippi Valley; for down that great valley courses the Mississippi River, the Father of Waters. Rising in the southwestern portion of the great State of Montana, more than 4,000 miles from its outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, that mighty river, with its vast tributaries, has a navigable mileage of 15,000. It drains an area of more than a million and a quarter square miles, and for ages past it has borne upon its full bosom a great part of the commerce of this great people.

Thomas Jefferson is supposed to have said that the country which controls the mouth of the Mississippi River controls the United States of America. At least, the struggles in the early days of the colonization of this country among the countries which sought the domination and control of the mouth of the Mississippi River seem to bear good corroboration of that statement, attributed to the man who, in the face of legal and even constitutional difficulty, purchased the mouth of the Mississippi River to be a part of the territory of the United States.

In the colonial days of this country Great Britain, Spain, and France waged war and mighty contest for the privilege of controlling the commerce that floated down the River Mississippi and its tributaries. Who can properly estimate what the great Mississippi River Basin has meant to the people of the United States and to the civilization of the world? There was always the great barrier of the Appalachian Mountains separating the Atlantic seaboard from the fertile lands beyond. It was this route around the peninsula of the State of Florida which in the early days made access more easily possible between those two regions of this country.

In the days of the Civil War the National Government recognized how vital that river was to the integrity of this country by taking possession of the river, closing it to commerce. By that action it separated the various parts of the Confederacy physically and stagnated for decades yet to follow the commerce of the people of the United States.

So, Mr. President, I desire to direct your attention to the importance to American commerce and American welfare of the Mississippi Valley and its vast tributary area.

What is proposed in the pending bill is that the Mississippi Valley and the great Atlantic seaboard of this country shall be brought a day closer together than they otherwise would be; that they shall be brought 400 miles more proximate one to the other than they otherwise would be; and that there shall be a safe, navigable passage across a peninsula which has been a barrier to closer relationship and more intimate and perfect commercial intercourse between those sections of the country since the earliest days of the history of this Nation. That is the project which is the subject of ridicule, of scorn, and of, perhaps, the bitterest political opposition ever received by any project offered upon this floor. That is the high aspiration that some would like to castigate as an unworthy money-grabbing scheme presented here by the representatives of the particular area which will be traversed by this waterway. So, Mr. President, perhaps it is helpful to see that project with a little perspective.

If one goes back to the early days of the Senate he will find that this is not a strange or a new subject upon this floor. I am about to read the report of the Senate Commitee on Roads and Canals, to which was referred "A bill for the survey of a route for a canal between the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico." The bill was reported to the United States Senate by this committee on the 19th of January 1826. This is the first paragraph of the report:

> That they have given the subject all the examination which the means afforded enabled them to bestow. No documents accompanying the bill, they have availed themselves of the information of several gentlemen acquainted with the character of the country through which the proposed canal is intended to pass, and, from the best lights afforded, they have no hesitation in forming the opinion that the great importance of a canal communication between the waters of the Atlantic coast and the Gulf of Mexico, justifies the expenditure proposed, to determine the fact whether such communication be practicable or not; nor would the committee hesitate in recommending the measure, were the probability of a favorable result to the examination much more remote than it is. The committee are of opinion, from all the information which they have been able to procure, that this work is not only practicable, but much more easily accomplished than former estimates and opinions have supposed.

That is an extract from executive documents, first session, Twenty-third Congress, volume 2, 1833–34. In the same volume are two letters from Mr. White, who was then the Delegate from the Territory of Florida to the United States Congress. Those letters set out more vigorously and effectively than ever I could hope to do the virtues and the value of this enterprise, not to the Territory of Florida, but to the people and the country of the United States of America.

I have before me the message to the Congress of President John Quincy Adams, dated February 25, 1829. This is what that President said to the Congress on this subject:

> By the act of Congress of the 3d of March, 1826, for the survey of a route for a canal between the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico, the President of the United States was authorized to cause to be made, an accurate and minute examination of the country south of the St. Marys River, and including the same, with a view to ascertain the most eligible route for a canal, admitting the transit of boats, to connect the Atlantic with the Gulf of Mexico, and also with a view to ascertain the practicability of a ship channel; that he cause particularly to be examined the route to the Appalachicola River or Bay, with a view to both the above objects; that he cause the necessary surveys, both by land and along the coast, with estimates of the expense of each, accompanied with proper plans, notes, observations, explanations, and opinions of the Board of Engineers; and that he cause a full report of these proceedings to be made to Congress.
> In execution of this law I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of War, with a copy of that of the Board of Engineers, upon this great and most desirable national work.

That is signed by John Quincy Adams.

In 1826 a survey of a ship canal across the peninsula of the State of Florida was authorized, with a report in 1829; another authorization in 1830, with a report in 1832; another authorization in 1852, with a report in 1885; another authorization in 1875, with a report in 1876; another authorization in 1878, and a report in 1880; another authorization in 1909, and a report in 1913; another authorization in 1921, and a report in 1924.

So, Mr. President, noble and grand as the conception of the Florida ship canal is, those of us who embrace it in this modern day are not entitled to a monopoly in appreciation of its virtues and its advantages to the country.

Even Philip of Spain, before any of these surveys to which I have referred occurred, to his own engineer at St. Augustine, Fla., made in substance the same recommendation, because everybody has been able to see, by looking at the map alone, that the peninsula of Florida is a barrier which has kept apart two of the vital portions of this Nation, and that whatever might be done to diminish that barrier would be in the interest of the commerce and the progress, if not the security and the safety, of this whole country.

The recent history of the canal project, of course, is better known. It was ably and most intelligently stated by the very able senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] in his address Friday afternoon.

It is not a Democratic measure, Mr. President. I heard the able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] say that he would like to make it a partisan measure in substance, that he would like to see the Republican Party have the honor and the credit of defeating this measure, of casting to oblivion this boondoggling scheme, as he might have castigated and characterized it—the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal. Fortunately, the leaders of his party have not always taken the same attitude. I hope they will not follow him in the future.

In 1927, during the administration of President Calvin Coolidge, the first modern authorization for a survey was made. Again, in 1930, under a Republican President, President Hoover, the second authorization of a survey to determine the feasibility and the practicability of this canal across the peninsula of the State of Florida was made. Pursuant to the authorization of 1930 the Chief of Engineers appointed a special board to make a survey and examination, and that board reported back to its superior officers in the War Department dealing with river and harbor matters that there be a thorough and extensive investigation and survey of the proposed project.

Then what happened? Did the Republican President, Mr. Hoover, and the Republican Congress, which then might have had an opportunity to assert its opposition to this project, assert themselves and say it was just a boondoggling scheme which this man Roosevelt in later years was to espouse? On the contrary, they actually authorized and spent over $500,000 in making the investigation and survey. Therefore, I hope that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber will not take the attitude which was manifested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], that it is incumbent upon them as a party measure to oppose this project which has resulted from the survey and examination provided by a Republican administration and President. The special board, in the course of its investigation, was called upon to make an ad interim report, and it did so.

Meanwhile an application was filed with the R. F. C. for funds with which private interests might construct the canal. Shortly thereafter the P. W. A. came into existence, and by Executive order applications of this character were referred from the R. F. C. to the P. W. A. Then the examining staff of the P. W. A. made an investigation of the application.

It has been stated in the debate by the learned Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], by inference if not in direct language, that the action of the P. W. A. was unfavorable to the application. The political heads of P. W. A. were favorable, but the technical experts of the Public Works Administration were not. Listen to the language which represents the conclusion arrived at by the engineering staff of the Public Works Administration. I read now from page 94 of Senate Document 275, the Documentary History of the Florida Ship Canal. The passage to which I refer is headed "Conclusions and Recommendations," and reads:

> It is concluded that the project covered herein constitutes a public necessity and is of real social value. The project will afford much employment to many classes of skilled and unskilled labor; that the design is in accord with sound engineering practice, and that the project is economically sound.
> It is recommended that the loan, with or without the grant, be made.

Mr. President, that is the kind of consideration the project received from the technical agencies of the P. W. A. Is that the basis upon which it is stated that it is a money-grabbing scheme; that it is a monstrosity which is thrust into this body to accentuate the boondoggling of this administration? No; the political heads of the P. W. A. may not have awarded the funds applied for, but the technical agencies which made an examination of the merits of the project stated it was sound economically, and recommended that the loan which was applied for be made, with or without the grant.

Mr. President, in substance, that is what the project would become if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma, the Senator from New York, and the Senator from Missouri, that it be in substance a self-liquidating canal, were adopted by the Senate.

I stated that the special board of engineers made a report. It will be easier for Senators to comprehend the history of this project if it is kept in mind that from time to time there have been variations in the dimensions of the project, and therefore different boards have considered actually different canals. For example, the P. W. A. Engineering Division to which I have referred investigated a lock canal of 30-foot depth, with a bottom width of 250 to 400 feet. The subsequent board—that is to say, the special board of Army engineers—considered a lock canal also, 35 feet in depth, with a bottom width of 250 to 400 feet. The special board considering a canal of those dimensions, and considering the volume of commerce which existed since 1931, did not make a favorable report upon the project.

As the matter then stood, there was a favorable recommendation by the Technical Division of the P. W. A., and an unfavorable report by the special board of Army engineers appointed to examine the project. The natural thing, therefore, was for the President to try to cause a reconciliation of these various figures and estimates. So the President appointed an interdepartmental board. The interdepartmental board consisted of two engineers from the P. W. A., two engineers from the War Department Engineering Division, and one engineer to constitute the balance of power, to be selected by the four who were thus chosen. There was, therefore, an independent board, which represented the two great agencies of the Government, appointed by the President. That board proceeded to an effort to reconcile the figures and the estimate previously given, and that board made to the President a favorable recommendation upon the inauguration of the project.

It was this board which said it should be a sea-level canal, because they thought that the peculiar facts and circumstances of route 13–B made it economical in construction and in transit for the canal to be a sea-level canal instead of a lock canal. Therefore the President, under the authority conferred upon him by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1933, in 1935 authorized an allotment of $5,000,000 for the construction of this project upon the plan recommended by the interdepartmental board to which I have referred.

I may add, Mr. President, that subsequent to the authorization of that allocation by the President and the beginning of work upon that project under the President's authorization, there was such widespread approval of the undertaking by the President that seventy-odd United States Senators, and, I believe, 36 Governors of both parties from different parts of the country, including, as I see, 2 Senators now sitting in the Senate Chamber, then Governor GREEN, of Rhode Island, and then Governor JOHNSON, of Colorado, complimented the President upon having inaugurated this worthy and wholly desirable, sound project which he had just launched by pressing his telegraph key in early September of 1935.

Mr. President, then they did not say it was boondoggling and money grabbing. It had not become such a political football then. It had not been injected into national party politics. It had not become the symbol of an opposition to a program and a policy sponsored by the administration in power. So in that day the merit of the proposal was uppermost in the minds of the Senators and uppermost in the minds of the country. In the schoolrooms of America then, before the matter had become a political football, one could read newspapers that would tell about this marvelous development, this great outstanding project of so much significance to the country, which was in process of construction down across the peninsula of the State of Florida. But now let the time be fixed for a debate on the Florida ship canal, and I venture to state that four-fifths of all the anti-administration newspapers in the country will come out with blistering editorials against the folly of the Florida ship canal. So now to these political crusaders it has become a bad canal.

Mr. President, construction began, and $5,400,000 were expended in erecting houses down there in which the staff engaged in construction could live, in excavating part of the canal channel, in the building of foundations for the bridges which were to span the canal, and to make possible highway transit over it without drawbridges. Work on the project was prosecuted, until finally in 1936 the funds were exhausted.

By that time a great deal of additional information, of course, had been obtained by the Army engineers who were in charge of the construction of the project. And, remember, Mr. President, it was not the P. W. A., it was not the W. P. A., it was the finest organization that this Government has ever set up, a body that will not even yield to the judiciary in the integrity of its record since its existence as an arm of the Congress—the Army engineers which carried on this construction work. General Markham was then

Chief of Engineers. Up until that time had any Senator ever heard anyone question the integrity of Gen. Edward M. Markham, appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate? Had any Senator ever heard anybody say that he was the kind of a Chief Engineer that would lend himself to a boondoggling scheme to perpetuate a fraud on the Congress? Had anybody ever held up to ridicule and scorn the judgment of a man who had spent the greater part of his life in trying to serve his country as an officer of the United States assigned to river and harbor matters?

No; in those days before the Florida ship canal had become a matter of political interest, General Markham was admired by even Senator VANDENBERG as a competent, respected, and capable engineer, to whom the Congress might delegate the investigation of matters of this character.

So General Markham appointed a revisory board consisting entirely of Army engineers of repute and standing, to reconcile and to bring down to date all the data which had been obtained upon this project, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal.

Mr. President, I can refer Senators to the page where the Army engineers tell us that the first time they ever heard about the question of the detriment which the Florida ship canal might cause to the underground water supply of Florida emanated from the engineers of the railroads in 1932. But that matter by 1936 had become an instrumentality of a very vicious propaganda—that this canal was intended to lay waste the great citrus-producing and vegetable-bearing area of the State of Florida.

Consequently, General Markham said to that advisory board which he appointed, "I want you, relatively, to spare no expense, but make an investigation of this question of damage to the water supply of Florida which the construction of this canal, on a sea-level basis, might cause. I authorize you to hire independent and competent geological and water experts. I require you to make every possible investigation to settle once and for all that question."

Then acting pursuant to those directions given by General Markham, the revisory board selected a staff of United States officers. In addition to that they selected a water expert who had been digging wells for a great many of the cities of south Florida. He had dug at Miami, and at St. Petersburg, and at Orlando, and at Palm Beach, and therefore had a perfect knowledge of the underground water conditions of the State of Florida. That was one of the men the board employed.

Then they employed a geologist who used to be head of the Geological Survey of the United States Geological Department in the Department of the Interior of the United States. They employed men who were practicing water experts and geologists, who were engaged not because the Army engineers had a cause to serve. Men were engaged because of their known knowledge of the data which should go into a thorough investigation and report upon the question of the effect of this sea-level canal upon the water supply of the State of Florida.

There were many others who were employed, and that agency which was set up to make a special examination of the water question made the most prolific reports upon that subject. They literally devoted month after month to it. They spent over $200,000 boring holes, taking soundings, cutting cores, testing water currents, observing water supplies, investigating past reports, doing everything that modern science and intelligence could possibly dictate to give them the whole truth about the question of damage to the water supply of Florida by the construction of this canal.

Mr. President, eventually after months of detailed, on-the-ground, personal investigation they turned in their report.

But that was not all. The Department of Agriculture also appointed a board. I assume the Department of Agriculture had no political ax to grind. I assume it told its board to find out and report the truth. I assume that it was not filled with perfidy and trying to serve some ulterior motive on the part of somebody. So that board made a report. Therefore, there were two reports which were available from those Government agencies.

In addition to that they assembled other data and eventually they put it in a document which they published, which appears in the report of the hearings before the Senate Commerce Committee this year. It is available for any Senator's inspection in the report which is on Senators' desks.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Florida a few moments ago spoke about the source of certain information with respect to damage to the water supply as coming from engineers—employed by whom?

Mr. PEPPER. It is said that the first ones to raise the question of detriment to the water supply of Florida before the Army engineers were the railroads which were opposing the construction of this canal.

Mr. BORAH. Has there been any other source of information on that subject than that which the Senator speaks of—the railroad engineers?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, Mr. President. Does the Senator mean if others examined it and made estimates of the question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. There have been. Witnesses appeared before the Senate committee and testified on the subject. There is a chart right behind the Senator which was submitted by another railroad geologist.

In addition, the railroads engaged a geologist named Dr. Calhoun, from Clemson College. Dr. Calhoun testified that in 1932 the heads of the engineering departments of the four railroads serving Florida—the Atlantic Coast Line, the Seaboard, the Southern, and the Florida East Coast—got together and called him into conference and hired him, before he had ever made any investigation of the subject. to join them in the production of engineering data which would show the probable ill effects of the proposed canal upon the water supply of the State of Florida.

Dr. Calhoun testified that he actually spent 2 days upon the ground personally investigating. He said he made a thorough investigation of the data which were supplied by the Army experts; but he admitted that it was their data that he used, and that he was personally on the ground but 2 days. He did not deny the assertion that the Army experts made, that they spent more than 6 months on the ground investigating actual water conditions.

Mr. President, the Army experts have made some very profound discoveries and brought out some new information which no other geological source had ever before been able to accumulate. For one reason, they were a competent staff. For another reason, they had the money to make the borings; and for other reasons they had special opportunity while engaged in the excavation work to know intimately the actual underground structure of the State of Florida to be traversed by the canal.

I do not deny, Mr. President, that the statements of some of the railroad geologists, the statement of the Columbia University geologist to whom the Sentor from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] referred, who, so far as I know, has never set foot upon the ground which the canal would traverse, and some sentences from the report of the State geologist of Florida, who has never come to testify before any congressional committee, would lead one to infer that the construction of the canal would prove a serious detriment to the underground water supply.

As a result of what I believe to be the most thorough search ever made of a project, the consensus seems to be that in the State of Florida a few miles north of the proposed route of the canal there is what is called a water "high." The State of Florida is underlaid with a belt of limestone which tends to arch in certain places. The peninsula of the State of Florida is about 358 miles long. Extending along its axis is a ridge about 40 miles wide. That ridge slopes off rather abruptly to the Gulf of Mexico and out into the Gulf of Mexico for approximately 20 miles.

The route of the canal traverses an area which may be called the saddle of that section of the State. In other words, the area traversed by the route of the canal is lower than the territory either to the north of it or to the south of it. As I have said, to the north of it is what is called a "high," which means that at that point there is a volume of water which, for geological reasons, is lifted up, as it were, and becomes, to a degree, the source of the water flow in the surrounding area. Out of that "high" flow the channels which lead to Silver Springs, one of the most remarkable bodies of fresh water in the world, which issues forth in colossal volumes from subterranean passages. Also from that "high" emanate channels which go into and issue out of another spring of clear water, called Blue Springs. Both those springs are north of the route of the canal. Some miles to the south of the canal there is another "high," which is the source of another water supply. From that "high" water flows north toward the canal in small volume, but in much larger volume to the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean.

I wonder how many Senators are aware of the fact that the proposed canal follows a route which enters the St. Johns River about 25 miles to the east of Jacksonville, traverses that river for a distance of about 77 miles down to Palatka, and then runs westwardly along the valley of the Oklawaha River for a distance of approximately 20 miles, finally coming to what might be called the dry cut, a little more than 100 miles away from the beginning of the canal in the St. Johns River. Then there is a cut of about 28 miles through dry land, which is the highest ridge of the State of Florida, in a westerly direction to the valley of the Withlacoochee River. The route then follows that valley down to the Gulf of Mexico. On account of the fact that the water in the Gulf of Mexico adjacent to the shore is shallow, the channel must be deepened for some 20 miles out into the Gulf of Mexico.

A fact which may not be recalled is that the St. Johns River, like the Amazon River, flows north, and not south. It rises toward the Atlantic seaboard at Lake George and flows northerly and northeasterly to the Atlantic Ocean some 20 miles east of Jacksonville. As some Senators within the sound of my voice have seen from personal experience, the river from Jacksonville to Palataka is from 1 to 3 miles wide.

Mr. ANDREWS. An inland sea.

Mr. PEPPER. As the Senator says, it is literally an inland sea. The St. Johns River, from Jacksonville to the coast, is more than 30 feet deep and has a minimum width of from 300 to 600 feet. As I have said, from Jacksonville to Palatka, a distance of 51 miles, it has a width of from 1 to 3 miles. So that part of the waterway is relatively already constructed. The river between Jacksonville and the coast will have to be deepened only a very little, in some places only a few inches. It is already approximateley 33 feet deep, which is the recommended depth of the canal. The bottom of the river between Jacksonville and Palatka is soft, so that excavation is not expensive. The only part of the excavation which is particularly expensive is the 28 or 30 miles across the limestone ridge of the State of Florida. The St. Johns River is one of the three rivers which will flow into the canal toward the Atlantic seaboard; and, as I have said, it flows north.

The Oklawaha River rises at about Lake Griffin in central Florida. That river also flows north into the channel of the canal and into the St. Johns River, which flows out into the sea.

The other river which flows into the canal, toward the Gulf of Mexico, is the Withlacooche River, on the western side of the ridge which goes through the axis of the State. That river also flows north.

So, the idea that some may have had, that a channel of water begins, perhaps, in south Georgia, Alabama, or elsewhere, and flows down through the State of Florida, and that if it is cut anywhere all the territory south of it will become, as some of our friends have said, an arid region or desert, is totally out of accord with the possibilities, as the engineers and water experts have found.

As I have said, the people of Florida have had some experience with this question. At a place named Englis, a dam has been constructed across the Withlacoochee River by a private power company which serves a large portion of the western part of the State of Florida. Although the dam is largely only an earth dam with a little concrete veneer, the building of that dam across the river in the immediate vicinity of the route of the proposed canal raised the water level 28 feet. Yet we are told that this territory is so porous that water will run all through the subterranean channels, draining out the whole underground water reservoir of the State of Florida. However, the engineers state in their report that they have been on the ground and have seen the dam which was constructed across one of the rivers in this very vicinity, which raised the water table 28 feet, indicating that while there were subterranean passages and caverns here and there, they were not all so linked together that the water flowed through channels out into the sea or out into some place of escape. Perhaps the situation can be more clearly understood if one thinks of a cheese which has little pockets in it. That does not mean that the pockets are connected, forming channels running all through a cake of good cheese which comes from the State of one of our friends in the West.

It is proposed, by a system of elaborately conceived dams and water controls, to remove the last vestige of doubt that any practical person could have as to the possibility of adverse effects upon the water supply of the State of Florida from the construction of the proposed sea-level canal. So that it comes down to about this: As the engineers and experts report, for, perhaps, 10 or 15 miles on either side of the canal there would be a lowering of the underground water table, and the slope of that lowering would extend from 40 feet below sea level back to sea level in a distance of about 10 or 15 miles. The only adverse effect of that would be that a few wells, which have actually been inspected and examined and mapped, would be lowered, and provision has been made in the funds that are contemplated for the cost of the canal by the Chief of Engineers for the expense of lowering those wells for the farmers the additional few feet which would be required by the lowering of the water table.

So, Mr. President, the conclusion must be that all the responsible agencies have settled the question that there is no reasonable, appreciable probability of any possible detriment even to the underground water supply, much less to the agricultural and horticultural interests, because it is pointed out that Florida, with an annual rainfall of from 52 to 58 inches, has its vegetation entirely served by rainfall and not by the underground water supply that tends to seep down below the surface of the soil. The water-supply question is merely an incident, and perhaps I should not have spent so much time on it.

I live in the State of Florida, as my colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] lives in the State of Florida. I was elected in that State last year, and my colleague will come up for election in that State next year. I do not suppose Senators will attribute to us any desire or willingness to do any harm to our State. Furthermore, I do not suppose Senators would think that the Governor of the State of Florida wants to do any harm to his own State; yet he has been one of the most militant advocates of the canal that the canal has had. Not only that, but he was one of 14 candidates for Governor in 1936 and was the one candidate who every time he made a speech emphasized the desirability and the virtue of the Florida ship canal.

I do not suppose Senators think that the Legislature of the State of Florida has any desire to do harm to the State; yet they memorialized Congress to construct the canal, and they created a ship canal authority which is prepared to spend $3,000,000, and has already spent a considerable part of that sum, in acquiring rights-of-way to be given free to the Government of the United States upon which to construct the canal.

Some days ago a delegation of Senators were kind enough to go to Florida and make a personal inspection of this route. They were met by the Governor, the Governor's cabinet, by the speaker of the State house of representatives and the president of the State senate, all of whom told the visiting Senators that they wanted the canal constructed.

So when the two Senators from Florida, when three out of five Members of the House of Representatives from Florida, when the Governor, the Governor's cabinet, the legislature, the president of the State senate, and the speaker of the State house of representatives speak upon a subject that pertains to the internal condition of the State, I think Senators would be willing to take their utterances as not only in accord with their sentiments but as being consistent with their judgment as to what is for the best local interest of the State.

Mr. President, as I have said, the Chief of Engineers appointed a revisory board. Subsequent to the report of that revisory board the matter, in due course, came before the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. The chairman of that board was General Pillsbury, a very competent and able engineer of the United States Army. That board also made a comprehensive examination of the data which had been accumulated by the various agencies of the Government which had studied the subject. Eventually the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors made a report not recommending the construction of this project. If Senators merely heard that statement without any explanation, then they would believe that the inference, which is supported by some, that the board reported against the present project is true. But let me remind the Senate as to two or three points.

In the first place, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors recommended a project 400 feet wide as the minimum width in what we may call the dry-land cut of the canal and 600 feet wide in all other places. In other words, they recommended that about 30 miles, we will say, have a width of 400 feet and about 100 miles have a width of 600 feet. In addition to that, they recommended that the depth of the canal be 35 feet instead of 33 feet. Based upon those dimensions and based upon the fact that the Board of Engineers had before it only the figures of traffic transiting the Straits of Florida for the years up to 1935, they did make an unfavorable report upon the economic justification of the canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if the Senator could give us any information as to why the board of which he is now speaking took the position that the canal ought to be 400 feet wide in some places and 600 feet wide in other places? What was the reason given for those figures?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will answer the question in this way: The Chief of Engineers, who came a little later to review the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, agreed with the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors that the proper minimum width of the canal was 400 feet. The Board thought it should have that width, and the Chief of Engineers thought it should have that width, so as to afford any ships that would be passing in the canal adequate space in which to pass without any possible hazard of collision. But it was just a matter of opinion, related largely to the speed of vessels, I think, that caused the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to recommend that all other parts of the canal be 600 feet wide except the 400-foot width which the Chief of Engineers thought was sufficient.

If Senators will look at the map on the wall, they will see how the Florida ship canal in dimensions compares with the other principal canals of the world. For example, there is the Kiel Canal, which has a width of 144 feet only. The Panama Canal is only 300 feet wide. The Suez Canal is only 197 feet wide. The Chief of Engineers recommends that the Florida ship canal will certainly be wide enough if it is 400 feet wide, and so reports to Congress.

Why the Board of Engineers wanted to add 200 feet more for 100 miles I do not know, other than as a matter of general desirability they thought, perhaps, it would be better to have a canal 600 feet wide than one 400 feet wide. I cannot see, however, how anyone can quarrel with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers limiting the canal to a width 100 feet wider than the Panama Canal, and more than twice the width of any of the other principal canals of the world.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, the Florida canal would be much longer than the Panama Canal; there would be more frequent occasion for ships passing each other in that canal than there would be if it were much shorter; but, from what little study I have been able to give the subject, I cannot see any reason why in the particular place where the great amount of excavation must take place—about 28 miles—it is necessary to have such a wide canal. The extra width will very materially increase the cost. If other sections of the canal are so much wider, vessels could pass each other, if they should meet, in most of the canal without necessarily passing each other in this comparatively short stretch of the canal. I do not quite understand, therefore, why the engineers want to make it so wide.

Mr. PEPPER. I share the opinion of the able Senator from Nebraska as expressed. I will say to the Senator that the revisory board which studied the dimensions of the canal recommended a width of 250 feet in the dry land cut and approximately 400 feet only in the remainder of the channel. So that board supports General Markham, Chief of Engineers, in his finding.

In addition to that, every previous board which considered the question of the dimensions recommended a width of 250 to 400 feet. The P. W. A. engineering board recommended 250 to 400 feet; the board of survey, a special board of Army engineers, recommended 250 to 400 feet; the interdepartmental board, recommended 250 to 400 feet; and the revisory board and the Chief of Engineers recommended 400 feet. So the vast preponderance of engineering testimony says that 400 feet is certainly wide enough for the purposes of the canal.

In addition to that, I said that the Board of Engineers recommended a depth of 35 feet, whereas all the other agencies that studied the project said in substance, as the Chief of Engineers did, that a depth of 33 feet would carry 97 percent of all the ships that were shown by the actual records to go in and out of the Gulf of Mexico. Therefore, the cost of building the additional two feet would be so disproportionate to the commercial benefits which would ensue to the other 3 percent of traffic that it would not be economically justifiable to increase the depth to 35 feet.

So, then, we find that General Markham differed with the Board of Engineers as to depth and as to width, but General Markham left the canal 33 feet deep and a minimum of 400 feet wide all the way from the Atlantic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico, and then wider out in the ocean and in the Gulf.

The other significant distinction between the facts we now have before us and those which the Boards of Engineers had before them is the tonnage that was going through the Straits of Florida. Perhaps Senators already know that approximately one-third of all the commerce of the United States which moves from the Mississippi Valley to the Atlantic seaboard now moves through the Straits of Florida. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was absolutely correct when he said that that was the busiest waterway in the world. You may stand on the Keys of Florida, at one of the lighthouses, and look out over the Straits of Florida, and there will hardly be a moment when your eye will not take in from 20 to 24 ships upon the horizon. So the tonnage that is transiting the Straits of Florida is of the most vital importance to any calculation that may be made about the economic justification of the canal.

Let me reaffirm that no technical agency which has ever investigated a canal of the dimensions recommended by the Chief of Engineers with the traffic that is now going through the Straits of Florida has made an unfavorable report upon it. On the contrary, the criteria of economic justification laid down by every single board which has ever discussed or investigated this project show affirmatively its clear economic justification at this time.

Why do I say that?

In the reports of the Senate Commerce Committee, on page 97, you will find a table which shows that the P. W. A. board considering this matter had before it the 1932 tonnage transiting the Straits of Florida. The special board of engineers had the traffic transiting the Straits of Florida in 1931. The interdepartmental board which recommended the construction of the canal to the President, upon which recommendation the President authorized the allotment of $5,000,000, had before it only the 1931 tonnage. The revisory board appointed by General Markham had before it the 1935 traffic figures. So did the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and so did General Markham. General Markham estimated, in determining economic justification, that there would be from 1½ to 2 percent increase per year in the traffic transiting the Straits of Florida. General Pillsbury, chairman of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, said, in substance, "We are not authorized, as engineers, to speculate or to estimate about the probable increase in traffic in the future. We must make our report solely upon the facts as they are known to exist." He said, therefore, that although General Markham had a perfect right to do that if he chose to do so, and although in all probability General Markham was right, yet the Board of Engineers felt that they were restricted to the actual known figures, and, whatever might be their private beliefs as to traffic increase, they could not let those beliefs enter into their calculations of economic justification.

Therefore I desire to turn now to the testimony of General Pillsbury given before the House Rivers and Harbors Committee in 1937, set out in hearings before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, on H. R. 6150, at page 443. This is what General Pillsbury testified:

> General PILLSBURY. Now, on a great work of public improvement of that sort, the economic justification is not a matter of theoretical balance. It must rest with ripe judgment as to whether so large an expenditure is advisable on the part of the United States. Now, there is not the slightest doubt that this canal will afford a most useful route for navigation. It will shorten the time of passage of the very large traffic through the Gulf of Mexico by a day. It will carry a traffic twice that of the Panama Canal.

The figures now show traffic three times that of the Panama Canal; but General Pillsbury was testifying in 1937.

> The Panama Canal saves, I suppose, a month in steaming time between the Pacific and the Gulf coasts. The Florida Canal will save a day. If the traffic of the Gulf of Mexico should increase for 10 years at the same rate that it has increased for the last 5, there would not be the slightest question about the justification for the canal. But the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, in no case that I know of, has ever recommended a project on any other basis than the assured traffic immediately in sight.

Mr. President, I have before me the record of the increase in tonnage in the Straits of Florida beginning with the year 1920 and running down through the year 1937. General Pillsbury said that if the traffic transiting the Straits of Florida should increase for the next 10 years—by that he meant for the 10 years succeeding 1935, because the only figures that he knew then were the published figures of 1935—the canal clearly would be economically justified. Let us make a little calculation. The tonnage in 1931, the fifth year before 1935, was 70,324,000 tons. In 1935 it was 91,276,000 tons. The difference is 20,952,000 tons, but I will say in round numbers 20,000,000 tons increase from 1931 to 1935. That is the 5-year record General Pillsbury was talking about. That is 4,000,000 tons increase per year. General Pillsbury said, therefore, that if that 4,000,000-ton increase per year should keep up for 10 years, the canal would be clearly economically justified.

Let us see what has happened. In 1937 the tonnage was 138,249,000. The difference between 91,276,024 in 1935 and 138,249,000 tons in 1937 is 46,972,976 tons increase in 2 years. That means that there has been over 6,000,000 tons more increase in traffic in the Straits of Florida in 2 years than General Pillsbury said would be necessary in 10 years to make the canal clearly economically justifiable. So it now stands approved by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors as well as by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question, just for my own information?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. In speaking of that tonnage, is that the gross tonnage of the ship and cargo, or just the cargo tonnage?

Mr. PEPPER. That is the cargo tonnage.

Mr. President, where goes the argument of those who say the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors failed to approve this project, and would have General Markham held up to scorn for being alone in taking the responsibility of recommending this project to the Congress?

What has happened since 1937?

The 1937 tonnage is the last one upon which we have published reports; but the engineers clearly point out that, although the increase already in traffic in the Straits of Florida make the canal abundantly justified economically, anyone would reasonably anticipate that for at least decades to come there will be a steady additional increase in the tonnage that goes through the Straits of Florida, because there is a steady economic development in the area that is served by shipping that transits the Straits of Florida. Therefore economic justification for the canal grows greater year by year. General Pillsbury reaffirms the statement I quoted in many other places.

For example, on page 450 of the House hearings of 1937, one of the members of the committee said to General Pillsbury:

> Let us assume that the traffic will continue to increase as it has increased in the last 5 years. Then on the basis of the dimensions as reported by the Chief of Engineers, would you consider it economically justified?
> General PILLSBURY. Oh, absolutely.

And he goes on in several other instances to say that it would not only be justified upon the dimensions recommended by General Markham—that is to say, 400 feet minimum width all the way across the peninsula, and 33 feet depth—but he says it would be economically justified according to the dimensions that the Board of Engineers recommended; that is to say, 35 feet deep and 400 feet wide in the narrowest part, and 600 feet wide for the other 100 miles of the transit across the peninsula of the State of Florida.

If anyone in the Senate will vote for any project which is economically justified as determined by the engineers of the War Department, it seems to me he would vote favorably upon this project, which now comes before Congress like any other project recommended by the Army engineers.

I realize that in 1936, when this matter was before the Congress, the project had a different aspect. At that time Congress had no report from the engineers before it. But since that time the Board of Engineers has made its report and the Chief of Engineers has made his report and favorably recommended the canal. There has been a public hearing before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and twice the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors has favorably reported to the House of Representatives the bill providing for the construction of the canal as recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

The bill is now on the calendar in the House. There was a public hearing before the Senate Commerce Committee, and the report is before the Senate for consideration without at least any adverse recommendation of the committee which carried on the public hearing. So, while a Senator might have felt in 1936 that he could not afford to let down the bars and vote for a project, however meritorious it might be, which had not had a final examination and a final report from the Army engineers, that difficulty is now entirely eliminated, and the proposed canal stands before the Senate with the same dignity, the same virtue, and the same careful scrutiny, any river and harbor project will have which has now come or will hereafter come before the Senate.

Mr. President, we have established the fact, then, that the canal will save 1 day's time, that is to say, 23 or 24 hours in transit, on an average, across the peninsula of the State of Florida. We have also established that it will save 400 miles in distance to be traversed by the ships using it. We have also established that it will allow a saving to each vessel using it of from $750 to $850, as has been found by the various boards which have investigated the subject.

A canal which will save a day's time, which will save 400 miles in distance, which will save over $800 in money to a ship owner, which will afford the safest navigation afforded by any canal in the whole world, as testified to without contradiction before the House Rivers and Harbors Committee and the Senate Commerce Committee, and as reported by the engineers—I ask, will ship owners use a canal of that character?

I realize that it is confusing, and perhaps somewhat disturbing, to have Senators hear that the ship owners are not primarily advocating the construction of the canal. But I remind Senators of the business in which those people are engaged. They get money for transporting goods. When the distance through which they transport goods is reduced, the compensation they derive for their work is reduced. The oil companies perhaps have not made themselves altogether clear to Senators. In going 400 miles more they are using more of their own oil, and the shippers of the country are paying for it. It is not for the ship owners that we propose to build this cut-off across the State of Florida. It is not primarily for the ship owners that we propose any other river and harbor project, is it? It is for the shipping, the commerce of America, that we propose improvements to rivers and harbors of this country, and the shipowners are the mere incidents of the plan; they are the mere functionaries of commerce; when they reap direct benefits from waterway improvements, they have to pass those benefits on to shippers and the commerce affected.

Therefore I cannot see how it can be accepted as a criterion of the usefulness of the project that the shipowners have said they are not anxious to have the project created. Not a single shipowner has come before either the Senate Commerce Committee or the House Rivers and Harbors Committee and personally testified against the project. There is not a single engineering agency which has examined the project, and investigated it and reported upon it, which has not stated that ships will use it; and all the experience of mankind dictates that they will use it as soon as it is constructed. We are talking here about a project which is intended to benefit the commerce of America, the people who ship and the people who receive commodities.

The area embraced in the territory to benefit from this project represents over half of the area of this country, geographically and physically, and represents 74 percent of the whole population of the United States. If Senators within range of the map on the wall will look at the shaded area at which I am now pointing, they will see that the area on the left represents the part of the United States whose domestic shipping will profit by the construction of the canal. Look at the number of States, the North Atlantic and the Atlantic Seaboard States, and the whole Mississippi River Valley system, which are included clearly within the area of benefit to domestic commerce.

Then look at the map on the right, and there will be seen a vast shaded area, which is the area whose foreign commerce will directly profit from the construction of the canal. It demonstrates that every ship carrying cotton, and steel, and petroleum products, wool, grain, livestock, the metals and the minerals which come from the States of the far West, will have a day's less sailing and 400 miles less distance to make than they would be required to make if this project were not a reality.

Mr. President, this project is for the commerce of America. As a matter of fact, Florida is the minor beneficiary among the States of the Union from the construction of the project. Of course, we will profit by having the waterway traversing the State and by its construction giving employment to thousands of people. But it is being constructed by the Army engineers. They have to erect some big dredges, which will be constructed on the ground beside the canal route. Where are the steel and the iron and the various parts of the equipment which will make up that dredge coming from? They will not come from Florida, because we do not produce them. Where are the skilled mechanics and skilled labor to come from who will operate the machines used in the construction of the canal? Most of them will come from outside the State of Florida.

Mr. President, I do not think the American Federation of Labor would come before the Senate in behalf of any money-grabbing or boondoggling scheme, and they write thus to each one of the Senators in support of the canal:

> The United States Senate has before it for consideration S. 1100, a bill for the completion of the construction of the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal across Florida.
> All evidence submitted to both Houses of Congress by the President of the United States and the War and Navy Departments declare that the building of the canal is a commercial and military necessity. According to the evidence the project would safeguard, develop, and economize the commerce between the Mississippi Valley and Gulf States on the one hand and the States along the Atlantic seaboard on the other and serve as an important element in national defense by safeguarding the transportation of waterborne troops, munitions, and supplies in time of war.
> Furthermore, and very important, this project will come at a time when millions of workers are praying for employment. Because of this fact the executive council of the American Federation of Labor respectfully requests you as a Member of the United States Senate to give every support to the bill authorizing the completion of the canal.
>
> Very truly yours,
>
> WM. GREEN,
> President, American Federation of Labor.

So the American Federation of Labor is for the canal.

Mr. President, I do not believe the record of any Senator in support of measures in which the railway brotherhoods are interested is superior to mine. I know that last year in my race for the Senate I had the unqualified support of that very fine body of men. But I agree, Mr. President, with what General Markham said in his report:

> The cross-Florida canal project differs from many others in that there can be little doubt as to the tonnage it will carry. The traffic of the Gulf ports is not speculative; it exists, and doubtless will expand.

That is from page 4 of the House Document No. 194, containing the report of General Markham, Chief of Engineers.

The project is not a new one seeking additional business from the railroads which are now carrying it. Every pound of freight which has been considered by the engineers in determining the economic benefits of the project are actually now going through the Straits of Florida on ships. It is not being carried in railroad cars.

Mr. President, I have no desire to do our railroad friends detriment, but I believe that the construction of the canal will help them, because they must haul the construction equipment to the canal, they must haul the supplies down there to make the dredges, and to provide other machinery which will be necessary in the construction of the canal. So in multiple ways the railroads will profit by this great project rather than suffer detriment from it. Therefore I cannot but feel that the sentiment expressed by President William Green and the American Federation of Labor's executive council is a sound and a dependable sentiment upon this subject.

I realize that a great many Senators would say as perhaps the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] indicated, that the question of tonnage down there is speculative, and we do not know what may happen. We do know that there has been since 1920, when the tonnage was only 40,000,000 tons, an increase to 138,000,000 tons in 1937. We do know that one of the fastest developing regions in this country is the Gulf coast and the Mississippi Valley area. Instead of being stagnant it is growing every day. New industries are going there. New enterprises from the genius of men's discoveries are being built up. Take, for example, the paper industry. We now have five great pulp mills in my State alone. That is a new industry which did not exist there a little while ago.

So all the commerce of the Mississippi Valley is growing instead of diminishing, and the commerce of the Atlantic seaboard is growing, and our commerce with foreign countries in that area is growing. So we have an encouraging instead of a discouraging future ahead of us.

But it is said, "I grant perhaps that this would be a good thing. I grant that the tonnage is there." Ninety-one million tons a year, the Army engineers say, will actually go through that canal. That represents 66 percent of the tonnage which goes through the Straits of Florida. Nobody doubts that at least 66 percent of the total tonnage transiting the Straits of Florida would go through the Florida ship canal. So it is admitted that the tonnage is there, and that the canal would be a benefit to commerce, but it is said, "There is no economic justification for it."

Let us examine that question. What is meant by "economic justification"? We shall in all probability be called on during the present Congress to vote on a river and harbor bill. We have previously voted on other river and harbor bills. What did we mean by "economic justification" in those cases? We meant savings in transportation costs which are the equivalent of or in excess of the amount of the annual costs of the waterway improvement.

Let us now apply those standards to this project. The various boards and agencies which have considered the project have arrived at an average benefit approximately of 15 cents per ton to each ton of shipping using the canal. Some of them said 14.5 cents, some said 15.6 cents, some said 16.2 cents, and some said 18.4 cents. We will take, however, as an average 15 cents a ton as representing the conclusion of each examining board as to the benefit that commerce using the canal would derive from the construction of the canal. To get the economic benefits, therefore, all that has to be done is to multiply 91,212,000 tons by 15 cents a ton and the result will be approximately thirteen and one-half million dollars. The construction cost amounts to $198,000,000, according to the estimates of General Markham. Senators, General Markham did not sit here in a swivel chair and make these estimates. He went down to the canal route. He actually had this lime rock blasted and dynamited in his presence. He actually broke it up with his own hands. He actually cut it with his own knife. He did not examine just one place. He examined all that area in the vicinity of the canal route. So General Markham's rich, full experience and personal observation all went into the calculations and the estimates which he made as to the cost of excavating the canal. General Markham tells us that it will cost about $198,000,000.

General Markham estimated that for economic justification, as a rivers and harbors project, about $8,641,000 should be set up annually. That figure would represent three and a half percent interest on the cost of construction during time of construction, and it would represent 3 percent on the costs outstanding after the canal was opened. It would represent $913,000 annually operating expenses, and it would represent $177,000 a year as depreciation. That would not be depreciation of the canal, of course, because, as the Senator from Oklahoma said a short while ago, this cut is a permanent construction. But it would represent depreciation of the bridges, and of the signal towers along the sides of the canal, and other property of that sort. General Markham then says that the benefits necessary to be found annually to make the project economically justifiable would have to be only $8,641,000. Yet the benefits are over thirteen and a half million dollars a year, as shown by figures that no one possibly can dispute. Therefore if the Congress is going to be fair and pass other river and harbor projects which are recommended by the Board of Engineers on the basis of economic justification, they, to be fair, it seems to me, would be required likewise to approve this project, which meets conclusively the same criteria and the same standards..

For example, there was a river and harbor project on the Delaware River which has already been authorized and built. The ratio of cost to benefits in that project was 1 to 1.2.

There was the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal, the value of which to the State and to the country my able friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], who is here, can attest. That has a ratio of costs to benefits of 1 to 1.05.

Then there is the improvement to the upper Mississippi, the value of which I hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will later attest. The ratio of cost to benefits there is only even 1 to 1. That means that the economic benefits found by the engineers to exist are exactly the equivalent to the cost of construction and annual maintenance charges.

In 1937 we authorized the Calcasieu River, a Louisiana project. That has a justification of 1 to 1.1.

In 1938 we authorized the Delaware River—from Philadelphia to the sea—river and harbor project. The economic justification there is 1 to 1.4.

Then we have pending in the existing river and harbor bill which is now in the House, the Warrior and Tombigbee project. There the ratio of cost to economic benefit is 1 to 1.2.

We have in that same bill the Louisiana and Texas intercoastal project. The economic benefits are 1 to 1.3.

Then in the Columbia River Umatilla Dam project the ration of cost to economic benefit is 1 to 1.

The Wrangell Narrows, Alaska, project. The cost to economic justification there is 1 to 1.1.

The ratio of cost to benefits in the case of the Florida canal is 1 to 1.63, which is a larger economic justification than any one of the foregoing projects can show. Yet no one is making a fight on them. No one is saying that they are boondoggling. No one is saying that they are trying to loot the Treasury and get some ill-gotten gain from it. No one holds those projects up to ridicule and scorn as unsound, uneconomical, and unsupported by evidence.

Why pick out the Florida ship canal as the victim of such an intensive campaign and to be made a political football of this sort?

Mr. President, with respect to economic justification, therefore, the benefits are at least thirteen and one-half million dollars a year, and the amortization, operation, and depreciation costs are not in excess of eight and one-half million dollars a year. So there is a surplus of approximately five to six million dollars in benefits annually over required cost each year.

What about the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE], joined in by the Senator from New York and the Senator from Missouri? That amendment proposes a toll structure to be set up by the President before the completion of the canal, the toll structure to yield a sum which in 50 years would return to the Government its expenditure for capital construction cost. The amendment quite properly contemplates that the toll structure shall be distributed over the commerce which will receive the benefit of the canal during the 50-year period. That toll structure would be the toll structure which the canal would have to meet unless the Congress should change the amount by subsequent legislation. So fixing a toll structure is not left to the discretion of the President. It is made mandatory upon the President.

Can there be a toll structure adequate to amortize the capital construction cost? It was intimated that there had been no reports which gave any predicate to justify such a toll structure. Such statements are not based upon familiarity with the record. On the contrary, the interdepartmental board which was called upon to make a study of the question reported that the commerce transiting the canal would bear a toll of 8 cents per ton. All it is necessary to do, therefore, to arrive at the amount of the yield per year from the commerce which uses the canal is to figure the number of tons at 8 cents a ton. However, if we anticipate—as General Markham did, and was justified in doing—that there will be a 2-percent increase per year, then over a 50-year period we shall have a 100-percent increase in the tonnage that will go through the canal. The annual tonnage is now 91,000,000 tons. A 100-percent increase the last year of that period would produce 182,000,000 tons which would transit the canal. If we got the average tonnage per year and applied to that tonnage tolls of even as little as 3½ cents per ton, without any question whatsoever we should get back the $200,000,000 over a 50-year period. In fact, the existing tonnage which would transit the canal would at a toll rate of about 5 cents per ton pay back the annual operating charges of $913,000, the annual depreciation of $177,000, and $4,000,000 per year on the capital construction costs, which would return the entire capital cost in 50 years. Therefore, based upon a toll structure, the project is clearly and unquestionably self-liquidating.

Are we in favor of self-liquidating projects? We have been approving them by the hundreds of millions of dollars. I think most Senators feel a preference for self-liquidating projects over projects which are a dead expenditure to the Government. Florida is only one State and accounts for only a small part of the commerce which will be affected by a toll structure. Therefore we do not have the right to speak for the United States as to whether or not there should be a toll structure. However, we do say that insofar as we are concerned we have no objection to it; and we say that the economic factors unquestionably determine that the project is and will be a self-liquidating project. So in the matter of the return of the capital construction cost we are merely putting this project in the same category with any other P. W. A. project upon which the Government has been accustomed heretofore to waive payment of interest if it received back the capital cost of construction. Either upon based economic justification as a river and harbor project or upon economic factors which would make it self-liquidating, the canal comes before the Congress approved and entitled to the favorable support of Members of Congress.

Mr. President, I do not intend to delay the Senate with a further discussion of the project at this time. There have been other large Federal P. W. A. projects before this one. For example, the Boulder Dam, when completed, will cost $76,500,000. That project has not been called a boondoggling project or an effort to loot the Treasury of funds. It has turned out to be, as its proponents anticipated, a great asset to the country.

The Fort Peck Dam is to cost $122,500,000. That also is a big project; but size alone was not used as an excuse to try to defeat the project on the floor of the Senate. The Missouri-Mississippi improvement, which has to do with channel stabilization, will cost $92,000,000; and yet nobody has pointed out that the size of the project alone made it one that the Congress should not attempt.

There were many other projects that were relatively of the same proportions. So the size of the project is not enough to justify any different treatment for this project from that received by other projects which have come before the Congress for consideration.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] referred to the fact that a blank check was proposed to be given to the Federal Government. On the contrary, the bill recommends the construction of the project upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. His report has in it clearly adequate and sufficient data to give us advice as to the approximate cost of the whole project when completed. So, as recommended, it is not a blank check.

The Senator from Michigan referred to the recent statement by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that now is the time to retrench. Not very long ago the Senator from Mississippi said:

> The Florida canal is a great conception. It will mean much to the southern section of this country. I supported it when it was before the Senate before. I know of nothing that has happened to change my support of this great project.

That was an utterance made within the last few months by the able Senator from Mississippi.

I know that other Senators are interested in economy and do not want to inflict extravagance or profligacy upon the taxpayers of the country. I have never quarreled with anyone who entertains that view about projects which can fairly be called boondoggling projects. I have never intended to advocate on the floor of the Senate projects which were not economically sound and justified. However, Mr. President, a project which will save the shippers of the country thirteen and one-half million dollars a year, and which will cost them only eight and one-half milion dollars a year, is not extravagance or profligacy. A project which will pay back to the Government its cost is not extravagance or profligacy. So, Mr. President, the project is in line with sound economy.

The Seaboard Air Line Railroad is now in receivership, and yet this railroad bought some air-conditioned cars and some new Diesel locomotives and generally improved its equipment. Why? Because the expenditure gave assurances of a good economic return. Even the court appointing the receiver sanctioned these expenditures based upon the rewards they promised to bring. If a court would approve such a policy for a railroad in receivership, and if a businessman would approve it with respect to his own business, why is it not sound economics for the Government of the United States?

We therefore make no apology for coming before the Congress and asking for the approval of this project. Any Senator who believes in economy can better serve that objective by voting for the bill than by voting against it.

Mr. President, the canal is a project which is sound and economically justified; a project approved by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, and now upon the calendar of the House of Representatives; a project approved by the Chief of Engineers, who is the delegated agent of the Congress to pass upon such matters; a project justified by the economic criteria which are applied to every rivers and harbors project that comes before the Congress; a project approved by the Commerce Department of the United States, which has made a detailed investigation of the subject; a project approved by the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, a civil agency, nonofficial in character, representative of every State in the Union, and which regularly makes a fair and careful examination of the rivers and harbors projects which are brought to its attention; a project approved by the Mississippi Valley Flood Control Association and by the Mississippi Valley Association, which is interested in sound river and harbor projects the country over; a project which is favorably recommended by the Navy Department of the United States because of its value to the national defense; a project which is recommended by the President of the United States, who has been a consistent advocate of it and has recently by a letter addressed directly to the chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee and the Senate Commerce Committee requested renewed attention to it by the Congress. It is a project, Mr. President, that is approved by every agency which has removed prejudice, preference, and extraneous influences from its judgment and passed upon it strictly according to the merits of the enterprise. So for such a project, Mr. President, I am glad to be an humble spokesman, for I know, as the Senator from Michigan said, sometimes the waves along the shore say, "Dreamer, dream no more"; but men will not quit dreaming who have dreams worth while.

Thomas Jefferson dreamed of the Great Mississippi Valley; John Quincy Adams said, "This great and worthy national project"; Andrew Jackson recommended it and submitted the report of engineers examining it to the Congress. Down through the years various Congresses have from time to time devoted their attention to it and authorized surveys of it. Finally now it comes here for consideration by the Senate with a record for careful investigation and examination which I will challenge any other project which the Congress has ever approved even to approximate.

So, Mr. President, I, too, am willing to submit the approval of this project to the fair-mindedness, to the sound judgment, to the good sense, and to the patriotism of the Members of the United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, unless some other Senator desires the floor to speak this afternoon, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think it is desired that the bill go over until tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Then, I do not desire to make the point of no quorum, as I understand the Senator from Kentucky desires to move a recess.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I intend to do it in a moment.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 16, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art our Father and our God, as we lift our prayer to Thee, hush our spirits into peace. In the plenitude of Thy love, each of us has received the blessing of land and sea, of sunlight and starlight. They have crowned us as though we were Thy only earthly children. We praise Thee that hast mercies for the poorest and humblest. As we look skyward may we remember the Bethels where Thou hast tarried to forgive and bless. For our sins we ask the mercy of the cross and for our lives the benediction of Thy love and care. We pray Thee, our Father, to walk with us toward our Emmaus; make Thyself known to us and reveal the unsearchable riches of the soul. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of a letter from the burgesses and commissioners of Williamsport, Md.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

GUARANTEED RATE OF INTEREST UNDER THE FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, when the House had under consideration amendments to the Federal Housing Act I offered an amendment to reduce the rate of interest on guaranteed title II loans to 3½ percent. As nearly as I can recall, I got four votes for the amendment.

I was quite encouraged this morning, on going over to the hearings before the Temporary National Economic Committee, to hear and read the statement of Prof. Alvin H. Hansen, of Harvard University, given to that committee, in which he lists four steps which he thinks should be taken in the interest of recovery. The third of those steps is this:

> The time has come when we could well reduce the guaranteed rate of interest allowed under the Federal Housing Administration. Considering the current surplus of funds seeking investment, the present rate is abnormally high, and is certainly a deterrent to private building.

I would just like to get this in the RECORD.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short quotation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ARGENTINE BEEF

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Arthur Krock has a very interesting article in the New York Times this morning on Argentine beef. It shows the farmer and stock raiser are not affected. We heard a lot of "bull" yesterday, and I would like to put his view of the "bull" in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we would like to know from the gentleman whether he favors the purchasing of Argentine beef over American beef.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from Missouri helped to put over a law to the effect that you had to buy American-made goods in the construction of public buildings. Why do we not put over a law that will require the purchasing of American-made goods for your naval vessels, and so forth?

Mr. RICH. We would do that if we were in power, but your party is in power over on that side, and it is your duty to protect the American market.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman that until the Congress passes some legislation and those processing beef in this country show some indication that they are going to can beef and offer beef, and good beef, to the Government at a reasonable price, the Government has a right to go into the market, and you cannot stop them. Read Mr. Krock's article on the subject.

Mr. RICH. How are you going to maintain our high standard of living in that way?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, certainly I am not opposed to free speech, nor to free press, but personally, as a southern national Representative, I resent certain news items. I especially call attention to the fact that 3 or 4 weeks ago we saw headlines to the effect of W. P. A. against the farmers and the farmers against the W. P. A., and I notice in today's Washington Post a certain news item to the effect of the farm bloc against the wage and hour law or the wage and hour against the farm bloc. Personally I supported the wage and hour bill, and I proposed yesterday to vote for a rule to bring H. R. 5435 up for consideration in this House. I do not think it is fair at this time that an effort should be made to prevent one-third of the people from receiving recognition from this great Congress in the way of farm legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the Grange News entitled "The Real Farm Problem."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include a discussion of topics of interest today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
